On Tuesday, June 8th, began the portentous convention, the while the NAMPI met separately. EXHIBITOR'S HERALD opened its summarizing account of the proceedings: "Defeated at every turn, the embryonic octopus of the motion picture industry—the Famous Players Corporation—dragged itself from the exhibitors' convention . . . a badly beaten factor, more than 700 exhibitors from every state in the Union having registered their determination to conquer the menace.

"Adolph Zukor, head of the producing-exhibiting combine, personally jumped into the breach early in the convention and began what proved to be a hopeless fight to stem the tide of sentiment against Famous Players. . . ."

Marcus Loew, with $2,000, and J. H. Kunsky, with $500, were among the first contributors to a "war chest."

Officers elected were: Sydney S. Cohen, president; C. C. Griffin, first vice-president; Joseph Hopp, Willard C. Patterson, and C. W. Gates, also vice-presidents; Sam Bullock, executive secretary; Morton M. Van Praag, financial secretary, and E. T. Peters, treasurer.

upon producer control, a movement to settle the grievances between Mr. Zukor and the MPTOA was begun when Mr. Cohen, reelected president, was empowered to name a committee to confer with Famous Players.

While these cross-currents were flowing a committee on ways and means, headed by E. M. Fay, was placing before the convention a proposal that the exhibitors enter the field of distribution with a corporation capitalized at $15,000,000, and the suggestion was adopted. Mr. Cohen reported that several independent interests had offered their cooperation, and named Thomas H. Ince, Lewis J. Selznick, W. W. Hodkinson, Benjamin B. Hampton and the Federated Film Exchanges of America. That was that.

Out of the drag-'em-out fight of a 1922 convention emerged the following officers: Mr. Cohen, president; Glenn Harper, vice-president; Mr. Mogler and Mr. Lick, reelected vice-president; Joseph Rhode, fourth vice-president; Mr. Van Praag, again recording secretary, and John T. Collins, treasurer.

"An impartial observer of the so-called national exhibitor's convention, held in Chicago last week would have to be exceedingly dumb if he did not come away from the proceedings with a feeling of overwhelming disgust," wrote Martin Quigley of the gathering in 1923 at the Sherman Hotel.

"Backed by the inside group that have been 'sold' on the fruitful possibilities of allegiance to Cohen, he had made one valuable and important exhibitor-leader after another walk the plank—Charles L. O'Reilly, Sam Berman, James J. Walker, Theodore Hayes, Al Steffes, James C. Ritter, Willard Patterson and others."

The Henry Ford Joke, Seeking Screen Control

An unsupported tale in a vaudeville publication to the effect that Henry Ford was backing James C. Ritter of Michigan for the MPTOA presidency in order that Mr. Ford might gain control of the screen, a canard which was greeted only as a humorless joke by the exhibitors, was made campaign fodder by Mr. Cohen from the convention platform and was bandied about in the public press.

A uniform film contract was rejected at Chicago. W. D. Burford of Illinois reported on negotiations with Will H. Hays, and said that a series of meetings had failed to bring agreement.

One of the speakers at the convention was Rudolph Valentino.

A turning point in the efforts to shape a working organization of exhibitors came with the Boston convention of 1924. While the administration of affairs was placed in the hands of men who had been closest to Mr. Cohen during his four years of presidency, Mr. Cohen did at last step out of office.

Michael J. O'Toole became president, after having served as director of the department of public service. R. F. (Pete) Woodhull was elected chairman of the board.

The squabbles of several earlier annual meetings had by now brought into the picture a new organization, Allied States Association of Motion Picture Exhibitors, whose call to arms had been the complaint that the MPTOA did not represent the independent theatre owner.

But at Milwaukee, in 1925, Allied States agreed to return to the fold, not, however, without a threat of withdrawal unless given acceptable representation on the board.

Mr. Woodhull then became president of the MPTOA, with Sydney Cohen retaining the chairmanship of the directors. Louis M. Sagal continued as treasurer.

For the first time, at the Los Angeles convention in 1926, the presidency was awarded to an individual not of the New York "persuasion." Eli Whitney Collins, owner of the Grand theatre at Jonesboro, Arkansas.

Al Steffes placed an extra long handle on the olive branch he had extended at Milwaukee and announced that Allied was being disbanded. Jack Miller of Chicago suggested a tombstone be erected on the Ambassador Hotel lawn.

Joseph M. Seider, who had been chosen as business manager on the recommendation of the Milwaukee convention, was retained in office.

The history of seven years of national organizational activity, real or attempted, was summed up in a decision of the MPTOA convention of 1927, at Columbus, Ohio. When the exhibitors voted to admit to membership producer-owned theatres they both acknowledged and overcame a losing fight to finance organization entirely through independent owners.

One direction in particular in which the exhibitors saw future benefits for themselves through the alliance with producers was in combatting inimical legislation.

Besides the return of Mr. Woodhull to the presidency and Mr. Sagal to the treasurership, the exhibitors chose M. J. O'Toole to be secretary and A. Julian Brylawski as chairman of the board.

Before the next convention of the MPTOA at Toronto in October, 1928, leaders determined to revive Allied.

Circuit Infiltration Comes to the MPTOA

Greater participation of the large circuits in the affairs of the MPTOA was noted, and among the newly elected directors were Colvin Brown, then executive vice-president of Pathe Exchange, and of Keith-Albee-Orpheum; Harold B. Franklin, then president of Fox West Coast Theatres; Harry M. Crandall of Stanley-Crandall Theatres, and Sam Dembow of Publix. Harry Marx of Publix was a vice-president-elect, with J. C. Brady, R. R. Biechele, Charles C. Picquet, and M. A. Lightman. Jay Emanuel was chosen treasurer. Mr. O'Toole continued as secretary. Pete Woodhull was reelected president.

The stormy days of MPTOA conventions were over, but new problems had arisen. The new sound film was the theme of practically all addresses and actions at the Memphis convention in the fall of 1929.

Mr. Woodhull, who had become an executive of Lee Deforest Corporation, presided when M. A. Lightman, president-elect, took office. Vice-presidents included Frank C. Walker, Willard C. Patterson, and Mr. Picquet and Mr. Biechele, reelected, as were the secretary and treasurer.

The twelfth annual convention, held at Washington in March, 1932, adopted as its keynote the words of Mr. Lightman, reelected president, that "we gain more by laying bricks than by throwing them."

The convention reelected Secretary O'Toole and Treasurer Jay Emanuel.

In May, 1933, Mr. Lightman resigned, and in a mail election, Edward Kuykendall, president of Tri-States Motion Picture Theatre Owners, was chosen to succeed him. Mr. Kuykendall has continued ever since in the presidency.

Decency in motion pictures was a first word in addresses before the annual meeting in April, 1934, in Los Angeles.

M. E. Comerford was elected first vice-president, W. S. Butterfield, M. A. Lightman, Ben Berinstein, A. Julian Brylawski, also vice-presidents; Walter Vincent was named treasurer, Fred S. Meyer continued as secretary, and Fred Wehrenberg was reelected chairman of the board.

All grievances and intra-organization differences were forgotten in favor of a united complaint against the government's NRA—Blue Eagle Motion Picture Code at the New Orleans convention in March, 1935. "Let's give the industry back to the Indians we worked with in Washington," said Jack Miller, referring to government code drafters.

When the directors of the organization met in March, 1936, at the Miami Biltmore hotel in lieu of a general convention, the entire official personnel was retained.

All officers were reelected with the exception

THE following members of the 16mm. non-theatrical field extend to Martin Quigley felicitations on his 25th anniversary.

Through the use of sub-standard films—the newest distribution development of the motion picture industry—which serves schools, churches, clubs and other non-theatrical situations, an increasingly large section of the public is being reached which does not habitually attend motion picture theatres, helping thereby to extend audiences among those thirty millions that a recent widely accepted poll says can afford to, but do not, patronize the theatre.

It is our earnest intent to continue to work in a manner which is cooperative and non-competitive with the theatrical exhibitor. We further believe that through our presentation of selected motion pictures we are fostering and creating an appreciation for the outstanding achievements of the screen.

of the addition of E. C. Beatty and Mitchell Wolfson, vice-presidents to fill the places vacated by W. C. Butterfield and Ben Berinstein.

Since then the Kuykendall "regime" has continued in the MPTOA saddle, concerning itself mostly with the business of concessions from distributors for exhibitors.

Allied States Association was born on the convention floor of the now competitive parent, the MPTOA, on Wednesday, May 23, 1923, in Chicago.

A group of MPTOA leaders had formed a "clique" to elect as president James C. Ritter of Michigan, to overthrow the long rule of Sydney Cohen. In that group were H. A. Cole, Texas; Fred Herrington, Missouri, and William Alvin Steffes of Minneapolis, who was already well known in exhibition organization as "Fighting Al" from the Northwest. However, they were out-maneuvered and Cohen was returned for his fourth consecutive term. Steffes and Ritter bolted, taking with them their respective state units of Minnesota and Michigan.

The fireworks did not start until some days later, when on arriving home in Minneapolis, Mr. Steffes said: "Personally, I absolutely refuse to associate myself with an organization headed by 'double-crossers.'"

The days were starting to shorten for single unanimity in exhibitor organization as represented up to that time in the MPTOA and by the summer of 1923 the issue appeared to be: For or against Sydney S. Cohen as president of the MPTOA. Many felt that if Sydney Cohen had come forward then with an offer to step out of control of the MPTOA, harmony would have been achieved within 24 hours. But Mr. Cohen declined to withdraw. Michigan and Minnesota returned their charters, North Carolina withdrew, headed by H. B. Varner, and Illinois set about to sever relations.

"Strange Coincidence" Paves Way to Allied

In October, 1923, a "strange coincidence" found leaders of Minnesota, Michigan, Illinois, Wisconsin and Indiana, supposedly acting independently of each other, sending out "feelers" for a conference in the midwest to form a "new theatre owners' league."

At about the same time, a second move was made in Washington to establish "a national cooperative exhibitor organization, free from all internal politics." Attending that meeting were the MPTOs of Virginia and the District of Columbia, led by Harry Crandall and Jake Wells.

The Jake Wells-Harry Crandall plan for an independent national exhibitor association finally took root in the winter of 1923, representing the forerunner of the present national Allied. It was called the Motion Picture Exhibitors' Alliance.

Within a week, Mr. Wells was found among those present at French Lick, Ind., when Al Steffes and leaders held "the largest meeting ever staged in organized exhibition" since the formation of the MPTOA. Mr. Steffes and Mr. Ritter also succeeded in taking to French Lick such chiefs as Joseph Denniston, Michigan; Ludwig Seigel, Illinois; H. A. Cole, Texas; H. B. Varner, North Carolina; Harry Crandall, District of Columbia; R. G. Liggett, Kansas; Gus Schmidt, Indiana, and S. A. Handy, Kansas.

Without waiting for the MPTOA 1924 summer Boston convention, at which, Mr. Cohen promised, his resignation would be forthcoming, for harmony, the Steffes-Richey and Wells-Crandall groups met in April, in Chicago, at the Congress Hotel, and formally established Allied State Organizations of Motion Picture Theatre Owners, slated to be changed to Allied States Association of Motion Picture Exhibitors.

Al Steffes was the first person to hold office in Allied. He was elected at the Chicago conference to serve as a 60-day-chairman. Henderson M. Richey, business manager of Michigan,

Mr. Martin Quigley

Dear Mr. Quigley:

On the occasion of your Silver Jubilee, this company, pioneer in hour-by-hour news service to theatres, bids for the honor of being the youngest organization to join in the tribute that is being paid to the dean of motion picture trade paper publishers, and for the privilege of taking a leaf from the book by which you have lived.

As we prepare to begin this unique service of spot news to the theatres of America, we find inspiration and encouragement in the record of your achievements. For it is your own cardinal policy of unwavering service to the screen's welfare and progress by which we hope to guide our own career.

Theatre Communications believes it brings to the theatre the means of making a new and forceful bid to get out the stay-at-homes. Our exclusive Transradio Press news, edited especially for use on the screen, and transmitted directly at frequent intervals by Bell Telephone teletypewriters, will give exhibitors the first direct way of meeting the box-office challenge of radio's up-to-the-minute news. The news hungry public may now see a picture show and get the latest news, too.

In your quarter-century of service you have watched and encouraged many innovations that have helped to carry the film industry forward step by step. Here, we believe, is another such promising innovation, providing..... on the screen.....a sorely needed box-office stimulus. And just as we contribute real support to the theatre business, so will we record our progress in our first twenty-five years, as you have done in yours.

Sincerely,

President,

was elected national Allied secretary. Voting their affiliation were H. A. Cole, president, MPTO of Texas; R. R. Biechele, president MPTO of Kansas; James C. Ritter, pastpresident, Michigan; Joseph Denniston, president, Michigan; William (Billy) Connors and Frank J. Rembusch, Indiana; Ludwig Siegel and Glenn Reynolds, Illinois; H. B. Varner, North Carolina, besides Mr. Steffes, Mr. Wells and Mr. Crandall. The first "activity" of Allied on record was instigated at the first meeting in Chicago, for unified action on repeal of the federal admission tax.

Even then attempts continued to reunite the two conflicting national groups, Charles L. O'Reilly, president of the New York Theatre Owners Chamber of Commerce proving a leading spirit in the move. Colonel Cole, himself one of the Allied "insurgents," made a similar attempt. So did Eli Whitney Collins of Arkansas. All the while insiders of the MPTOA were naming "peacemakers" as likely candidates to succeed Sydney Cohen as MPTOA president, thus removing the insurgents' objection. Some of the early candidates advanced in this connection were Mike Commerford, R. F. (Pete) Woodhull, among others. A Commerford man, Mike O'Toole, got the post, however, when the MPTOA met in Boston that May. But, even then, peace was not made.

On May 15, 1924, the first Allied-tinged attack on major distributor "aggressions," so-called, came from the direction of Allied chief Steffes, in Minneapolis, who hit at "excessive" film rentals charged by distributors.

And in June of the same year Allied and MPTOA first locked horns in public when they both took credit for obtaining relief from the federal admission tax. Similar conflicting claims of credit for securing national exhibitor benefits have been heard down through the years ever since.

At about the same time, Allied elected its first board of directors, comprising Mr. Steffes, as chairman, and A. A. Kaplan, Minnesota; H. A. Cole, Texas; H. B. Varner, North Carolina; Claude E. Cady, Michigan, and H. M. Richley, Michigan, as secretary.

National Allied leaders in attendance at North Carolina, June 11, 1924, reelected Al Steffes to continue as chairman of the national board. Allied still had no president as such.

Mr. Steffes at that time estimated that $250,000 annually was necessary to run a successful national exhibitor organization.

Allied grew, winning over some 15 states by the end of 1924, when Mr. Steffes envisioned the disbandment both of Allied and MPTOA and the formation of an exhibitor organization patterned after the federal government. This idea died aborning.

The Hotel Kansas, in Topeka, Kan., witnessed the first annual convention of national Allied, on September 22 and 23, 1924. Mr. Steffes was unanimously elected board chairman.

New blood was then noticeable in Allied. S. W. Neall was on hand from Indiana, Jack Miller from Chicago, Charles Nathan, from Illinois, among others. Mr. Biechele was voted to serve as Allied's first emissary to the distributors to talk over Allied's demands for a "new deal." He was appointed to meet with Will Hays on the subject of a uniform contract. They never met.

On January 27, 1925, another sign pointed to present-day Allied attitudes on trade problems, when Allied in Michigan launched what was later to develop into a national Allied campaign against so-called "compulsory" block booking and blind buying.

The first realignment of Allied with the MPTOA, shortlived as it was, came unexpectedly when Mr. Steffes led a delegation of Alliedites into an MPTOA convention hall in Milwaukee, May 13, 1925. All were in agreement, along with some independent distributors, on a "war to the finish" against major circuits and affiliated distributors. Some $400,000 was pledged as a "war chest." Carl Laemmle led the distributors.

Then MPTOA, still under Sydney Cohen's behind-the-scenes domination, put in a new directorate with but scant recognition to Allied, giving the Steffes unit only two places on the board. Before the convention was over the new union split, and the two never completely buried the hatchet.

That Uniform Contract Which Never Developed

Believing that a "uniform contract" between distributors and exhibitors would pave the way for an eventual solution of mutual problems, bringing an end to some of the causes of exhibitor complaints against distributor tactics, Will H. Hays, representing the MPPDA, together with a joint MPTOA and Allied board, in February, 1926, decided on a standard contract form for use throughout the entire industry. Allied and the MPTOA again were feeling kindly toward each other. They met together again and again with Mr. Hays to make readjustments in the contract, but in June, at the Los Angeles convention of the MPTOA, this harmony was again shattered, and the uniform contract lost. But someone patched up that difference, too, only after it was determined "positively" that Sydney Cohen would no longer appear in MPTOA affairs.

Through the rest of 1926, Allied States as such was dormant.

Then, at about the time the industry was awakening to the arrival of sound, the Federal Trade Commission watching the many trust suits and the chaos on trade practices, called on all factions in the business to meet in the Bar Association Building, in New York, in October, 1927, to formulate trade rules for the industry's guidance. Out of that conference, attended by virtually every leader in production, distribution, exhibition and corporate management, came a trade practice program of a sort—on paper. None was ever effected.

Presiding at that meeting, for the government, was Federal Trade Commissioner Abram Fern Myers. A story heard on Broadway at that time concerned an offer received by Mr. Myers from Allied.

Fourteen months later, in December, 1928, a brand new Allied States Association emerged from the Congress Hotel, in Chicago, and announced that former-Federal Trade Commissioner Abram Myers had, effective Monday, December 17, 1928, taken over the reins of the resurrected Allied, as president and general counsel, at a salary never disclosed.

The following subscribed to Allied's first real platform at that Congress Hotel meeting in 1928: W. A. Steffes, representing Minnesota, North and South Dakota; Henderson M. Richey and James C. Ritter, Michigan; Colonel H. A. Cole, Texas, and some "new blood" in Allied: Herman Blum, of Maryland; E. P. Smith, Iowa; B. D. Cockrill, Indiana, and Charles Casanave. The eight state affiliates were soon joined by New Jersey, Ohio and Wisconsin.

Allied Tackles the Circuit "Aggressions"

The new Allied actually started functioning in Washington on January 2, 1929.

Through 1930 and the longest part of 1931, Allied, feeling its way, studied varied assortment of private plans for extending its power through championing independent exhibitor problems of the day. Labeled at its outset as "militant" against so-called "aggressions" of major distributor-circuits, all possibilities of any circuit membership were discouraged and before the new organization was operating two years, it became the self-styled "defender" of "the little independent."

Efforts of responsible industry leaders to effect a trade practice program in 1930 and 1931 through the socalled "555" conference between MPTOA, Allied and distributor leaders were fruitless, and along about the beginning of 1932, Allied started to think of federal and state legislation to force industry regulation.

In 1930, Mr. Myers credited Allied members with helping, by testimony to bring about the death of compulsory arbitration, ruled illegal in the Julge Thatcher Supreme Court decision, and also outlawing the credit-rating committee of the Flm Boards of Trade, thereby marking the beginning of the end of the Film Boards' usefulness to the MPPDA.

First annual convention of the new Allied was held in Chicago, February 10 and 11, 1931. Some 450 delegates pledged $100,000 to carry on the fight against "unfair and discriminatory" tactics of distributors. For the first time Allied chieftains suggested carrying their case to the public and the courts. Petitions for prosecution by the Department of Justice and other governmental agencies were heard—unusual procedure for organized exhibition at that time.

Out of that convention emerged: (1) a campaign to be brought to the public to show that independent exhibitors are forced to show "salacious" and "unfit" pictures through block booking; (2) first Allied endorsement of the Brookhart anti-block booking bill; (3) endorsement of amendments to the U. S. copyright laws and (4) endorsement of a plan, preferred by Oscar Hanson, for issuing an ambitious newsreel containing a limited amount of advertising through Kinograms.

Before the year was over, Mr. Myers announced that the Kinograms reel would be suspended after three months.

Mr. Myers, in 1931, gave up the presidency, because the duties conflicted with his post as general counsel, and instead accepted the board chairmanship. Al Steffes took over the presidency, on January 2, 1932. On that date the board also created the post of paid business manager, naming Michigan's H. M. Richey.

Sidney Samuelson of New Jersey, later to become national Allied president, entered the fold in January, 1932, in the post of vice-president. James C. Ritter, Detroit, was Allied's second president.

The first formal anti-MPPDA mentioned by Allied came from Al Steffes when he told a Nebraska state gathering, in January, 1932, that "a national campaign will be directed against the Hays group."

The forcing of distributor divorcement of theatre holdings was also first heard at that Nebraska convention, finally bringing, in recent years, a series of Allied-sponsored proposals to force distributors to abandon circuit operation.

By unanimous vote, "New" Allied, in second annual convention assembled at the Hotel Statler in Detroit on Wednesday, March 9, 1932, actually set about a program of reforms and modifications of trade practices, by national legislative action. Senator Smith Wildman Brookhart became the banner bearer.

That very week the competitive MPTOA, in convention at Washington, voted to effect industry "reforms" by and within the industry.

And there both organizations have followed clearly-defined lines down through the years to the present day, Allied "sponsoring" the anti-block booking, anti-blind buying bills both of Senator Brookhart and Neely-Pettingill collaboration; aiding the late Dr. William Harrison Short in his Motion Picture Research Council "reform program"; flooding the Department of Justice offices with complaints charging distributors with anti-trust law violations; sponsoring bills in state legislatures aimed at the so-called distributor-circuit "aggressions," etc.

Sidney Samuelson, New Jerseyite, rode to the presidency of Allied, succeeding Jim Ritter, on February 1, 1934, at a board meeting in New York.

Allied's first public appearance in the halls of Congress came in March, 1934, when the organization, headed by Mr. Meyers, filed a brief urging Congress to enact Representative Wright Patman's bill to abolish block booking.

Sidney Samuelson was reelected president at a 1935 directors' meeting at Washington.

First mention of "boycott" of major interests in Allied campaign was heard in April, 1935, when Abraham Myers addressing the Northwest unit, urged a "boycott" of distributors for exhibition invasions.

Allied's 1935 convention, held in Atlanta, May 20th to 23rd, brought Al Steffes out of virtual retirement. His observation that distributor tactics were crowding independents out of business caused the convention to send a committee to Will Hays and the "powers that be" demanding an end to distributors' "aggres-

Nathan Yamins was elected president in 1936, again in 1937, and, as part of his platform, continued to push Allied's state legislative campaign for theatre divorcement by distributor circuits.

In 1938, Colonel Cole of Texas succeeded Mr. Yamins, giving fresh impetus to the National Allied platform: "correction of industry ills by regulation," a platform which in recent years has brought about three of the most significant developments in exhibitor-distributor relations in motion picture history: (1) filing of the "key" anti-trust suit by the United States Government versus the "Big Eight," in July, 1938; (2) advancement in Congress of legislation to outlaw blind and block selling (passing the Senate in 1939 and in 1940, but stymied in the House of Representatives both times); and, (3) being a combination of No. 1 and No. 2, to give to the so-called "organized industry" a strong realization, now admitted by the majors in the "tentative" draft of their consent decree settlement of the trust suit, that changes are to be the order of the day in operations.

Meanwhile, the MPTOA, through the expressions of Mr. Kuykendall, has continued against Governmental "regimentation," the meanwhile warning distributors that such is inevitable unless corrective measures are taken to soothe the sores of exhibition.

In recent weeks, organized exhibition has given voice to the strongest expression ever to come from rank and file: Opposition to the trust suit consent decree provisions for supplanting the existing system of large-block and blind selling by sales of blocks of five, sold only after advance regional trade showings.

Whereas both sides of MPTOA and Allied regional units have heretofore been divided on matters important, the five-block and trade screening clauses, finds affiliates of each united in opposition, joined, too, by such non-affiliated groups as Harry Brandt's Independent Theatre Owners Association, of New York, which, incidentally, has been threatening now for three years to start a new and third "national exhibitor organization."

Motion picture industry headlines of today focus attention on Mr. Brandt's ITOA, for its national polling of exhibitor sentiment on the blocks-of-five question, on Jack Miller's Allied of Illinois, for its vitriollic attacks on triples and doubles, on the Pacific Coast Conference of Theatre Owners—largest regional concentration in the country, for uniting exhibitor effort in greater regional strength than has been known for years, on National Allied's national survey of conditions of buying motion pictures for the season of 1940-41, just started, on conventions, conferences and caucuses everywhere protesting certain of the conditions attending the pending acceptance by the United States Government of its suit in equity against the "Big Eight."

Benefit for Children

A benefit for under-privileged children titled "Afternoon with the Stars" will be held September 29th at Randall's Island Stadium, New York. A pair of baseball games, besides continuous entertainment, will feature the day, with stars of the stage and screen battling a team of sport writers in one game, and Paramount Pictures league champions against Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer in the other. The Alumni Association of the Educational Alliance is conducting the benefit for its Welfare Fund.

Neth To Quit Dual Post

Because he has two votes in municipal matters, J. Real Neth, president of the J. Real Neth Theatres, of Columbus, will be requested by Mayor Floyd F. WE'VE BEEN IN SHOW BUSINESS A LONG TIME TOO!

Back in 1905 we began an engagement on Broadway that's become one of the longest hits on record.

During those 35 years several thousand movie deals have been figured out on our table cloths. Song hits and mighty epics of the screen were conceived in nearly every one of our rooms.

Through modernization and the development of new services we try to keep the Astor as new and fresh as a Wampas starlet. That's why we confidently expect to still be packing them in at the Astor when GWTW is drawing dust in the cans on the shelf.

WMCA Will Review Films and Plays

"Constructive criticism" will be the keynote of a reviewing service to be inaugurated at station WMCA, New York, next Monday. Julius J. Colby will be dramatic and film editor, according to Donald Flamm, president of the station.

Mr. Flamm said that Mr. Colby would give an outline of the motion picture or play that he is reviewing, would describe the audience reaction but would, in no case, resort to "destructive criticism."

Mr. Colby is former film and drama critic of the Ridder chain of newspapers. He will report movies and plays on opening nights after curtain time and will also coordinate all dramatic and motion picture material used on the radio station's schedules.

"Private lives of stars will be handled objectively and only the entertainment value of personalities, pictures and plays will be dealt with during the series," Mr. Flamm said.

Associated with the film industry since its infancy, Mr. Colby was assistant advertising manager for D. W. Griffith in promoting "Birth of a Nation," back in 1911. Several years later, he became motion picture editor of the New York Journal and American. For the last 19 years he has been connected with the Journal of Commerce and the Staats Zeitung.

Davis Signs Long Lease On New Jersey House

Jack Davis, managing director of the Monsignor Theatres, Ltd., of London, has personally acquired the first of a group of theatres which he proposes to operate in the Eastern section of the United States.

Mr. Davis, now a resident of New York, although he retains his interest in the British circuit, has just signed a 21-year lease for the Forum Theatre, Metuchen, N. J., from James Forgione, who has operated it for the last 18 years. The deal was set by Berk & Krumgold, theatre real estate brokers, of New York.

Mr. Davis' plan is to acquire a small circuit, using his own funds for the purpose. Negotiations are now under way for the acquisition of additional units in the proposed circuit. He plans to modernize each of the theatres acquired.

Mr. Davis' English circuit includes 12 theatres in London, one in Hayes, one in Leeds and one in Sheffield.

Roach Wins $30,000 Suit

Echoes of Hal Roach's plan two years ago to make films with Vittorio Mussolini were heard, on Tuesday, in Superior Court, Los Angeles, when Judge Myron Westover dismissed a suit for $30,000 brought against Mr. Roach by Dr. Renato Senise for allegedly making contacts in the deal.

Lawyer Seeks Setting Aside of RKO Award

An application was made before Samuel Mandelbaum, federal judge, in New York last week by George L. Schein, attorney for the independent protective committee of RKO common stockholders, to set aside an award of $8,000 and $1,325 in disbursements made to Mr. Schein as a final allowance for services in the RKO reorganization proceedings on the ground that the amount awarded is inadequate.

Mr. Schein had applied to William Bondy, federal judge, for an allowance of $100,000 and $1,404 disbursements, claiming that he had been active in the reorganization for the last five years.

RCA Plea Reserved

Bernard Shientag, New York supreme court justice, Friday, September 20th, reserved decision on an application of RCA to dismiss a consolidated stockholders' suit brought against it, its officers, General Electric, American Telephone & Telegraph Company, and Western Electric Company. Former Judge Joseph M. Proskauer argued for the dismissal claiming that the suit was barred by the statute of limitations and that the complaint did not state a cause of action. The suit charges waste and mismanagement and the transfer of a large block of shares of RCA.

Recordgraph Suit Filed

A suit for $115,000 damages has been filed in New York supreme court by Edward J. Malone, Jr., against Recordgraph Corporation, Albert G. Tompkins, John W. Montgomery and Howell & Company, Inc. WHAT THE PICTURE DID FOR ME

Columbia

BLONDIE HAS SERVANT TROUBLE: Penny Singleton, Arthur Lake, Larry Simms—How the young folks go for this series. Yes, and the older ones too. From my personal viewpoint, I think they are screwy but I guess that is because I don't follow the cartoons in the papers. But I am only one in a million that doesn't and that's what makes them tops at the box office. Every exhibitor should buy this series. They'll make you money and that's what counts.—A. G. Miller, Lyric Theatre, Atkinson, Neb. Rural patronage.

BLONDIE ON A BUDGET: Penny Singleton, Arthur Lake, Larry Simms—Best of this series so far. Running time, 73 minutes. Played August 14-15.—Ray Peacock, Onalaska Theatre, Onalaska, Wash. Loggers and mill workers patronage.

BLONDIE ON A BUDGET: Penny Singleton, Arthur Lake, Larry Simms—Very good. I believe the "Blondie" series are slipping. Business above average for midweek.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

DOCTOR TAKES A WIFE, THE: Ray Milland, Loretta Young, Gail Patrick—Very good. Running time, 88 minutes. Played August 18-19.—Ray Peacock, Onalaska Theatre, Onalaska, Wash. Loggers and mill workers patronage.

HE STAYED FOR BREAKFAST: Melvyn Douglas, Loretta Young—A terrific comedy.. Audience almost constantly in an uproar with story interest carried throughout. Douglas in regular good form. Business capacity against even three so-called top numbers at three opposition houses (midnight show). The people want this type of comedy and will be a big grosser on regular run. Good rib at the "Reds." Good work, Columbia. Running time, 85 minutes. Previewed advance midnight, September 1.—Lloyd M. Mills, Elgin Theatre, Ottawa, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

TOO MANY HUSBANDS: Jean Arthur, Fred MacMurray, Melvyn Douglas—Not enough husbands came. Too much dialogue. Just average entertainment. Business average.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

WESTERN CARAVANS: Charles Starrett, Iris Meredith, Sons of the Pioneers—An average western suitable for a double bill. Played it with "In Old Missouri" to satisfactory week-end business.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

First National

ALL THIS, AND HEAVEN TOO: Bette Davis, Charles Boyer, Jeffrey Lynn, Barbara O'Neill, Virginia Weidler—Good picture but poor business. Story of the terrible fate which befell a nagging wife. Far too long; not a small town picture; had many walkouts. Running time, 140 minutes. Played September 15-16.—E. M. Freiburger, Paramount Theatre, Dewey, Okla. Small town patronage.

ANGEL FROM TEXAS, AN: Eddie Albert, Rosemary Lane, Wayne Morris, Ronald Reagan, Jane Wyman—Good production. Enjoyed by everyone, although box office was only a weak average. Personally thought Eddie Albert was very good. Running time, 69 minutes. Played August 23-24.—Everett Clapp, American Theatre, Sidell, Ill. Rural patronage.

FLIGHT ANGELS: Virginia Bruce, Dennis Morgan, Wayne Morris, Ralph Bellamy, Jane Wyman, Dorothea Kent, Dick Elliot—One of the best pictures for some time. Action, comedy, thrills, romance, this one has everything. Virginia Bruce, Dennis Morgan, Wayne Morris, Ralph Bellamy, Jane Wyman, all give excellent portrayals, but Dorothea Kent is a riot. Dick Elliott is great. This one pleased one hundred per cent. It is the kind they want to see and worth a dozen high brow features in this town. Running time, 74 minutes. Played August 30-September 4.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kansas. Small town patronage.

TORRID ZONE: James Cagney, Ann Sheridan, Pat O'Brien, Andy Devine, Helen Vinuson—Slightly below average at the box office under favorable conditions. Audience was unimpressed. Consider it a poor use of strong cast, possibly due mainly to weak story and below par performance by O'Brien. Running time, 87 minutes. Played August 11-12.—Everett Clapp, American Theatre, Sidell, Ill. Rural patronage.

IN this, the exhibitors' own department, the theatremen of the nation serve one another with information on the box-office performance of product for their mutual benefit. It is a service of the exhibitor for the exhibitor. Address all communications to—

What the Picture Did for Me
MOTION PICTURE HERALD
Rockefeller Center, New York

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer

EDISON, THE MAN: Spencer Tracy, Rita Johnson, Gene Lockhart, Charles Coburn—You need go no further for a great piece of entertainment for your audience. Other exhibitors have praised it and so do we. If your community is in any degree motion picture conscious, this should make the pulse of your box office leap and bound. Running time, 107 minutes. Played September 4-5.—John Grabenstein, Liberty Theatre, Eustis, Neb. Rural and small town patronage.

GOLD RUSH MAISIE: Ann Sothern, Lew Bowman, Virginia Weidler—Swell picture to good business. Running time, 82 minutes. Played August 30-31.—Ray Peacock, Onalaska Theatre, Onalaska, Wash. Loggers and mill workers patronage.

I LOVE YOU AGAIN: William Powell, Myrna Loy, Frank McHugh, Edmund Lowe—Good picture; good business. Has plenty of comedy and will please all. Running time, 100 minutes. Played September 11-12.—E. M. Freiburger, Paramount Theatre, Dewey, Okla. Small town patronage.

MORTAL STORM, THE: James Stewart, Margaret Sullavan, Robert Young, Frank Morgan, Irene Rich, Bonita Granville—The individual reaction cannot be clear because this may be accepted by some as propaganda while others may take it as typical of human beings when they lose their sense of balance and tolerance, and then suddenly wake up to their mistakes. From the exhibitor standpoint, the above reactions cannot be noted. Here, however, is a good picture, although it does leave a sad note. We cannot say much for the box office. Running time, 100 minutes Played September 12-14.—John Grabenstein, Liberty Theatre, Eustis, Neb. Rural and small town patronage.

MORTAL STORM, THE: Margaret Sullavan, James Stewart, Frank Morgan, Irene Rich, Bonita Granville—This one will give very good results. It may be a bit long on anti-Hitler propaganda but probably is not untrue in its essential story and Americans will accept it and find it interesting. Running time, 100 minutes. Played September 13-14.—Dr. G. A. Van Fradenburg, Valley Theatre, Manassa, Colo. Farming community patronage.

MUTINY ON THE BOUNTY (reissue): Clark Gable, Charles Laughton, Franchot Tone—Our mistake. Once was enough. We live and learn.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

NEW MOON: Jeanette MacDonald, Nelson Eddy, Mary Boland—Not so good and a flop at the box office. Played August 23-22.—Ray Peacock, Onalaska Theatre, Onalaska, Wash. Loggers and mill workers patronage.

NEW MOON: Jeanette MacDonald, Nelson Eddy, Mary Boland—This singing pair has usually done quite well by me in the past but not so this time. The picture is on six reels and the audience was interested only during the fourth and fifth. If they could have maintained similar interest all the way through, they might have had something. Of course, the music is fine but you need more than just that from the results we had. We had to hang out a quarantine sign because the box office receipts were so measly. Really, it was one of the biggest losses we have ever had and it would happen during our first reopening week. We had been closed for part of the summer. (What summer?). Running time, 105 minutes.—Played September 13-14.—W. Varick Nevins, III, Alfred Co-op Theatre, Alfred, N. Y. Small college town and rural patronage.

PRIDE AND PREJUDICE: Greer Garson, Laurence Olivier, Mary Boland, Edna May Oliver, Maureen O'Sullivan. A colossal flop in this town. Running time, 118 minutes.—Played August 28-29.—Ray Peacock, Onalaska Theatre, Onalaska, Wash. Loggers and mill workers patronage.

SPORTING BLOOD: Robert Young, Maureen O'Sullivan, Lewis Stone—A pleasing picture to the few that saw it. Running time, 82 minutes. Played August 25-26.—Ray Peacock, Onalaska Theatre, Onalaska, Wash. Loggers and mill workers patronage.

SUSAN AND GOD: Joan Crawford, Fredric March, Rita Quigley, Rita Hayworth, John Carroll, Bruce Cabot, Rose Hobart—Have been here eight months and did the worst business ever. No good for small town. Running time, 117 minutes.—Played September 7-9.—R. D. Milton, Thompson Theatre, Wilson, Okla. Small town patronage.

TWENTY MULE TEAM: Wallace Beery, Leo Carrillo, Marjorie Rambeau, Berton Churchill—I did not consider this up to Beery's standard but it seemed to please the customers. Berton Churchill is very good. Beery always liked and Leo Carrillo is excellent. Other members of the cast just fair. Scenery is beautiful. Running time, 83 minutes. Played August 23-25.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kansas. Small town patronage.

WATERLOO BRIDGE: Vivien Leigh, Robert Taylor—This has much of the dramatic in its make-up and it is the sort of show that people do not walk out on. Whatever the reason, we did our best business for a long time with it. Possibly this was in part because we did not run "Gone with the Wind" and our patrons wanted to see the much exploited star. We passed up "Wind" believing that there is no such animal as a $1.10 picture for a small town. Running time, 108 minutes. Played September 7-8.—Dr. A. Van Fradenburg, Valley Theatre, Manassa, Colo. Farming community patronage.

WATERLOO BRIDGE: Robert Taylor, Vivien Leigh—A satisfactory picture from the standpoint of its superb performances from handsome Bob Taylor and lovely Vivien Leigh and the different story qualities. This picture seems to have set Taylor back in a good box office rating and we sincerely hope he remains there. Bad pictures and publicity on his good looks, which the Maker granted him, have hurt his box office appeal. Running time, 108 minutes. Played August 29-31.—John Grabenstein, Liberty Theatre, Eustis, Neb. Rural and small town patronage.

WATERLOO BRIDGE: Robert Taylor, Vivien Leigh—Picture not bad at all, but did not do much here. Running time, 103 minutes. Played August 11-12.—Ray Peacock, Onalaska Theatre, Onalaska, Wash. Loggers and mill workers patronage.

Monogram

I AM A CRIMINAL: John Carroll, Martin Spellman, Kay Linaker—Played this with dual bill, Three Mesquiteers, to satisfactory weekend business.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

Paramount

BUCK BENNY RIDES AGAIN: Jack Benny, Eddie "Rochester" Anderson, Ellen Drew, Andy Devine—This is by far the best of the Bennys and the customers seem to know it. When the producers start to putting a little more effort and story into these pictures where they use well known radio stars, they will have something. Running time, 85 minutes. Played August 18-19.—H. M. Gerber, Roxy Theatre, Hazelton, N. D. Small town and rural patronage.

DR. CYCLOPS: Albert Dekker, Janice Logan—Rather weird and uncanny but our folk seemed to like it. Business fair. Running time, 77 minutes. Played September 1-2.—Ray Peacock, Onalaska Theatre, Onalaska, Wash. Loggers and mill workers patronage.

ROAD TO SINGAPORE: Bob Hope, Dorothy Lamour, Bing Crosby—The combination of Lamour, Hope and Crosby left our audience more than satisfied. We played this the last day of the local fair and our business was disappointing in our estimation. This did hardly the average week-end business of three days. But, for a picture that will please the masses, this is it. Running time, 85 minutes. Played Sep-

UNTAMED: Ray Milland, Patricia Morison, Akim Tamiroff—Good action picture in color which pleased average business. Running time, 83 minutes. Played September 4-5.—E. M. Freiburger, Paramount Theatre, Dewey, Okla. Small town patronage.

Republic

DAYS OF JESSE JAMES: Roy Rogers, George "Gabby" Hayes, Don Barry—Good picture for short run, especially for children. Played it on Saturday with serial. One of the best Roy Rogers has made thus far. Business was better than usual. Put 723 children in matinee, seating capacity 661.— Evening played to over 500 adults. Running time, 63 minutes. Played September 7.—George O. Wiggins, Maplewood Theatre, Malden. Neighborhood patronage.

GRAND OLE OPRY: Weaver Brothers and Elviry—Grand show for small town patronage. Went over big. Running time, 66 minutes. Played September 10-11.—R. D. Milton, Thompson Theatre, Wilson, Okla. Small town patronage.

IN OLD MISSOURI: Weaver Brothers and Elviry—Don't let this one slip up on you because it's perfect entertainment for weekend. They rolled in the aisle with laughter. Give us more, Republic. Play it, brethren.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

KANSAS TERRORS, THE: Three Mesquiteers (Robert Livingston, Duncan Renaldo, Raymond Hatton), Jacqueline Wells—Double billed with "Oh, Johnny, How You Can Love." Played on a Friday-Saturday and really satisfied a large crowd.—A. G. Miller, Lyric Theatre, Atkinson, Neb. Rural patronage.

MY WIFE'S RELATIVES: James, Lucile and Russell Gleason—This is the first of these series we ever played. Everyone enjoyed this. Business average.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

RANCHO GRANDE: Gene Autry, Smiley Burnette, June Storey—In the picture show business since 1909, playing westerns stars from Broncho Billy, William S. Hart, Tom Mix, etc., I never have seen people go for a star like Autry. It must be the radio. Brother exhibitors, play his pictures, even if you don't like horse operas. Why spend extra money but putting him on with another feature. He'll stand up alone, because it's his pictures they want to see. —A. G. Miller, Lyric Theatre, Atkinson, Neb. Rural patronage.

RANGER AND THE LADY, THE: Roy Rogers, George "Gabby" Hayes, Jacqueline Wells—Good picture; good business. Running time, 59 minutes.—Played September 13-14.—E. M. Freiburger, Paramount Theatre, Dewey, Okla. Small town patronage.

SING, DANCE, PLENTY HOT: Johnny Downs, Ruth Terry—Very good musical show which pleased average business. Running time, 72 minutes. Played September 8-9.—E. M. Freiburger, Paramount Theatre, Dewey, Okla. Small town patronage.

STREET OF MISSING MEN: Charles Bickford, Harry Carey, Tommy Ryan—A very good program picture that did average business on a dual bill.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

RKO Radio

ANNE OF WINDY POPLARS: Anne Shirley, James Ellison—Played this Sunday-Monday-Tuesday to a nice business. Everyone satisfied. Just the kind the whole family will enjoy. What more can one do?—A. G. Miller, Lyric Theatre, Atkinson, Neb. Rural patronage.

DREAMING OUT LOUD: Lum and Abner, Frances Langford, Frank Craven, Bobs Watson—I have never played a picture that seemed to satisfy as completely as did Lum and Abner in their first screen production. It has everything that goes to make up satisfactory screen entertainment and my patrons ate it up. Of course, this is speaking from a small town standpoint, but the large towns are made up of boys and girls that came from the country, so I think the picture should click anywhere. At least, the picture is true to life and that's what the people want. Running time, 81 minutes. Played September 13-15.—Emerson Theatre, Hartford, Ark. Small town and rural patronage.

IRENE: Anna Neagle, Ray Milland, Roland Young, Billie Burke, May Robson—Strong average at the box office and very well liked by the ladies. Reaction of men customers was fair and that means much better than I had expected. Was very well pleased with the production but am afraid I cannot become enthused with the one color reel. Was told it was one of the most glorious pieces of color ever filmed. Have seen others I liked much better. For myself, I'd rather have the entire film either black and white or color. Running time, 101 minutes. Played August 25-26.—Everett Clapp, American Theatre, Sidell, Ill. Rural patronage.

MILLIONAIRE PLAYBOY: Joe Penner, Linda Hayes—This is the kind of picture which makes people ashamed to be seen leaving the theatre and the exhibitor wish he were on WPA where he is surely headed after showing a few like this. We tried to stay away from this kind of stuff by paying for half of RKO pictures and not playing them but it is impossible to pick out even a dozen pictures out of their entire output. We find that we cannot stay in business and play pictures they have been turning out. Running time, 68 minutes. Played September 14-15.—H. M. Gerber, Roxy Theatre, Hazelton, N. D. Small town and rural patronage.

MY FAVORITE WIFE: Irene Dunne, Cary Grant, Randolph Scott, Gail Patrick—Very good. Good box office and a really enjoyable film for any and all classes of audiences. Well directed, smooth story with lots of comedy. Irene Dunne and Cary Grant give excellent performances. Runing time, 88 minutes. Played August 18-19.—Everett Clapp, American Theatre, Sidell, Ill. Rural patronage.

TOM BROWN'S SCHOOLDAYS: Sir Cedric Hardwicke, Freddie Bartholomew, Jimmy Lydon, Josephine Hutchinson—This is entertaining and very well done. James Lydon is exceptionally good as "Tom Brown." One episode consisting completely of pranks rated hilarious approval. Average box office. Doubled with "My Love Came Back." English accent not at all objectionable in this American made film. Running time, 82 minutes. Played September 10-11.—W. Varick Nevins, Ill., Alfred Co-Op Theatre, Alfred, N. Y. Small college town and rural patronage.

Twentieth Century-Fox

FOUR SONS: Don Ameche, Mary Beth Hughes, Eugenie Leontovich—Played this with "If I Had My Way," Universal. In my estimation this picture topped "The Mortal Storm" and it certainly showed it by holding up both days, whereas former only held up on "Bank Night." Good story and well displayed. A timely picture and should do well for other exhibitors. Running time, 88 minutes. Played September 8-9.—George O. Wiggin, Maplewood Theatre, Malden, Mass.

FREE, BLONDE AND TWENTY-ONE: Lynn Bari, Joan Davis, Henry Wilcoxon—Fairly good show. Business average. Running time, 67 minutes. Played September 5-6.—R. D. Milton, Thompson Theatre, Wilson, Okla. Small town patronage.

LILLIAN RUSSELL: Alice Faye, Don Ameche, Henry Fonda, Edward Arnold, Warren William, Leo Carrillo, Weber and Fields—Everett's contrary again. Have heard considerable exhibitor and some other distributor comment about this picture being a dud. Truthfully can say that I thought it was swell and that I received as much favorable audience comment as on any picture this summer with the exception of "My Favorite Wife." Did not set a record at the box office but if all features did as much as this one, I would be satisfied. And I'm saying all these nice things about this picture after being held to a late date on the print. Running time, 127 minutes. Played September 8-9.—Everett Clapp, American Theatre, Sidell, Ill. Rural patronage.

LILLIAN RUSSELL: Alice Faye, Don Ameche, Henry Fonda, Warren William, Edward Arnold, Leo Carrillo, Weber and Fields—Very poor business on this with patron interest at a very low point. Picture pleased a few, but on the whole it proved disappointing. Too long, too draggy seemed to be the main points of disapproval. Certainly not a top allocation for this situation, at least. Running time, 127 minutes. Played August 18-20.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

United Artists

FOREIGN CORRESPONDENT: Joel McCrea, Laraine Day, Herbert Marshall, George Sanders, Robert Benchley—Comments 99 per cent perfect. Patrons really raved. Definitely makes Alfred Hitchcock No. 1 Hollywood director. Should do well in any spot. Fourth day broke house record. Just finishing third week and still 150 per cent normal. Stars excellent. Special praise for George Sanders. Climax terrific. Thank you, Walter Wanger; thank you, Joan Bennett; thank you, Mr. Hitchcock for attending our premiere in person! Running time, 119 minutes. Opened August 29.—Lloyd M. Mills, Elgin Theatre, Ottawa, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

ONE MILLION, B. C.: Carole Landis, Lon Chaney, Jr., John Hubbard, Victor Mature—Slightly above average for mid-week. The absence of speech made the show generally unpopular and it drew quite a number of "kicks." Leave it to U. A. to produce the peculiar shows that don't take with the masses.—L. V. Bergtold, Westby Theatre, Westby, Wis. General patronage.

OUR TOWN: William Holden, Martha Scott, Frank Craven, Thomas Mitchell, Fay Bainter, Beulah Bondi, Guy Kibbee, Stuart Erwin—50 per cent raves; 50 per cent indifferent. A new adventure in motion picture field. Personally enjoyed it immensely. Business better than average. Older people more impressed than younger crowd. Cast did swell job. Critics raved about picture and lesson contained. Solo it. Strong from human interest side. Running time, 89 minutes. Played August 1-10.—Lloyd M. Mills, Elgin Theatre, Ottawa, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

OUR TOWN: Martha Scott, William Holden, Fay Bainter, Thomas Mitchell, Beulah Bondi, Guy Kibbee, Stuart Erwin—Being an innovation in that there is a narrator that takes you step by step through the years in small town life, you don't need to expect that more than 40 per cent of your patrons will go for it. Hence, it is a dud at the box office. There is no cause to cavil at the acting or the effort to produce something different from the common run of pictures but it is just too far ahead for the average patron to support it. I would advise the small town runs to lay it out and not waste a date. Certainly they did no ballyhooing about it, so the second day was a practical loss.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

OUR TOWN William Holden, Martha Scott, Frank Craven, Thomas Mitchell, Fay Bainter, Beulah Bondi, Guy Kibbee, Stuart Erwin—From the standpoint of the younger people this was a "dud." More kicks than any show we have had in 1940. Not much of a story and no particular climax. The thing just kind of moved along in a leisurely manner. Although panned by the younger element, it did draw some nice comments from the older folks. Business was fairly good.—L. V. Bergtold, Westby Theatre, Westby, Wis. General patronage.

OVER THE MOON: Merle Oberon, Rex Harrison—Lately, we seem to have first a picture that is not too bad and then one that is not too good. So, one gets tired of trying to make reports but I fell that this one merits something. So far as I can remember, we ran this to the smallest attendance of any picture in the 20 years we have been operating. And I think they were justified in staying away, though I do not know how they knew about it. The worst thing about it is its thousands of words of rapid-fire British dialogue. Running time, 78 minutes. Played September 5-6.—Dr. G. A. Van Fradenburg, Valley Theatre, Manassa, Colo. Farming community patronage.

SLIGHTLY HONORABLE: Pat O'Brien, Edward Arnold, Ruth Terry, Broderick Crawford—The odor of this masterpiece still hangs around the theatre. Just a bungling mixed up piece of junk which should not be taken out of the can. Played September 7-8.—H. M. Gerber, Roxy Theatre, Hazelton, N. D. Small town and rural patronage.

TURNABOUT: Carole Landis, John Hubbard, Adolphe Menjou—Screwy, ridiculous, impossible but as a comedy riot, it tore the house down. Capacity business for eight days of nine day run. Held over three days. Hottest days of the year didn't keep them away. Take some more well-known comedy novels any time, Mr. Roach. Running time, 83 minutes. Played July 15-24.—Lloyd M. Mills, Elgin Theatre, Ottawa, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

Universal

IF I HAD MY WAY: Bing Crosby, Gloria Jean—Good supporting cast and I think this was Bing's best picture thus far for little Gloria Jean held your attention and Bing's singing was in his own inimitable style, which he alone can give you. Best two days business for some time. Running time, 93 minutes. Played September 8-9.—George O. Wiggin, Maplewood Theatre, Malden, Mass. Neighborhood patronage.

LOVE, HONOR AND OH, BABY: Wallace Ford, Kathryn Adams, Donald Woods—The producers must have had some film to waste when they made this. It would have been better if they would have burned it instead of releasing it for people to suffer through. Punk! Played August 27.—Herff Smith, Mustang Theatre, Madisonville, Texas. Small town patronage.

OH, JOHNNY, HOW YOU CAN LOVE: Tom Brown, Peggy Moran—Dandy comedy. Double billed with western "Kansas Terrors," a Republic picture. Played on a Friday-Saturday and really satisfied a large crowd. Lots and lots of good comments on "Oh, Johnny." This kind of entertainment is what they seem to want because they all have that contented look on their faces when they leave the theatre.—A. G. Miller, Lyric Theatre, Atkinson, Neb. Rural patronage.

Warner Brothers

BROTHER ORCHID: Edward G. Robinson, Ann Sothern, Humphrey Bogart, Ralph Bellamy—Good picture and well acted by Robinson but for some reason didn't make any new box office record. Perhaps it didn't get usual publicity. The picture gave new twist to regular ganster routine in which Robinson is so famous. Business fair. Running time, 91 minutes. Played September 14-15.—George O. Wiggin, Maplewood Theatre, Malden, Mass. Neighborhood patronage.

BROTHER ORCHID: Edward G. Robinson, Ann Sothern, Humphrey Bogart, Ralph Bellamy—Good, but not so good as most of Robinson's pictures. Ann Sothern is great, cast fair and acting all very good. Pleased nearly everyone. Running time, 91 minutes. Played September 6-8.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kansas. Small town patronage.

DODGE CITY: Errol Flynn, Olivia de Havilland, Ann Sheridan, Bruce Cabot, Alan Hale, Frank McHugh, Victor Jory—Played this old but still better than most of these new ones. You just can't go wrong playing pictures like this. Played August 31-September 1.—H. M. Gerber, Roxy Theatre, Hazelton, N. D. Small town and rural patronage.

MY LOVE CAME BACK: Olivia de Havilland, Jeffrey Lynn, Charles Winninger, Eddie Albert, Jane Wyman—Excellent musical numbers and a very funny complicated plot makes this combination of classical and swing music very funny. It was well received here with average box office. Things don't really get under way in this town until next week so the fact that it was average at the box office speaks quite well for it. It was doubled with "Tom Brown's Schooldays." Running time, 85 minutes. Played September 10-11.—W. Varick Nevins, III, Alfred Co-Op Theatre, Alfred, N. Y. Small college town and rural patronage.

THE CHART

Productions are listed under distributors. Features in work or completed for release later than the date of this issue are listed as "Coming Attractions." Parenthesis after title denotes audience classification: (A) Adult, (G) General. Numerals following classification are production numbers. Dagger (†) indicates the 1940-41 season. Asterisk (*) after title denotes first appearance.

NOTE: The totals for running time are the official figures.

When a production is reviewed the running time is as given by the studio and this is denoted by an asterisk (*) preceding the number. When the home office has established the running time for national release, the studio figure is changed. Running times are subject to change according to local conditions. State or city censorship deletions or repairs to the film may cause variations.

AS IT GREW

THE piece of quasi-litigation called the Government suit, addressed at regulation of the motion picture industry, allegedly under the anti-trust statutes, has most interestingly resulted in accented re-statements of problems, without—as of Wednesday this week—solving any.

Foremost always have been those aspects which directly pertain to the buying of product, and continually and conspicuously narrowing toward the single issue of the product package—block booking.

Now comes Motion Picture Daily with a cross-section examination into exhibitor opinion finding an average of 92.4 per cent favouring the present system of block booking, the subject of attack, preferable to the proposed "Consent Decree" arrangement for selling "blocks-of-five". It is to be observed that the independent exhibitor vote was 86.2 per cent in favour of the current and long prevailing system.

Putting to one side, for this moment, the many and various debates that can still be had about details, it may be observed that all this denotes the fact that there are structures and facts of this and other American industries which represent sheer evolution, about which no one can do very much.

There is indication that, despite its abuses and imperfections, the system by which producers have come to sell and by which exhibitors have come to buy is a resultant of a reduction to practice—in a most complex field of merchandising involving time and transient shadows and fleeting states of public anticipation.

It "just growed".

By now it is manifest that to do anything radically different would mean pulling up a very big plant by the roots.

Maybe that relates closely to the very large problems of a commercial civilization when it comes up against that program sometimes called "a planned economy".

There's a world war on that subject now. It seems to take a heap of planning.

So far no one has done a better job of running the picture business than it has done for itself—no matter what you think of that. That goes for all American business, too.

"UN CARNET"

AS has been recorded, the fortunes and ill-fortunes of war have brought to America M. Julien Duvivier, among the foremost of the cinematographic minds of France, more especially famed here for his poignantly poetic "Un Carnet de Bal".

Now it has been arranged that M. Duvivier is to go to Hollywood and there to make, or re-make, with the facilities of the great mechanism of the American screen, this extraordinary picture.

A Duvivier picture, so far, has ever been as nearly as possible, the single-handed, one-man concept put on the screen by that one man, from script to set. It may parenthetically be observed that works of art, from the pictured caves of Dordogne to the Borgluming of Rushmore's rocks, including "The Birth of a Nation" and Mr. Chaplin's "One A.M.", have been one-man jobs.

Hollywood's technology, marvelous as it is, magnificent as it is, colossal as it is, differs from that creative fact of singular effort in art about as widely as a General Motors assembly line differs from Edison locked in "Room Five".

We are now to see, presumably, what occurs, what results, from the superimposition of these divergent creative methods. And superimposition inevitably means that one will be on top—and prevail.

SUGGESTION

IT is to be observed that the Administration is engaged in setting up a $500,000,000 credit arrangement to encourage, permit and promote the purchase of goods in the United States by South Americans. That is supposed to improve hemisphere relations, and to help American trade get an outlet of importance in the face of what has happened to European markets. Just about now, may we suggest that motion pictures are important among American manufactures, employing much labour and using all manner of materials. There are also, as has been noted from time to time, other values in the service of the whole of American industry to be had from the dissemination of Hollywood's pictures. Anything that might be done to apply some of that five hundred million dollars worth of trade lubrication to the flow of pictures could be viewed as broadly constructive.

TOO MUCH MIRACLE

SHOULD you want to know how long twenty-five years can be, consider, as we have this Herald anniversary period, how many of the customers cannot remember a world in which there were no movies. For a whole generation now the screen has been no miracle. Along with motor-car and airplane the motion picture has become a common fact. Even more swiftly has this occurred to radio, while television tends to become a commonplace before it really emerges. As the media and means of saying multiply and extend the less is their importance in relation to what is said and shown. Books were marvels once. Now nothing matters but the story told. The arts are but messengers to the emotions—they are the customers. Who tells best sells best.

WHILE surveying the first devastations of frost in this season's garden, your editor found himself much berated in profane protests by sundry chickadees, and other small fry, for daring to venture into a sunflower patch where they were holding fiesta on a crop planted and cultured for their special benefit. Alas, life and business is getting much like that. A lot of dam chickadees have no tolerance for investment, foresight and management.

This Week in the News

Newsreel Feature

PROCEEDING quietly, Paramount has emerged from the vaults of its newsreel with a seven-reeler, entitled "World in Flames," timed to start October 25th.

Claiming it is the first time, at least in recent years, that newsreel reporting has been utilized to make a feature without the aid of a fictional story, or story thread, Paramount follows somewhat the basic idea of March of Time's "Ramparts We Watch," in that it tells the story of what led to World War II.

"World in Flame" traces actual events, starting in 1929, which led to the present world conflagration, and subsequently, whereas "Ramparts" producers dug into the files for clips before World War I, going back to about 1912 and used these with reenactments of other scenes strung togethere on a fictional thread.

William C. Park, Paramount News make-up editor, compiled "World in Flames." He said it was intended to show American reaction to the events depicted, adding: "It is a factual summation, an objective treatment, offering no special viewpoint." Working with Mr. Park, in supervision, were Albert J. Richard, editor-in-chief of Paramount News, and William P. Montague, Jr., assignment editor.

It is indicated that the picture will be sold as a special.

Bund Drops Suit

THE German American Bund this week discontinued its $5,000,000 libel suit against Warner Brothers Pictures in the U. S. District Court, in New York. The Bund, with Fritz Kuhn, its former leader, had filed suit claiming that "Confessions of a Nazi Spy" libelled them because it depicted them as being engaged in subversive activities with the purpose of undermining American principles. Since then Kuhn was sent to jail.

Five from Roosevelt

JAMES ROOSEVELT, on Wednesday, in Hollywood, signed a contract with Samuel Bronston, head of Samuel Bronston Productions, Inc., by which the eldest son of the President will produce five features, to be released under his long-term franchise through United Artists.

The arrangement does not include "Pot o' Gold," based on Tums radio cash giveaway program, which Mr. Roosevelt is about to film with James Stewart, Paulette Goddard and Horace Heidt of the "Gold" air show, and which will go through U.A., now also distributing the Roosevelt importation of the anti-Nazi "Pastor Hall."

Mr. Bronston said Wednesday the five pictures would all have "high bracket" budgets, that Henry Henigson had been signed as production manager and that the first of the five would be the Jack London novel, "Martin Eden," with Lloyd Bacon directing. Mr. Henigson is also production manager for Roosevelt's Globe Productions, which makes nickel-in-the-slot shorts for the Mills "juke" machines.

The Bronston interests are said to be financing Mr. Roosevelt for the five features to be made.

De Mille's 'Jukes'

WITH Paramount sanctioning use of his name as one of two principal backers on the understanding that he would not actually produce films, Cecil B. DeMille, late Tuesday night, in Hollywood, entered the ranks of nickel movie producers. Neil S. McCarthy is associated with Mr. DeMille in the financing of the company.

Also associated with him are Morris and Frank Kozinsky, manufacturers and vendors of coin machines, and William H. Pine, Mr. DeMille's general manager. Herbert Moulton, until recently in charge of production of trailers for Paramount, has been employed to produce 96 three-minute subjects. He said plans were still vague as to the makeup of the shorts but emphasized that Mr. DeMille's name would not appear on the films.

Book-Film Plan

A PLAN for a novel-writing contest sponsored jointly by a motion picture company and by a publishing firm has been proposed to Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer by Allan Collins, head of the Curtis Brown literary agency.

The motion picture company would put up $20,000 for the screen rights to the winning novel, looking at all submitted, and Doubleday-Doran and Michael Joseph, Ltd. would each subscribe $7,500 for the American and British publishing rights respectively. If the producer considers $20,000 too much it has been suggested that the fee for the film rights be $10,000 plus an additional sum based on copies sold.

The film company, according to the plan, would get not only the screen rights to a supposedly good novel but also much publicity. The contest would run for a year and a half and all entries would be made under pen-names so that recognized authors could also compete. The motion picture company would also have the deciding vote.

J. Robert Rubin, MGM vice-president, said on Monday that no decision on the proposal had been made yet.

Accessories Deal

A UNIQUE arrangement in motion picture accessory manufacturing and selling has been undertaken through an agreement by Warner Brothers and National Screen Service, under which each will make and sell separate and distinct full lines of accessories for Warner films. Heretofore the practice has been for the merchandising of one full line, either by a distributor or some outside accessory manufacturer.

The agreement, for one year, was made in settlement of a four-year-old Warner suit pending against National, and which was started on Warners' charges that National was making special trailers on Warners films without authorized use of material.

Warners will continue to maintain its own poster sales and to manufacture and distribute its own trailers.

Cash 'Kickbacks'

GOING Sears Roebuck several better, a new "Double Money" theatre giveaway gives patrons merchandise coupons of 20-cents trade-in value, by paying 10 cents over the admission price.

Sears Roebuck's script giveaway provides coupons with each admission, entitling a patron to apply the script to purchases at Sears Roebuck. The script, however, is more in the penny class.

"Double Money" is now being tested in three south New Jersey theatres, at the Walt Whitman theatre, Camden; Ritz, Oaklyn, and King, at Gloucester.

The theatres each display some 100 different articles in their lobbies, in tieups with local merchants or manufacturers, the display being intended to point out specific articles to which the 20-cent script can be applied.

Duals 'Solution'

A NEW form of compromise on the singles vs duals problem is being tried by RKO Theatres at its New York Proctor's 86th Street theatre. Starting a week ago the main feature of the double bill went on at 9:30 p.m. According to John J. O'Connor, vice-president in charge of the circuit, the manager of the house, Emil Groth, conducted a poll on double feature. As a result a plan was developed, to be continued indefinitely, under which patrons desiring to see only the main feature may be certain of doing so at 9:30. The supporting feature of the bill will follow. Patrons thus can leave after the main feature or stay for the double bill. The plan may be extended to other houses in the RKO circuit.

For 'Fantasia'

WITH assurances from RCA that the first unit of the "revolutionary" sound equipment would be ready to install within the next two weeks, November 13th, was set Wednesday as the date on which Walt Disney's "Fantasia" will be world premiered at the Broadway theatre, New York.

Because of the equipment necessary for the showing of "Fantasia," the special nature of which precludes its being run in regular film theatres, the Broadway will be the only house in New York in which this picture will be shown.

After the opening night, the film will be shown twice daily, all seats reserved, with prices as follows: Weekday matinees, $1.10, 85c and 55c; Saturday, Sunday and holiday matinees, $1.65, $1.10, 85c, and 55c; evenings, Monday through Sunday, $2.20, $1.65, $1.10, and 75c.

Films in Time Fight

EVER since daylight saving started, theatre owners, and others whose businesses suffer from the shortened evenings, have been conducting compaigns to repeal the city ordinances and state laws by which the change in time is effected.

Now Hollywood's motion picture producers are to lend their support, aiming first at California's law through a series of six short films hitting the practice and petitioning for its repeal on November ballots.

MGM, Paramount, RKO, Universal and Warners are each making subjects—all using name players. Twentieth Century-Fox has already finished its assignment, with Joan Davis and Roscoe Ates.

Arch M. Bowles, executive of Fox West Coast Theatres, is credited with the idea, which bears the label of the "California's All Right Committee." They promise that the films will be screened in every independent and circuit house in the state, at no rental charge, of course.

Film Center Paper

THE American Film Center, of New York, Rockefeller-supported unit which promotes education-via-films and which acts as an informational clearing-house on educational and documentary films, has expanded its "news-letter" house organ into a monthly magazine, entitled Film News.

The magazine, edited by Donald Slesinger, head of the Center, and John McDonald, pertains to the growth of the educational type film, and its promotion.

Mr. Slesinger explained that the final decision to make the "news-letter", formerly mimeographed, into a magazine was dictated by the growth in the number of readers in the field and their response to a request for subscriptions, following its appearance, in May, in photo-offset.

The July issue was printed as a special "World's Fair Supplement," containing a list of all educational and documentary films at the New York World's Fair. The August issue, off the press last week, comprises a printed supplement, listing all the British educational and documentary films available in this country, and the regular photo-offset issue, with the month's resume of news. Mr. Slesinger thinks that unless the number of subscribers (now said to be about 2,000) grows extraordinarily the magazine will continue to be printed by photo-offset.

That Gompers Film

THAT AFL labor film on the "Life of Samuel Gompers" will probably be made some time; but, currently, neither the money nor the "correct policy" are available and there is great disagreement over who will make it.

American Pictures Corporation, several months ago, announced that it was being formed to make the film, probably with Luther Adler as star, and from a script prepared by Geza Herczeg, 1938 Academy Award winner. Shooting was promised soon, and Eastern Service Studios on Long Island was to house production. The announcement was made in the presence of American Federation of Labor executives, among them Matthew Woll, vice-president of the AFL, and M. L. Ornburn, his aide.

Ensued nothing further—and, last week, Charles Sinnigen, secretary-treasurer of the Central Union Label Council of New York, told a meeting of the Council that the AFL itself would make the picture; that a bank had agreed to invest $250,000 in the film, if another $150,000 was obtained, and that the latter would be obtained from unions.

On Tuesday, Sidney Weill, general manager of American Pictures, called Mr. Sinnigen's statement the result of misapprehension. He asserted his corporation owns the only script on Gomper's life, by Mr. Herczeg; that it has, from Mr. Gompers' son, the sole rights to make the film; and that the film would be made, with the cooperation of the AFL, not under its dictation.

There have been discussions of a possibility that Paul Muni might appear in the Gompers role.

New Drive-In Deals

MAJOR film distributors who have been selling "drive-in" theatres throughout the country on a flat rental basis, are reported now asking or in some cases preparing to ask next season for percentage terms, at least for top bracket features.

As one film executive phrased it, "The drive-in theatres are now paying 'peanuts' for product and they've been making money. There's no reason why they should not pay more."

Decision to revise the selling policy apparently results from the realization that the flat rental gives the seasonal drive-in theatres a definite advantage over the year 'round theatre, hence discriminates against a regular customer.

Drive-ins have shown a substantial increase in number during the outdoor season now closing. Interests headed by Phil Smith, of Boston, have been especially active, expanding their holdings in the middle West, with operations in St. Louis, Indianapolis, Milwaukee, with additional drive-ins set for Cleveland, Cincinnati and Chicago, and Detroit.

ALLIED SURVEY ON BUYING SHOWS 37% OF INDEPENDENTS HOLDING OUT

Organization's AID Report Culled from Replies to Questionnaire Cards from Exhibitors in 14 Exchange Centers

Disclosure of the extent to which the prolonged consent decree formulations, and other problems of the day have delayed 1940-41 film buying comes in a most pronounced manner from all levels of exhibition, from top circuits to independents.

While some majors have been purposely withholding trade announcement on new circuit deals closed, so as not to "embarrass" the consent decree negotiations, those who have reported list only 85 contracts closed to date. (See page 23.)

Allied States Association, in a nation-wide survey, reports that among independents more than 37 per cent have not made any 1940-41 purchases whatsoever, with many more still to contract for their full requirements.

Ordinarily a regional conclave, the 21st annual convention of Allied Theatre Owners of New Jersey, meeting in Atlantic City at the Hotel President, Wednesday through Friday, September 24-26, this year, assumed national import, bringing as it did, the initial report of the Allied Information Department of National Allied, on its first buying poll; an address by Abram F. Myers, general counsel and chairman of the board of national Allied, giving personal indorsement to the consent decree, the first indication of how Allied stands in the matter; and an address by William F. Rodgers, M-G-M general sales manager, defending increased admissions on better pictures in face of New Jersey Allied's previously known position.

On the social side, the event of import was a testimonial banquet to Mr. Myers on Friday evening at the Hotel President.

The "AID" report on product buying was submitted by Sidney E. Samuelson, chairman of the committee and Allied business manager in Philadelphia, giving a recapitulation of hundreds of survey cards received from exhibitors operating in the 14 exchange centers thus far heard from.

The analysis showed that while the 1940-41 buying season had advanced into its fourth month, over 37 per cent of the exhibitors have yet to sign any contracts whatsoever for the new season. The percentage of each company's sales to the total number of contracts sold follows:

	Per Cent		Per Cent
Columbia	15	RKO	17
Metro	11	20th-Fox	15
Monogram	2.5	United Artists	7.7
Paramount	8	Universal	11.3
Republic	5	Vitagraph	7.5

An analysis of prices paid for flat rentals and guarantees for 1940-41 compared with last year, revealed the following:

	Paid Same or Less (Per Cent)	Paid More (Per Cent)	Question Not Answered (Per Cent)
Columbia	41	20	39
Metro	33	24	43
Monogram	58	18	24
Paramount	48	20	32
Republic	39	39	22
RKO	55	8	37
20th-Fox	46	17	37
United Artists	30	6	64
Universal	29	28	43
Vitagraph	52	24	24

One of the questions asked was the percentage of film rentals to gross receipts, which resulted in showing conclusively that more was being paid for film rentals in non-Allied territory than where exhibitors are organized in Allied units. The figures of percentage of film rentals to gross receipts on last year's contracts were said to be as follows:

	Allied (Per Cent)	Non-Allied (Per Cent)
Metro	38	41
Monogram	21	42
Paramount	35	38
Republic	29	33
RKO	40	45
20th-Fox	39	45
United Artists	37	38
Vitagraph	31	38

The high point in percentage of receipts paid for film rental was disclosed in a card received from a midwestern exhibitor in non-Allied territory, according to Mr. Samuelson, wherein he reported the following percentages of receipts paid for films: 20th Fox, 79 per cent; Universal, 58 per cent; Vitagraph, 53 per cent.

He remarked: "In a competitive town of this size (2,519), exhibitor has no choice or say in regard to price; producers state price and if you want to keep your theatre open, you pay what they ask, or they sell to the other house, even though you have been doing business with them for years." In several other instances, Mr. Samuelson reported, percentages were reported closely approximating that of the midwestern exhibitor.

The committee further expressed the feeling that Universal should deliver "Spring Parade" on the 1939-40 contract.

Republic was taken to task for withholding four Gene Autrys and two Roy Rogers Westerns, claimed to be sold on the 1939-40 contract.

Admission Increases Discussed

The question of the distributors' demands for increased admission prices on certain pictures was discussed at the convention at length. Reports were received from the floor that exhibitors who raised prices lost patronage on pictures played just before and after the raised box-office scale. The exhibitors declared they would not repeat the experience.

Correspondence and other information relating to "Arizona," which the exhibitors had reason to believe would be delivered on the 1939-40 contract and which it now appears Columbia will not deliver as expected, was discussed. As regards this picture, it was held that the general sales manager of Columbia was contacted in June and at that time AID received a letter from him which plainly implied that the picture would be delivered on the 1939-40 contract.

Another picture discussed was "Foreign Correspondent," which the committee, on the basis of present information, believes to be the same picture that was advertised and sold by United Artists under the title of "Personal History." The fact that the picure obviously was inspired by the book by Vincent Sheean, "Personal History," and was made by the same director and embodies the same actors in the cast, is regarded as conclusive on this point, Allied said.

An analysis of the deals sold by each company was made by the AID committee at the convention. A written detailed report will be sent to exhibitors participating in the survey. In addition to Mr. Samuelson, the AID committee comprises Arthur Howard, Boston; Don R. Rossiter, Indianapolis; P. J. Wood Columbus, and Abram F. Myers, counsel, Washington.

Non-Theatricals a Topic

The meeting turned to a discussion of the failure of the producers to control the showing of non-theatricals of 16 mm. reproductions of standard 35 mm. feature releases. A report on this subject was made by Mr. Rossiter, who forecast that failure by the distributors to remedy the situation would be followed by legislative action to regulate non-theatricals.

One of the big surprises of the convention was the stand taken by Mr. Myers on the consent decree in addressing the convention. It was only the day previous that Jack Kirsch, of Chicago, national Allied vice-president and head of Illinois Allied, had asked from the floor that Mr. Myers call an early meeting of Allied leaders to discuss the consent decree and iron out the problems that might arise, especially as a result of the blocks-of-five clause, which was attacked by Mr. Kirsch and other Allied delegates.

Mr. Myers reminded that with all its faults, the consent decree is a remedy for those exhibitors who can qualify. For others, he reminded that it is an experiment for only one season.

"Personally," he said, "I believe we should co-operate with it and derive the maximum of benefit it contains."

Mr. Myers pointed out, however, that Allied support of the consent decree depends on the board of directors. However, he intimated that he would not call a meeting of the board to discuss the decree until it is finally entered in its final form.

Against Blocks-of-Five

He advised exhibitors not to be "alarmed" by the blocks-of-five clause. "I don't want blocks of five" he said, " but if we have to have it, let's not wring our hands and lock our heads together; make the best of a bad bargain." He dispelled fears that the block system would leave exhibitors "hanging in air" for a continual run of product. "Whatever the demand, there will be product to meet it. No distributor will offer less than four or five blocks-of-five at a time."

Mr. Myers found the arbitration features of the decree most praiseworthy. "The system of arbitration as indicated in the decree is the best the industry has ever had or could ever hope to get," he said. "It's what Allied has always wanted."

Immediately following his address, the convention passed a resolution unanimously endorsing his stand on the consent decree.

Lee Newbury, of Manasquan, New Jersey Allied president, in calling the convention to order, posed various immediate problems of the industry for possible discussion on the floor, chiefly the consent decree and its blocks-of-five clause, poster rentals, 16 mm. showings, nickel-in-the-slot movie machines, triple and double features, "juggling" of admission prices, national defense taxes, radio's "Pot o' Gold" program and general picture selling problems.

JERSEY UNIT ASSAILS "PICTURE-SNATCHING"

"Picture snatching"—the practice of selling pictures and withholding them "by tricky contract clauses"—was condemned by Allied of New Jersey at its 21st annual convention in Atlantic City last week. The unit requested the directors of the National Allied States Association to "institute legal action wherever possible, to safeguard the rights of independent exhibitors, and compel delivery of such withheld pictures."

NICKEL MOVIES, DUALS, GAMES HIT

Slot machine movies were attacked, primarily because some of the franchises have fallen into the hands of "racketeers." However, it was admitted that nothing could be done about it by Allied unless the exhibitors went into the slot machine business themselves, which was not considered expedient at this time.

Jack Kirsch, of Chicago, led the attack against triple and dual features and theatre giveaways everything from "a butter plate to an automobile." He felt that the coming year would find a curtailment of the practices, what with the foreign situation and conscription making it unprofitable to continue premiums, giveaways and doubles with the result that exhibitors will be forced to return to their first calling —"show business."

Seek Tax Exemptions

At the regional conference a move was made to ask the United States Internal Revenue Bureau to grant tax exemptions on tickets for cut-rate movie shows presented to soldiers at theatres near the draft and National Guard training camps. Francis Lydon, regional vice-president from Boston, said some theatres near such camps are giving special soldiers' show at 20-cents admission.

The nominating committee for the election of officers and directors included George Gold, Newark; David Snaper, New Brunswick; Irving Dollinger, Linden; Harry K. Hecht, Passaic; Helen B. Hildinger, Trenton; Ralph Wilkins, Pitman; and Sidney E. Samuelson, Philadelphia. The resolutions committee comprised Harry E. Lowenstein, Maury Miller, Morris Spewack and Jacob Unger. The election of officers and directors, scheduled for Friday's session, was postponed until 15 days after January 1, 1941.

Manufacturers and distributors having exhibits at the trade show included American Seating, RCA Manufacturing, Kroehler Manufacturing, National Screen Service, National Theatre Supply, Heywood-Wakefield, Dennis Games, C. Cretors, Sanitary Automatic Candy, Penn State Supply Co., M-G-M and Universal.

Rodgers Asks Cooperation

A departure from usual Allied convention procedure, William F. Rodgers, general sales manager for MGM, addressed the conclave, preceding Commissioner Myers' talk. Defending his company's "Boom Town" practice of increased admissions for special pictures as a means of increasing picture revenue, Mr. Rodgers warned that unless new avenues of revenue are discovered, exhibitors must face either a general increase in buying terms or a fall down in the quality of product.

"The present and future of the industry is at stake," he said, calling for a more sympathetic understanding of each other's problems. "It is your problem, just as much as it is ours."

Deploring the fact that Allied has passed resolutions attacking his increased admission proposals, Mr. Rodgers asked that the association reconsider its action. "You can't expect the same values from us or any other producer without us making an effort to offset the losses from foreign markets," he said. "We have proven that price 'juggling' is an avenue for more revenue. We tried and tested it first before asking the exhibitors to cooperate."

Promising that Metro would not withhold any dates on exhibitors who had not cooperated in the "Boom Town" campaign, he asked that exhibitors go along with the company by giving pictures extended playing time when needed and occasional increases in admission "if deserved," pointing out that as in the case of "Boom Town," all requests for increased admissions will be based on facts and not on theories, all to be tried and tested first by the company.

Mr. Rodgers promised also that in spite of the trying times, production budgets would not be limited. "Though we are dedicated to the practice of economy in these times," he said, "there will be no economy at the sacrifice of quality." At the same time, he defended Hollywood salaries, saying that "genius needs encouragement." Adding that every producer is trying to give the public the best form of entertainment, he said, "but the exhibitors must cooperate and not fight the distributors."

He also deplored the fact that the industry is continually being criticized "from within" and minimized the results of the many polls taken at random as not being indicative of the "public pulse."

"It's not strange that theatre attendance has fallen down. But it is absurd to say that double features are to blame."

Competitive Factors Cited

He pointed out that the fall in attendance is only because other competitive factors are increasingly becoming more important, singling out dog racing, bingo, night baseball and radio. To offset these factors, he called upon the exhibitors to apply the principles of showmanship in selling pictures. "Discard the old set-up," he said. "What we need today is 'streamline presentation'."

Mr. Rodgers said it was erroneous to blame the distributor for the dual feature situation, reminding that it was the exhibitor and not the distributor that started the practice.

"If it is to be discontinued, the exhibitors must do it. The distributor can't. They never encouraged it or started it. Nor do they advocate it. We will encourage elimination. We don't believe in it, but the problem is for the exhibitor, the distributor can't help out."

Mr. Rodgers said that "Boom Town" would be singled at all subsequent Loew runs only in New York because turn-over is desired, but that single situation won't affect the general problem.

Touching on the consent decree, Mr. Rodgers said that if it is signed, it will be respected by M-G-M.

"We have no ideas of selling pictures on an auction block, but will do it only if compelled."

In addition to Mr. Rodgers, other Metro executives attending the session included Henderson N. Richey, assistant to Mr. Rodgers in charge of exhibitor relations; Thomas F. Connors, Eastern and Southern division sales manager; and Ted O'Shea, Eastern district manager.

Wisconsin Exhibitors Discuss Film Buying

Film buying for the new season was to be the principal topic of discussion at the annual convention at Milwaukee, of the Independent Theatres Protective Association. Deals for 1940-1941 product are said to be lagging, in this territory, according to exhibitors.

Sidney E. Samuelson, chairman of AID, Allied film buying information service and business manager of the Pennsylvania unit, was expected to outline a proposed plan of action and to furnish data on the various company's sales policies and pictures. Charles W. Trampe was arrangements chairman.

In previous years, it had been proposed that a buying combine be formed by Wisconsin and upper Michigan. The late Edward F. Maertz, former president of the organization, was a prime mover in this.

With an attendance more than a half a thousand strong, the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers opened their autumn season Wednesday at the Hotel Edison in New York with a luncheon in honor of Martin Quigley and his twenty-fifth anniversary as an editor and publisher in the screen industry.

It was an occasion of speech making, opening with the singing of The Star Spangled Banner and closing with a happy New Year greeting from the publisher.

The program ran the gamut from the incidental and inevitable persiflage of a motion picture gathering to serious reference, rather than discussion, of poignant aspects of the world scene.

In addition to the attendance of the representative showmen in New York, there were messages from the stars and executives of Hollywood and many others in transit and overseas.

Bamberger Presides

Leon J. Bamberger, president of the AMPA, presided and presented the keynote of the occasion, with attentions to a dais decorated by the attendance of the editors and publishers of the whole of the press of the motion picture industry, and a field of luncheon guests filled with personages. The speakers included also Terry Ramsaye and Howard Dietz, especially concerned with introduction of Mr. Quigley. Coincidentally, Leo, Jr., a lion cub, appeared in person, relevant, it was said, to the trade mark of a motion picture concern with which Mr. Dietz is connected.

The more serious note of the function came from Mr. Quigley, speaking by, for and out of his quarter century of journalistic service to the screen, its people and its business.

Cites Free Press

Most importantly the publisher of MOTION PICTURE HERALD recorded the position of the press of the motion picture as a free press.

"Those who have been in positions of authority in this business," he remarked, "have always been kindly, helpful, and tolerant toward any publication which demonstrated that it had the best interests of the industry in mind.

"I have never," observed Mr. Quigley, "indulged in any illusion that I was running anybody's affairs but my own. But as to my editorial efforts I have indulged in the precise conviction that the job I had to do could best be done by myself and my associates and no one else.

"I have always recognized that the reason for my editorial existence was to render a service in support of, in promotion of, and in defense of the motion picture and the industry. With no authority whatever for the position, I have always construed any attack on the motion picture or the industry as an attack on me and my work.

"I do not undertake to say that I have advocated only the best and opposed only the worst—but for better or for worse, what has been done, has been done with honesty and sincerity of purpose.

"In these twenty-five years I have received not only cooperation but hearty encouragement on every scheme proposed for the betterment of the motion picture and the business."

As Mr. Quigley spoke he discovered in the sea of faces before him Adolph Zukor, man, name and symbol of the forwarding forces of the motion picture through those same twenty-five years marked by the occasion.

Recalls Cooperation

"I give you Mr. Zukor," said Mr. Quigley, "as the factual and symbolic leadership of those years and of the many since. He is of the type of industry executive with whom I have sought to work, and have worked, through this quarter of a century, and from whom I have had hearty cooperation in all matters aimed at betterment of the motion picture and its industry.

"I commend Adolph Zukor and his type as an example and an encouragement to the younger members of the industry."

Mr. Dietz, introduced by Mr. Bamberger, to introduce Mr. Quigley, discussed MGM's profitable investment in space in the advertising pages of Quigley publications, something considerably upwards of a million dollars in just a few years, took in the international situation in several aspects, paid off Herr Hitler, told another Goldwyn story —same of which Mr. Dietz was the inventor—and presented Mr. Quigley with many compliments, renewed assurance of continued high esteem and a large box containing a small lion, which was overdue to go back to mamma for lunch.

In the course of his remarks Mr. Dietz generously referred to the unbiased nature of the writings of Mr. Ramsaye, who had earlier spoken. Mr. Ramsaye, after discussing the permanency of the policy of the publisher and his Herald, spoke, with the authority of a founder, of some facts of AMPA history, along with the assertion that it "was organized with an intention of making it possible to distinguish between a press agent and an executive."

"That," the speaker said, "is still impossible unless one has access to the payroll."

Quotes Early Expressions

Also the editor of the HERALD explored a bit the earliest expressions of the publisher, citing that in 1915, only a few weeks out, the Martin Quigley policy included an argument for decency as a defense against censorship; a contention that exhibition should invite the customers to come in at the beginning of the picture; and insistence that propaganda, especially in election years, should not appear on the amusement screen; also some support for Samuel Goldwyn's notion—1915 mind you—that overproduction was a menace.

Debated Prices, Runs

Also Mr. Quigley debated a contention by Marcus Loew that 25 cents was a proper top price for the movies. Mr. Quigley's editorial contending for longer runs for better pictures in 1916 was cited. In his own whimsical manner Mr. Ramsaye observed that posthumous answer on both prices and runs had been made by Mr. Loew in the case of "Gone With the Wind"—for the picture but not for the industry.

STAGE SET FOR COURT SHOWDOWN ON THAT FEDERAL CONSENT DECREE

Late Negotiations Over 'Minor' Points Bring Possible Postponement of Monday Deadline; Arbitration Machinery Set Up

At midweek, it appeared that the consent decree might not be ready for presentation to Judge Henry W. Goddard on Monday, October 7th, when the hearing on the anti-trust suit against the majors was scheduled to reopen and a postponement of a week or ten days was expected to be requested, Government attorneys said Tuesday in New York. However, attorneys for both sides agreed late Wednesday to work towards formal approval of the "final draft" by week-end.

The Government men working on the case and attorneys for the five major companies had agreed on nearly all points and there has been no basic change since the August 3rd draft. The last few weeks have been spent in putting the proposal in legal terms so that the proposed decree may be submitted to the court.

Conference in Washington

Minor difference on matters of phraseology on several points have developed and these have been responsible for some of the delay. Also a conference of industry and government lawyers has been scheduled for the end of the week in Washington when the final legal draft is presented to the Department of Justice officials.

One or two representatives of each of the five consenting companies were to meet with Attorney General Robert H. Jackson, Thurman W. Arnold and members of the anti-trust department at the end of the week. The industry representatives were to be named on Wednesday.

It was reported that it was still possible to have the decree ready for submission to Judge Goddard Monday, if both sides quickly reached complete agreement. However, Government attorneys said Tuesday that copies of the final draft would be sent to exhibitor representatives throughout the country in advance of the hearing to give them time to study the document and prepare to present their views at the hearings if they so desire and the court permits.

Exhibitors who have been especially interested in the negotiations will also be invited to the hearing, a Government spokesman said. He added that Judge Goddard would be supplied with a draft of the decree in advance of the court hearing so that he may familiarize himself with its provisions.

With final agreement between the five companies and the Department of Justice officials on all points not possible before the end of the week, it was said that both parties would probably ask Judge Goddard for a short postponement.

Waiver in Preamble

The proposed consent decree now has a preamble which declares that nothing in the decree can be construed as an admission of guilt or of violation of the anti-trust laws. This is to prevent, it was said, the possibility of triple damage suits being brought against the companies under the decree.

The arbitration code which is a part of the proposed consent decree has been approved in general by the Government attorneys working on the case and industry officials. The arbitration machinery was drafted with the cooperation of the American Arbitration Association which will be in charge of the set-up, if the decree is approved.

The Association has begun a survey of its arbitrators in the 33 exchange districts to determine what members will be eligible for service in the special motion picture panel of arbitrators. All those who have or ever had any connection with the motion picture industry will not be allowed to act in the arbitration machinery established by the proposed consent decree.

Preparing Budget

A budget of estimated operating expenses is also being prepared by the Association for submission to Judge Goddard. The Association will be in charge of all arbitration under the decree, even to hiring office space and paying clerical help in the 33 exchange districts. The costs, which must be approved by the court, will be met by an assessment on each of the consenting companies and the nominal filing fees required when arbitration is requested.

A large number of groups, including United Artists, Columbia, the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, may ask the court's permission to testify against the proposed decree when a hearing is called, probably about the middle of October.

United Artists and Columbia, acting individually, have been considering what legal steps they may take to oppose the decree. The escape provision requires that those companies and Universal must be brought under the terms of the decree within a limited time or the other five companies can give up the trade showings and limit of blocks-of-five.

A conspiracy to force United Artists and Columbia and Universal to become parties to the decree to their possible injury and that discrimination or compulsion against the non-consenting companies is implied in the decree, may be alleged at the court hearing. Last week the United Artists board of directors considered what action, if any, should be taken.

Universal, it was reported, after a study of the legal points involved, concluded that the company had no standing in the decree procedure and for the present, at least, it does not contemplate opposition to the decree at a court hearing.

The MPTOA, according to its president, Ed Kuykendall, is prepared to intervene as a friend of the court to oppose adoption of the proposed consent decree. Mr. Kuykendall, speaking Monday in St. Louis at a meeting the MPTO of Eastern Missouri and Southern Illinois, said the consent decree was "something concocted by Government and producers' lawyers, and it's hot and they want to put it down somewhere."

The local organization adopted a resolution condemning parts of the proposed decree, particularly the block-of-five clause and the arbitration proposals.

Mr. Kuykendall suggested a provision that pictures could not be sold more than six months in advance of release instead of the blocks-of-five clause. He also said that there should be some kind of a cancellation privilege.

Although United Artists and Columbia officials were considering action in opposition to the decree Government representatives said Tuesday that they did not think those companies had any standing in the decree proceedings which would let them oppose the decree in court.

The Co-operative Theatres of Michigan, representing over 100 independent houses in that state has opposed the decree not only because of their objections to the "Blocks of 5" provision but because "the decree brings none of the relief that was sought by the independent theatre owners of the country both in the Neely bill and in the code proceedings."

The group forwarded a letter to Mr. Arnold in which it claimed that most of the points which the organization approved at the Neely Bill hearings last Spring "are completely left out of the decree," and that "the independent exhibitor will not obtain the desired relief." An appeal was also sent to the members of the House Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee to persuade Mr. Arnold and Mr. Jackson not to accept the decree. Another letter was sent directly to Judge Goddard, asking for an opportunity to present their objections to the court.

The board of directors of the Kansas-Missouri Theatre Association passed a resolution Tuesday holding that the block-of-five clause was "disastrous to exhibitors." The resolution was sent to Mr. Arnold.

Poll Shows 92.4% Opposed

In a test poll conducted by Motion Picture Daily of independent and affiliated exhibitors 92.4 per cent of the theatremen canvassed voted against the blocks-of-five proposal and in favor of the present system. Only 7.6 per cent favored the decree small block proposal.

The independents voted more strongly for the suggested system than did the affiliated theatres, the vote being 13.8 per cent and 5.2 per cent.

In conducting the test poll Motion Picture Daily sent a questionnaire to exhibitors who were requested to check their preferences of the following: (a) The existing system of block booking with the right to cancel a fixed percentage of pictures; (b) The plan of the proposed consent decree for the sale of pictures in blocks-of-five without cancellation.

Some of the showmen expressed opinions favoring other systems than either the present, or that suggested in the consent decree. Many wanted cancellation of from 20 per cent to 25 per cent. The Government's selling plan some voters thought might be acceptable if a cancellation clause were included.

"WHO DID THIS?" KUYKENDALL ASKS

"No one has openly taken credit" for the selling-in-blocks-of-five provision of the consent decree so assailed by exhibitors, Edward L. Kuykendall, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, says in the October organization bulletin. "Who is responsible for this consent decree?" he asks. "In all of the long years of negotiations on trade practice matters, not once was this selling scheme suggested by the distributors."

Mr. Kuykendall recommends that the Justice Department listen to the exhibitor, and says anent the arbitration provisions of the decree, "We are dubious . . . but are quite willing to give it a fair trial. . . . Many things can happen before the decree in its present form receives final approval."

"ME MARRY YOU?..

MAJORS CONTINUE SILENT ON SALES TO CIRCUITS, ANNOUNCING ONLY 85

Trust Suit Negotiations Factor in Delaying Season; Large Circuits Reported Asking for Long Term Deals as Insurance

Major distributors, with few exceptions, continue to hold back on trade announcements of 1940-41 circuit deals. With new season selling moving into its fourth month, only 85 circuit contracts have been reported negotiated to date.

Circuit selling, and all new season's selling for that matter, has been at record low, but even so, only a small percentage of buying has been reported. Some indications of the dearth in sales may be gleaned from the report made public last Thursday by National Allied, that fully 37 per cent of all independents surveyed in a special investigation, have not made any purchases, and much greater numbers have yet to purchase full requirements. Allied's report appears on page 15.

Selling Season Late

This year the regular selling season was late in getting under way, chiefly because circuit operators were not anxious to sign up until they knew more about the trust suit consent decree and because the executives of distributing companies did not want to encumber the negotiations.

The question of what part American exhibitors are to play in helping distributors make up revenue losses suffered abroad has been another factor in delaying contract arrangements this year.

In the case of a few the companies, notably MGM, the selling problem has not been as great as some years because the company has a number of term contracts with leading circuits which did not expire this season.

As "insurance" against the block of five clause and other provisions of the consent decree a number of large circuits throughout the country were reported to have signed three-year franchises with Universal and Columbia. United Artists, it was said, also has received requests from circuit operators for franchise deals but up to the present that company has not negotiated such arrangements, it was reported. Some exhibitors feel that there may be a product shortage or an uncertain film market when the proposed consent decree begins to operate and the effort is being made to line-up a good supply of pictures for a long term.

Three Year Deals

At MGM, it was disclosed that most of the country's major circuits had completed deals with the company for 1940-1941, with only two exceptions. It was pointed out by a sales representative many of the deals were for three years, having gone into effect last year.

A representative of Universal said that, due to the pressure of work, no list of circuit deals had been drawn up. United Artists, Paramount, Warner Brothers and Twentieth Century-Fox reported that no list was available or contemplated. Also Columbia has made no announcements of signed circuit deals.

Northwest Allied, headed by E. L. Peaslee, president, has been urging that exhibitors in that territory delay signing new contracts until certain points have been cleared up. Mr. Peaslee and Sam Lebedoff, secretary, conferred two weeks ago with William F. Rodgers, MGM sales manager and H. M. Richey, exhibitor contact man, in Chicago.

GENERAL INCREASES "ILL-ADVISED"—RODGERS

A general increase in admissions is not the way to make up revenue lost abroad, William F. Rodgers, general sales manager of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, told more than 200 exhibitors Tuesday at a luncheon held at the Hotel Warwick in Philadelphia.

"You must expect that the distributors will have to make up somehow the loss of foreign markets but the answer is not in a general increase in admissions," Mr. Rodgers said.

"Boom Town," he added, would not be withheld from exhibitors who will not make the increase in admission scales asked. Thomas J. Connors, Eastern, Southern and Canadian sales manager, and Robert Lynch, Philadelphia branch manager, explained in detail the company's position on "Boom Town."

West Coast Theatre Pushes Single Bill Policy, Uses 17 Films for 52 Weeks

A theatre success story based on solid exploitation of single bills is exemplified in the experience of the United Artists Theatre in San Francisco.

During the past year Charles Schlaifer, advertising manager, stretched a mere 17 films into 52 weeks of business that well exceeded the previous year's figures. Throughout the year the ad copy, both on the screen and in newspapers, used the slogan, "Everyone knows big pictures always play single bills".

How well the public reacted to the campaign was illustrated when the new season was officially opened recently. A long screen trailer, which thanked the audience for its "discriminating" patronage, and then listed outstanding films scheduled for the coming season, was applauded at every showing. The trailer made the inference that everyone wanted single features with the line, "Entertainment as you like it, with pictures so big we present single features exclusively".

Although the theatre's price scale is slightly above that of double feature houses, the campaign throughout the past year concentrated on the "big pictures always play single bills" angle and more than held its own.

A novelty which has become an important part of the drive is a mythical character called "U. A. Charlie", a cartoon creation of Mr. Schlaifer's which appears in corners of ad copy with timely quotes on films. Campaign was also sold in stories, radio coverage, and lobby displays.

One of the most successful campaigns plotted by Mr. Schlaifer was for "Rebecca", which ran nine weeks. Copy on this is now being used by 50 theatres in the deep south.

Although it bears the name United Artists, the house is independently owned and operated by Herman Cohen, taking its name from the exclusive tieup which limits it to the limited U. A. product.

Paramount Theatre Loses Sign Case

The Hercules Theatre Corporation, operator of the Paramount theatre, on Broadway, this week was fined $50 in municipal court in New York for failing to get a city permit last April and pay a fee for a sign advertising the film "Dr. Cyclops."

The question in the suit, which may affect the licensing of thousands of other advertising signs in the city, was whether the 18 by 36 foot "Dr. Cyclops" sign was "illuminated" or not. The annual fee for an illuminated sign from five to 30 feet square is $3, and for a sign 31 by 50 feet square, $5. Each additional square foot costs ten cents each.

The "Dr. Cyclops" sign was lit by floodlights placed on the roof of the Paramount marquee, 45 feet from the sign itself. It had no electric bulbs or wiring on the sign itself. The theatre corporation contended that since the sign was not self-illuminating the owner should not be required to pay the fees charged for a self-illuminating sign.

WARNERS EXTEND ROCKNE CAMPAIGN; MGM REPORTS HIGH 'BAND' GROSSES

Premiere of Football Hero's Life in Four Theatres in South Bend Climaxes National, State, and Local Celebrations

The four-theatre world premiere of Warner Brothers' "Knute Rockne—All American" at South Bend, Indiana, was the chief event of the National Knute Rockne Week celebrations held this week. Governor M. Clifford Townsend of Indiana issued an official proclamation designating the September 29th-October 5th period as Knute Rockne Week and invited the governors of the nation's forty-seven other states to do the same. The Governors of Kansas, Florida, Massachusetts, Georgia, New York, Iowa, Delaware, Louisiana, Ohio, Tennessee, Illinois, Oklahoma and Washington, issued similar proclamations and the heads of several other States indicated they would do likewise.

Film Stars Attend

Mayor Jesse I. Pavey of South Bend set aside Friday, October 4th as a civic holiday and appointed a citizens' committee to direct the week of activities preceding the premiere. A group of Hollywood stars, lead by Pat O'Brien who plays Rockne in the film, were to be present for the three final days of the celebration.

Functions scheduled in addition to the premiere at the State, Colfax, Palace and Granada theatres included a banquet at the University of Notre Dame dining hall, a grand ball, the opening Notre Dame football game of the season, with Coach Amos Alonzo Stagg's College of the Pacific Team. The Federation of Post Office Clerks has thanked Pat O'Brien and Warner Brothers for scenes in the film which show the diginity of that profession.

"DICTATOR" KEY CITY POLICY LIKE "WIND"

"The Great Dictator," Charles Chaplin film which is to have its premiere at the Astor and Capitol theatres in New York October 15, like "Gone With the Wind," will be shown simultaneously in two theatres in other key cities, Murray Silverstone, head of United Artists' operations, announced last weekend. Negotiations are being conducted by Harry L. Gold and L. J. Schlaifer, vice-presidents and sales managers, for two theatres in Chicago, Los Angeles and San Francisco. The same policy is also being considered for other cities including Boston, Philadelphia, Cleveland, Cincinnati, Buffalo and Atlanta.

Mr. Silverstone said Tuesday that there would be no screenings, official or unofficial, of the Chaplin picture before the October 15th openings. He added that United Artists executives themselves would see the film for the first time that night.

United Artists is planning to release "The Great Dictator" in England at once. This action has been decided on even though the new monetary agreement with the British government has not been negotiated yet.

MGM Reports High Grosses On "Strike Up the Band"

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer reported that "Strike Up the Band" has broken records set by the previous Mickey Rooney-Judy Garland film, "Babes in Arms" in twelve of its initial key city engagements. It was also announced that grosses on the film everywhere exceeded those of other MGM films as "Andy Hardy Meets Debutante," "Northwest Passage," "Boys Town" and "The Women."

Over last week-end "Strike Up the Band" at the Capitol, New York, played to SRO, MGM reported and business for the first two days of the engagement was 383 percent of normal with lines formed both days long before the doors were scheduled to open.

Mickey Rooney this week is appearing in opposition to the film in New York. He has been making personal appearances at Loew's State in a stage presentation called "Andy Hardy's Revue." It was announced that a new all-time box office record for that theatre may be set this week.

FROM READERS

SEES MENACE IN HIGH RENTALS

To the Editor of the Herald:

Why do we small town exhibitors, in towns of less than 1,000 population let the film salesmen high pressure us for high film rentals, too excessive to operate under? How much longer are we going to last unless we do something about it?

We have read in the trade journals in the recent past about the distributors losing the European market and then, a few days later, we read again: "More playing time, increased film rentals to compensate for losses" and "Request increases in admission prices" on certain pictures. . . . A certain distributor made a picture that was roadshown over the entire nation at increased admissions, thereby establishing a precedent that, to their idea, each and every one of their pictures now shall be shown at increased admissions. . . .

The Government, according to the trade journals, is getting nowhere fast in their anti-trust suits. Maybe the blocks of five system will be OK and maybe not. As far as I can fathom it, the film costs will be prohibitive in small towns under 1,000 population. Too many trips by salesmen . . . too many trips to the distributing point by the exhibitor. . . . So we go on relief or to the army.

This . . . quoting by distributors of what box office results are made in key towns is a laugh. . . . Did you ever read what any little town, say of three or four hundred, did on any picture? No, for we are only a drop in the bucket singly, but we are what runs over when the bucket is full after the distributor owned houses play their pictures. . . .

It isn't the key towns that make the overage profit for the distributors and the extremely high salaried stars. It's the small towners, and the sooner we realize that fact and do something about it the better off we will be in the future.

With no idea of conspiracy—a layoff from buying wouldn't hurt half so much at the end of a year as repeated high rentals. . . .

There are some companies that are swell to deal with, one would want no better relations, but why, oh why, can't we get together and let the tough companies sit on the shelf a while? We are the core and without the core there can never be any fruit.

District organizations can solve the problem in each state for there is a saturation point, and, believe me, I'm plenty saturated. . . .

F. & M. ROADSHOW PLAN ABANDONED; JOHN BALABAN SEES PROFIT IN DUALS

St. Louis Circuit Drops Higher Admission Policy but Will Retain Single Bills; Chicago Operator Stresses Necessity

Fanchon & Marco's experiment in St. Louis of presenting selected motion pictures at increased admission as a solution for the double bill problem was declared unsuccessful this week, in so far as the higher admission and semi-road-show presentation was concerned, and was abandoned. Single features, however, will be continued.

Lasted Five Weeks

Five-weeks ago the experiment was inaugurated at the Ambassador theatre, downtown first run. Under the plan the special feature was shown continuously until 6:00 P. M. and then there was one all reserved seat showing beginning at 8:30 P. M. Price scales were 35 cents, 50 cents and 75 cents, the latter for the reserved seats. The experiment started on Friday, August 23d, at the 3,108 seat house.

After the new policy had been announced a number of independent exhibitors protested because part of the plan called for increased clearance on account of the roadshow prices.

The Fanchon & Marco announcement of the policy said it was inaugurated "in direct response to industry-wide discussion concerning the retention or abolishment of double-feature programs and the need for American exhibitors to assist in making up the shrunken revenue of distributors' foreign markets."

Henry C. Arthur, Jr., general manager for Fanchon & Marco, said the experiment had been successful up to the point of admission prices and he found these were unacceptable to St. Louis patrons. However, he added that the reports of theatregoers concerning the single bill policy were so gratifying that the policy would be maintained.

Although only what were considered outstanding attractions were presented during the five week experiment not one of the weeks produced an average business which compared with average business under the old admission price top of 56 cents. Both the reserve seat policy and the single showing at night have been abandoned. The scale now is 28 cents, 39 cents, 44 cents and 56 cents with no reserved seats and continuous showings.

Balaban on Doubles

John Balaban, in charge of operations of Balaban & Katz, said last week in Chicago, "Today in spite of the polls that seem to indicate a majority of people are against double features, our theatres are operating at a profit. Therefore from a sound economic point of view it would be foolish for us to abolish a program that is bringing in a profit."

"But the question of profit is not the only matter we have to consider with double features. There is the question of product. Until such time as conditions in the industry, and by that I mean of course, when the producers start making fewer and better pictures, preclude the showing of doubles then of course we may take steps to eliminate this type of program," he added.

"We are faced with a problem that does not confront any other exhibitor in Chicago," Mr. Balaban continued. "We have theatres which have more than three thousand seats. When these theatres were built an entirely different type of entertainment was in vogue. Live talent, lavish stage productions and other acts were an essential part of each program. Therefore in a sense these theatres were providing double feature value—a lavish stage production augmented by acts and the feature picture. When vaudeville was discontinued because of changing conditions it became necessary to provide a type of entertainment that would assure us a reasonable return on our investments. The result was the inauguration of double features," he concluded.

"DOWNTOWN NIGHT" IN KANSAS CITY

Every Thursday from now until Christmas will be "Downtown Night" in Kansas City, with merchants and theatremen cooperating in a promotional effort to encourage people to go downtown at night. First-run managers report that the first such promotion helped business and that they are running screen announcements to help the idea along. Free parking for those making purchases or attending theatres is being arranged, according to E. C. Rhoden, Fox Midwest Theatres, who is a member of the Downtown Committee.

Single Trial in Wisconsin

Heralded by front page publicity and an editorial in the local press a single feature policy has been inaugurated at the Fox theatre at Stevens Point, Wis., for a one-month trial period.

The Stevens Point Daily Journal pointed out that one of the chief arguments for motion pictures in their early days over the stage shows was their brevity. "As time went on the masters of the industry gave more and more in quantity. They took into consideration what foreign customers, who became an important part of their patronage, wanted. Today the European market is out. Producers must pay sole attention to what American patrons prefer. There has been much complaint of the too-long, double-feature program," the paper said.

In connection with the single feature policy announcement Myron A. Neumann, manager, promoted a full page of congratulatory messages from local merchants. First pictures to play on the single policy were "Rhythm on the River" and "Brigham Young." The Fox circuit's Lyric, the only other theatre in the town, continues its double bill policy.

Erwin Koenigsreiter, operator of the Greendale theatre in Greendale, Wis., Federal low-cost housing project, has inaugurated a single feature policy on Tuesday and Wednesday nights and has dropped the admission to 15 cents for adults on those nights.

Schine Theatres Resume Doubles

The Schine theatres in Rochester have given up the single feature policy tested with "All This, and Heaven Too" and "Andy Hardy Meets Debuntante," it was reported. The theatres regularly play double bills.

Theatre-Bakery Tieup Set

The Park, a subsequent run double feature house at Mansfield, Ohio, has completed a tie-up with the H & M Bakery Company, in which the theatre accepts five bread wrappers and one paid ticket for two admissions to any Thursday showing. Patrons may have the wrappers redeemed for a ticket at designated grocery stores, if desired.

Fay's Increases Admissions

The Fay's Theatre in Providence has put into effect a slight increase in admissions. The house plays first run action films, principally, and the prices are slightly above those asked at second run theatres. The new scale is as follows: to 5 P. M., 33 cents downstairs and 20 cents, balcony; evenings and Saturdays and Sundays, 39 cents and 25 cents.

NORRISH, BEATTY HEAD CANADA SCREEN NEWS

Dominion's Oldest Film Enterprise Cooperating with Government on Propaganda Films

by COLIN R. HAWORTH in Montreal

Reorganization of Associated Screen News, Ltd., Montreal, Canada's oldest surviving picture production enterprise was announced Saturday, September 28th, with Bernard E. Norrish, founder of the company and present managing director, becoming president. Sir Edward Beatty, G. B. E., K. C., chairman and president of the Canadian Pacific Railway, has been elected to the board of directors.

Entered Films in 1917

Graduating from Queen's University with his Master of Science degree Ben Norrish joined the Dominion Water Power Branch of the Federal Department of the Interior. He was appointed administration engineer in 1910 and chief draughtsman in 1913. Mr. Norrish—known as Ben from his initials—first entered motion pictures when he was given charge of exhibits and the publicity bureau of the Department of Trade and Commerce at Ottawa in 1917.

Early Canadian films produced by Mr. Norrish were distributed as "scenics" on the General Film Company's program entered through the Essanay Film Company of Chicago.

About 1920, having successfully presented pictorial films on the visit of the then Prince of Wales, Mr. Norrish quit the government and organized Associated Screen News as a branch of a United States company and in 1926, with the backing of Canadian Pacific Railway he organized the Canadian company as it now stands, becoming managing director.

When Mr. Norrish left, the government releases slowed up and eventually only a very low schedule was kept. Screen News, however, went ahead making commercial subjects, newsreels, travelogues and short features.

Since the outbreak of war last September Associated Screen News has been working with both the National Film Board and the Canadian Government Motion Picture Bureau at Ottawa, turning out propaganda and war films.

In recent months Mr. Norrish has discussed with at least one British-born Hollywood director, the possibility of using Screen News' Montreal studios for major productions. At present Mr. Norrish's west-end studio is being used by Ortus Films, Ltd., of London, for interiors of "The 49th Parallel," the first full length feature picture to be shot in Canada in three years. Producer Michael Powell and crew returned to Montreal last week after filming the last few outdoor sequences on "The 49th Parallel" in the Arctic wastes.

Ortus has been at work on the picture for about three months, shooting outdoor sequences across Canada from coast to coast and to date Mr. Powell reports the film is but one week behind schedule.

From Montreal the party will sail for England to finish off the last few scenes in British studios where Leslie Howard is awaiting them. Raymond Massey, who starred in most of the Canadian footage, is in Montreal, his role still needing completing while Elizabeth Bergner, whose part was all played in outdoor scenes, has returned to Hollywood.

Asked by MOTION PICTURE HERALD whether he would consider finishing the picture in Montreal rather than in daily-bombed London, Mr. Powell said that if other British companies could carry on throughout air raids he could too. Emeric Pressburger, who wrote the story, is with the party in Montreal.

The picture deals with a Nazi submarine wrecked on the coast of Hudson's Bay and the reactions of the crew to the democratic way of life.

Ortus Films is a new British company formed by John Sutro, London financial magnate. Both British and Canadian governments are said to be aiding in the production, whether financially or not is not known. The British Government, however, aided in waiving money export regulations to permit the making of the picture in Canada and the Canadian Government has helped in several respects, even to loaning R.C.A.F. planes for certain sequences. The British Government is also believed to have eased quota restrictions for this 90 per cent North American-made film.

Raymond Massey, commenting on the possibility of developing a Canadian film industry, expressed great hope at the idea. The people of the United States, he said, are eager to learn more about Canadians. "Not propaganda, but straight essential facts about Canadian life and background. They don't want to hear about Indians and Mounties—they're all baritones anyway. But the real story of Canada, properly presented, would do much to link the two countries in the matter of thought and would also be a wonderful tool for smashing some of the insidious Nazi propaganda about Canada which is prevalent in the United States."

Said Mr. Massey, who is himself a Canadian: "I hope that Canada will be able to build up a significant film industry and that we can use some of our Canadian history for motion pictures. We have some magnificent and colorful history and it should provide marvelous film material. Perhaps after the war, a good proportion of British film interests will come here permanently."

Canadian Pioneers To Meet In Toronto November 11th

The first annual meeting of the Canadian Picture Pioneers will be held in Toronto November 11th with Claire Hague presiding. Immediately following the convention, the Pioneers with stage their Patriotic Rodeo in the Toronto Coliseum, featuring Gene Autry for two days, November 12th and 13th. Autry has donated his services for this show, the proceeds for which will be devoted to war charities.

Regional branches of the Pioneers have been organized at Montreal and St. John, to complete the setup in eastern Canada, while a branch has been formed at Vancouver for British Columbia. The society is sponsoring t Canadian Motion Picture Industry's War Services Committee, which has been cooperating with the Canadian Red Cross in the latter's financial appeal.

Other Canadian Developments

The Allied Exhibitors of Nova Scotia held its annual convention Wednesday at the Nova Scotian Hotel in Halifax. W. H. Cuzner, proprietor of the Strand, Sydney Mines, president, and T. J. Courtney, Casino theatre, Halifax, secretary-treasurer, handled arrangements for the meeting, which concerned itself principally with plans for more active participation in war work.

The Garrick, Halifax, N. S., concentrating on pictures for several years, but formerly offering vaudeville, dramatic stock and travelling shows, is back in the Famous Players Canadian lineup. A. I. Garson, of St. John, N. B., a real estate promoter, has been announced as the purchaser of the Garrick building from the Canadian Bank of Commerce, and he planned on making his first appearance as an exhibitor there.

The building had been offered to Famous Players Canadian by the bank which was eager to sell but the circuit wished to continue only the lease, then expiring. After considerable maneuvers the situation was clarified by Mr. Garson leasing the Garrick to Famous Players.

When Gracie Fields, English screen comedienne, was presenting her 48th concert in behalf of the Navy League of Canada, in the Capitol, St. John, N. B., the Empire, about 150 yards away, was offering "Smiling Along," starring Miss Fields. The booking was for two days, the day before the concert and the concert day. The reaction from the publicity over the concert drew heavy business to the Empire. The Capitol is in the Famous Players circuit and the Empire is operated by Demerson & Vassis, of St. John.

The Toronto Government has decided to impose a license fee on all marquees based on the area covered by the projections at the rate of 25 cents per square foot, payable annually.

Along with 12 other nations of North and South America, Canada will cooperate in the coming season in the "School of the Air c the Americas," according to the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation.

The series of broadcasts is designed to give nations of the Western Hemisphere a clearer understanding and better appreciation of each other's culture, history and talents. Actual production will be handled by the Columbia Broadcasting System in the United States while Canadian items and material will be contributed by the CBC.

In addition to supplying material for the program, the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation will carry it over the national network two afternoons each week starting Tuesday and teachers in schools across the Dominion are agreeing to use the broadcast in classrooms. A manual for such teachers is being prepared by CBC.

Mayer Heads Committee

Louis B. Mayer, vice-president in charge of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer production, has been appointed chairman of the industry committee for the Los Angeles Community Chest.

Robson Back on Job

Clarence M. Robson has returned to his duties as eastern division manager for Famous Players Canadian, following an illness of more than a year.

BLAST SUBMARINE FOR "49TH PARALLEL"

Somewhere up in the arctic regions of Northern Quebec Province, Canada, lie the remnants of a fake submarine, never built to submerge.

It is the last remaining outdoor prop of the first feature shot in Canada in three years, "The 49th Parallel," now being completed by Ortus Films.

Michael Powell reports that the specially built submarine, 170 feet long, was blown to bits and bombed by Canadian air force planes a few days ago for the last outdoor sequence of the picture.

Companies Study Effect of Draft

Major companies for the past several weeks have been surveying their personnel, via questionnaire, to learn how many may be affected by the forthcoming Federal registration and possible draft, of men between the ages of 20 and 36. As of last week, Twentieth Century-Fox, Warner Brothers, RKO and Loew's had distributed the questionnaires.

Negligible Effect Seen

Independent surveys of the film industry throughout the country confirm the opinion that the draft will not affect it seriously. It is believed that only a comparatively small percentage of the industry's responsible men are in the age and eligibility categories affected.

It is estimated that in New York there may be about 3,000 affected. In Detroit, it is believed that most film salesmen are beyond the age limit. The Butterfield circuit, of that area, estimated about 10 per cent of its personnel were subject to conscription. In Chicago 500 persons are thought prospects for the draft; while Buffalo film men have estimated that some 120 persons may be called. About 20 exchange employees in Cleveland could be called. And, in New Orleans, about 50 men in theatres and exchanges, are liable. In Des Moines, exchange men may be hit by the draft, but not theatres, where most managers are married.

In Chicago, the Alliance Theatre circuit has established a bureau to plan replacement of men called. It will also reemploy the conscripts.

Twentieth Century-Fox this week said more than 70 of its exchange employees were eligible. About 117 others eligible may claim exemption. Twenty are in the "doubtful" class.

Film actors and technicians may be exempt, for the while, from the draft, according to Major Joseph Battley, advisor on occupational deferment at the Selective Service headquarters, in Washington, this week. He said draft plans might not include "essential" workers in "luxury" industries.

Western Electric on Monday announced that employees of one year or more would receive regular pay less Government pay for three months, full credit for previous employment plus Government service, and would be reemployed.

Joseph J. Bernhard, general manager of the Warner theatre circuit, has been appointed to the New Jersey Defense Council's advisory committee.

Members of the Theatrical Protective Union No. 1, conscripted, will be exempt during service, from all dues and assessments.

The Wilby-Kincey circuit, of Atlanta, is aiding U. S. Marine recruiting by showing "U. S. Marines" and "Soldiers of the Sea."

The U. S. Navy Department last week contracted with the Radio Corporation of America Manufacturing Company for sound equipment worth $34,467.

Aid Recruiting Drive

Film theatres in Atlantic City have joined the local American Legion committee to aid in recruiting for the National Guard. While the houses cannot show stills because of program and mechanical arrangements, managers of all circuit and independent theatres have agreed to run patriotic short subjects as their part in the drive.

Robert Tomsen, business agent of Local 143, Operators, of St. Louis, will submit a plan for the substitution of skilled labor union volunteers for service eligibles to Governor Lloyd Stark.

Mr. Tomsen's plan calls for the taking over of non-combatant duties by qualified union men above the draft age, thus leaving every man trained for fighting duty free for service at the front.

Russians Have Five Films Ready for U. S. Release

Artkino, the successor to Amkino as American distributor of Soviet motion pictures, has received its first shipment of films from Russia since the European War began 13 months ago. The last film released by the distributor was last January.

The five pictures which Artkino plans to release before January 1st are "The Great Beginning," "The Mannerheim Line," "Seamen" and "Volga, Volga." "The Great Beginning" is to be the first released in the new program. The theatre which will open the film sometime in October has not been selected yet. The Artkino office in New York reported that bookings in other cities will be arranged following the New York showing.

The Soviet film agency in the United States regularly releases about 18 films a year, it was said. On account of the war only eight pictures were released by the company from May, 1939 to May, 1940.

Report $250,000 UA Bonus Fund

United Artists producers have a $250,000 dividend fund to divide under the Maurice Silverstone producers' bonus plan, it was reported this week.

The money is divided on the basis of an individual producers' films' total grosses. The latter must, it is specified, reach a certain level; after that, the producer is entitled to participate in the bonus, according to the grosses earned by his product.

Mr. Silverstone, chief executive of the company, inaugurated the bonus plan in 1938. It has been working every year since. Largest beneficiaries so far, have been producers David O. Selznick, Samuel Goldwyn, Alexander Korda, and Walter Wanger.

Fortunate Succeeds Harris

Ferd Fortunate, Universal booker in Philadelphia, has succeeded Ben Harris as vice-president of Film Exchange Employees. Mr. Harris, who now operates the American Film Exchange, will continue as an inactive member of the group and was elected honorary vice-president for the remainder of the year's term.

MGM Signs Contracts

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer announces the signing of contracts with Edward N. Buzzell, director; William Daniels, cameraman; Robert Sinclair, director, and artist John Raitt. Mr. Buzzell is listed as director for the new Marx Brothers comedy, "Go West."

Goldstein Sells Interest

Al Goldstein, Seattle manager for Monogram, has sold his interest in the Monogram Corporation of the Northwest to Monogram of California and Monogram of New York. It is expected he will continue as Seattle manager for the present season.

Lessing Opens Exchange

O. F. Lessing, formerly manager in St. Louis for Ben Judell, has opened Variety Pictures Exchange in that city.

'Ramparts' Loses In Pennsylvania

The ban on March of Time's "The Ramparts We Watch," ordered by the Pennsylvania Board of Censors, has been upheld by the Pennsylvania Court of Common Pleas, which on Tuesday rejected an appeal by attorneys for March of Time and RKO Radio Pictures, the distributors, from the censor's decision.

The court remarked in part: "To spread propaganda which brutal men believe will instill terror in the hearts and minds of women and children can serve no useful purpose to the American way of life. . . . To depict a man in the character of a German hurling insults at our American citizenry could only serve a god of hatred. It would tend to stir up strife and resentment, resulting in possible attack upon some innocent American citizen of German descent."

Appeal Planned

Louis De Rochemont, producer of the film, said in New York Tuesday night that he would go to the state Supreme Court. He remarked that state boards in Ohio, New York, Virginia, Maryland, and Massachusetts had seen the film, without finding it objectionable. So had local boards in Detroit, Chicago, Portland (Oregon), and Kansas City, he said.

"We have gone on the assumption that the American public is not likely to be deluded or affected by German propaganda," he said, "once that propaganda is brought into the open, and exposed for what it actually is."

The United States Navy last weekend suddenly and without any formal explanation canceled an official screening for Navy chiefs of March of Time's "Ramparts We Watch," at the height of the court battle between the censors and the producers.

Chief cause of the ban was some footage inserted at the end of the production subsequent to its filming by March of Time, which added footage was admittedly taken from the official Nazi "Baptism of Fire," depicting the Nazi's invasion of Poland.

Plea Under Advisement

After an hour and a half hearing, enlivened by heated discussion of what constitutes news, the judges took under advisement the plea of William Clarke Mason, attorney for March of Time, and Sidney L. Krauss, representing Jay Emanuel, exhibitor, who was ordered by the Pennsylvania State Censors to cancel the showing of the film at his Park theatre, Reading, and Senate, at Harrisburg, that the Censor Board be overruled in its order banning showing of the film. Deputy State Attorneys General George Barco and Abraham J. Levy represented the Censor Board.

Judge MacNeille told Attorney Mason, "You have not produced one bit of evidence to show that the board abused its discretionary powers," answering Mr. Mason's plea that the censors were "arbitrary," abusing the discretionary power vested in them by law, and that the film was a newsreel and therefore not subject to the jurisdiction of the board. His attempt to have Sidney Kramer, New York newsreel distributor, testify as an "expert" concerning the film's status as a newsreel provoked the round-table discussion of "what is news—anyway?"

The three Judges, who viewed the film at a private show, were agreed it was not a newsreel. "It's no longer news that Poland was invaded," said Judge Milner. "Besides, the film is admittedly German propaganda."

ASIDES and INTERLUDES

By JAMES P. CUNNINGHAM

Extreme modesty on the part of movie stars is something that doesn't seem possible, but facts and figures prove it.

Some leaders of the screen drama apparently prefer complete inconspicuousness as regards their auto license plates, for example, according to the Goodrich Tire Company, which reports on a list of orders for miniature license plate key chains for some of Hollywood's best-known actors.

Where less famous individuals storm the license bureaus with demands for initials, extra-low numbers and even street addresses and such, cinema favorites tag along with long and undistinguished rows of digits on their cars.

For example, the irrepressible Mickey Rooney sports a prosaic 1N897, in the California colors, of course. Clark Gable's unglamorous 8P2552 is never recognized by the uninitiate, while Robert Taylor himself has a hard time remembering his dull 6X3963, James Stewart goes incognito as 9P9377, while Spencer Tracy has an euphonious but plain 44M449. Robert Montgomery and Lewis Stone pay no tribute to numerology with their respective 5R8768 and 3N2702. Collecting strings of miniature plates of movie stars' cars is the newest hobby to be manifested by America's screen-struck youth, it is reported.

The Secretary of War Stimson will soon pass on the proposal of Philadelphia movie exhibitor Charles Goldfine, to organize American game-hunters into a home-defense unit. Goldfine, who operates the Alden, Pix and Falls theatres in Philadelphia, and is a crack marksman in his own right, wrote to President Roosevelt, calling attention to the fact that there are at least 3,000,000 game shooters, toting rifles for the sport, who could be organized into "a standing army of minute men."

Motion picture theatre owners, producers, film salesmen, like all others in Germany who find themselves before a Nazi judge for breaking one or another of the don'ts of Nazi law, may in future elect to serve their jail sentences on the installment plan, serving weekends. If they're lucky enough to get only a jail sentence.

THE American Federation of Musicians, with which motion picture production and exhibition has had much contact over the years, reminds its members that the lot of the musician was once a hard one, in the centuries when a musician was supposed to live on the other side of the railroad tracks.

"As serfs or slaves they were attached to the households of nobles and did much of the menial work around the place," says the AFM, adding that Charlemagne, in 789 AD, refused musicians legal redress, as he did pagans and heretics. King Philip Augustus, in the 12th century, tried to banish them from the land but did not succeed, so compromised, decreeing they should bring up the very rear of all processions. During the Norman conquest of England, musicians were reinstated at the head of the parade. Among the first privileges granted was exemption from paying toll on bridges.

During the 12th and 13th centuries musicians lived mostly on "bounty and largesse," at times receiving clothes, money and a horse, at other times a crust of bread and bed for the night.

One of the first large scale organizations—a la union—in England, 14th century, was formed to combat the influx of foreign musicians, called the "Fellowship of Freemen and Minstrels of the City of London." The bill of particulars complained about the "povertie and decay" to which they were brought by the "continuell recourse of foreign minstrels daily resorting to the city out of all countrays of England."

This organization was succeeded by the "Worshipful Company of Musicians of London," 1604. It attempted to check the decline into which the profession had fallen due to the Revolution and Puritanical domination. Chief complaint was the wrongs done by "certain ignorant rustics and craftsmen of various callings who falsely represent themselves to be minstrels although they are in the art by no means learned or skilled, they nevertheless move from place to place on festival days and collect all those profits by means of which the King's Minstrels should obtain their living."

What is believed to be the first musicians' strike—and film theatres have had many a strike since—occurred in Rome, 339 B. C. This strike was not over a matter of higher pay but of social prestige. At that time musicians were used chiefly in the temples where large numbers of trumpeters were employed, at public festivals and games. During the consulate of Plautinus and Claudius a call was sent out for flute players to help celebrate the four-day scenic games. This engagement was satisfactory to the flute players in all but one respect, and that irked them plenty. As with others, music contestants were allowed at the banquets. On this occasion, however, instead of permitting the flute players to take part in the banquets given in the Temple of Jupiter, they were shunted out to the kitchen, an old custom. As a result of this treatment, all members were called off the job, including the contestants, which put a crimp in the festivities. But not for long. They were quickly called back with their privilege restored. This is probably the first victory of a musicians' strike in history.

An unidentified American in Germany who knows his United States is getting censorable material past the Nazi censors.

Station WOR's columnist of the air, Ed Fitzgerald, received a letter the other day from an American friend in Germany, which although scarred by official deletions, still had two revealing items which had escaped the censorial eye.

Commented Ed's friend: "The Germans have lots of airplanes, more than I have ever seen before in my life, and some of their flyers remind me of the birds in the sanctuary in Central Park!"

The censor, of course, did not know the significance of that last sentence, that THE BIRDS IN THE CENTRAL PARK SANCTUARY HAVE THEIR WINGS CLIPPED.

Ed's correspondent also had this to say: "The food is very good throughout Germany, and there is plenty of it. I might add, it is every bit as good as the meals on Howard Street."

Fitzgerald, who lived for many years in San Francisco, caught the real meaning of that remark: Howard Street is one of San Francisco's shabbiest streets, a neighborhood of flop houses and cheap hash joints where a vagrant can get a complete meal for ten cents!

"Pop" will be remembered as a member of the old crew of sound technicians at Paramount's Long Island studios in the early days of sound. A member of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers, he asked "Tanney" to pass along his "best" to his old "cronies."

Mr. Popovici was responsible for some of the developments of rear projection as now used in Hollywood for process shots, collaborated with Trans Lux on rear projection for use in Trans Lux's newsreel theatres.

At the time of writing to Tanney, Mr. Popovici was "under arms," "an old officer," assigned to a technical crew.

"Still hope to come out of all this and go back to dear old New York," he concluded.

Plans

Fall production plans materialized this week on the part of two major studios—Twentieth Century-Fox and Paramount—and gave every indication of providing one of the busiest autumns the production capital has seen in recent years.

Twentieth-Fox has 10 films in work, more than at any time since the fall of 1938. Now before the cameras are: "Western Union," with Robert Young, Randolph Scott, Dean Jagger and Brenda Joyce; "Hudson's Bay," with Paul Muni starred; "Chad Hanna," in Technicolor, with Henry Fonda, Linda Darnell, Dorothy Lamour; "Tin Pan Alley," with Alice Faye, Betty Grable, Jack Oakie; "The Mark of Zorro," formerly called "The Californian," starring Tyrone Power; "Down to the Sea in Ships," on which background production shots are being taken, with no cast definitely assigned as yet; "Golden Hoofs," the new Jane Withers vehicle; "Romance of the Rio Grande," latest in the "Cisco Kid" series; "The Private Practice of Michael Shayne," with Lloyd Nolan, and "Corncob Kelly's Benefit," with Marvin Stephens, Rita Quigley and Eugene Pallette.

FROM SARONG TO SCISSORS

The now famous, judging by Paramount studio's publicity department clipping files, bobbing of Dorothy Lamour's hair had a sequel last week.

The department announced that more than 400 locks of the star's hair were placed in the mail for fans in all parts of the country.

More than 6,000 requests for locks were received by Miss Lamour, press agents asserted, and the first-come-first-served order prevailed.

At the same time, local wig establishments were reporting a serious dearth of hair because of the widespread wars. Peasants in certain portions of Europe grow their hair for Hollywood wigmakers but lack of shipping has interrupted the service.

New Associate Producers

Eight new associate producers have been signed by Twentieth-Fox in the past six months, aiding the current production boom. Those signed are William Perlberg, Robert Kane, now active here instead of in London; Lou Edelman, Fred Kohlmar, Lucien Hubbard, Milton Sperling, Ralph Dietrich and Walter Morosco. Recently Raymond Griffith and Gene Markey resigned as associate producers at the studio.

At Paramount, the studio claims that all fall production records for the studio have been eclipsed, with plans set to start work on 10 pictures in addition to those now before the cameras.

"Reaching for the Sun" got under way at week's end. Adapted from the Wessel Smitter novel, "F.O.B. Detroit," the film's cast includes Joel McCrea, Ellen Drew. Production has been resumed on Harry Sherman's "Doomed Caravan," on which work was halted May 18th when Bill Boyd broke his leg.

"You're the One," featuring Bonnie Baker and Orrin Tucker in their first camera appearances, is followed on the schedule by writer-director Preston Sturges' "Lady Eve," co-starring Henry Fonda and Barbara Stanwyck. At the same time (October 14th) work starts on the tentatively titled "New York Town," with Mary Martin and Fred MacMurray in top roles.

Returning to Paramount as a producer-director, Gregory Ratoff is planning to put his "Ballerina," starring Loretta Young, before the cameras on October 28th. A week later "Road to Zanzibar," a follow-up to last year's "Road to Singapore," with Bing Crosby, Dorothy Lamour and Bob Hope, goes on the sound stages.

"Skylark" Set

November 18th is to see the start of "Skylark," with Claudette Colbert and Ray Milland in starring roles. Started on the same date will be "Las Vegas Nights," featuring Allan Jones, Bert Wheeler, Tommy Dorsey and his band and Esther Fernandez. Completing the list is "There's Always Juliet," starring Madeleine Carroll.

MGM this week announced the purchase of two story properties: "Viva Zapata," by Edgecomb Pinchon, author of "Viva Villa," and "She Was His Boss," an original by Ring Lardner, Jr., and Fritz Potter.

The former treats of a young Mexican cavalry officer who is still remembered for his heroism, the latter is a comedy about a feminine department store manager who hires a man with, supposedly, only a year to live.

GEORGE HAIGHT, former RKO producer, has been signed to a long term producer contract at MGM.

JULIEN DUVIVIER, French director, was signed by Alexander Korda Productions to direct "Manon Lescaut."

JOEL MCCREA and BARBARA STANWYCK will co-star in "Pioneer Woman."

FRANCHOT TONE and GERALDINE FITZGERALD have top roles in "Martin Eden," for Samuel Bronston Productions.

LLOYD BACON will direct "Footsteps in the Dark" for Warners. The picture co-stars ERROL FLYNN and OLIVIA DE HAVILLAND.

JAMES VAN HEUSEN and JOHN BURKE have been signed to write the music for Paramount's "Road to Zanzibar."

NORMAN REILLY RAINE is writing the screen play of "The Tanks Are Coming" for Warners.

WILLIAM WYLER will direct "How Green Was My Valley" for Twentieth Century-Fox.

JEFFREY LYNN and GERALDINE FITZGERALD have been set for the romantic leads in Warners' "Trial and Error."

ROBERT Z. LEONARD is to direct "Ziegfeld Girl" for MGM.

SHOWMEN'S REVIEWS

This department deals with new product from the point of view of the exhibitor who is to purvey it to his own public.

Down Argentine Way

(20th Century-Fox)

Study in Latin Rhythms

This is an item for the rhumba and conga trade, a study in Technicolor of the Latin rhythms which have come into popularity on radio, stage and dance floor, played, sung and danced here for their own sake and strung together on a thread of story consisting, as did the librettos of the shows that gave musical comedy its name, of connectives between production numbers. Showmen who exploit it as such will be bringing it at once to the attention of the public for which it was devised.

Don Ameche, ranking personality in the cast, is seen as an Argentine who sings now and again between horse trades to an American heiress portrayed by Betty Grable, recipient of much mention by the columnists for her showing in this attraction. Carmen Miranda, something of a sensation on Broadway and therefore a subject for exploitation in this appearance, performs four characteristic numbers but plays no part in the film save as herself. Charlotte Greenwood contributes comedy and a bit of dancing, both in the vein she is known for, but it is the Nicholas Brothers, Negro dance team, which stops the show. Six Hits and a Miss are also present and a factor for billing, although their participation is not built up.

Mack Gordon and Harry Warren supplied four musical numbers. Dances staged by Nicholas Castle and Geneva Sawyer range from the simple to the complex and Technicolor resources are tapped to the full in their behalf.

The story, never more than an idea on which to predicate the songs and dances, concerns an old grudge which prevents a South American from selling a horse to anybody named Crawford and includes a horse race. It is by Rian James and Ralph Spence, adapted by Darrell Ware and Karl Tunberg. Irving Cummings directed and Harry Joe Brown served producer Darryl F. Zanuck as associate.

Comedy of Errors

In addition to the five personalities present whose names have established their claim to space on the marquee, showmen have here a George S. Kaufman-Marc Connelly play with both stage and film record of popularity to tell their customers about. This Edgar Selwyn production of it, directed by S. Sylvan Simon from a script by Albert Mannheimer, Jerome Chodorov and Joseph A. Fields, brings the play up to date.

Ann Sothern, in the name role, dominates the comedy, with Roland Young sharing the episodes which created a majority of the laughs in the Hollywood preview instance. Reginald Gardner as a demented guest, and Ian Hunter as the inventor the heroine is in love with ranked next in provoking amusement. Miss Burke, given less prominence than usual, Lynne Carver and Dan Daley, Jr., play up to these.

The story, it will be recalled, is about a young lady who means well by all in her attempts to rig events so that the most good will be experienced by the greatest number but scrambles the plans of everybody concerned in a manner distressing to all hands until, by a series of blunders, a happy ending is arrived at.

Previewed in the Village theatre, Westwood, where it evoked enough laughter and of the right kind to suggest that the film will give general satisfaction.—W. R. W.

Cherokee Strip

(Paramount-Sherman)

Western

Harry Sherman, producer of westerns these many years, notably the "Hopalong Cassidy" series, in his first of two "specials" of the new season, makes the period before the opening of the Cherokee Strip to settlers the background of this story.

He embellished the idea with a cast including Richard Dix, Florence Rice, Victor Jory, Andy Clyde and George E. Stone. He assigned Norman Houston and Bernard McConville, both of whom have quite some experience with writing outdoor action pictures, to adapt McConville's original story.

Lesley Selander, who has directed many of the "Hopalong Cassidy" pictures, got the duty of instilling in this all the action, suspense, romance and other elements calculated to create a wider market for dramas of the wide open spaces.

The result, as witnessed at the preview in Inglewood, is all that the producer hoped for—an audience reaction marked throughout by rapt enthusiasm, a reception which brought spontaneous applause.

Previewed at the Academy theatre, Inglewood, to reaction as noted above.—V. K.

Produced by Harry Sherman for Paramount release. Directed by Lesley Selander. Screenplay by Norman Houston and Bernard McConville. Based on a story by Bernard McConville. Associate producer, Joseph W. Engel. Photographed by Russell Harlan. Assistant director, D. M. Abrahams. Art director, Lewis J. Rachmil. Edited by Sherman A. Rose. P.C.A. certificate No. 6530. That Gang of Mine

Horse Race Comedy-Drama

Presenting a number of the Dead End Kids, Leo Gorcey playing the role of jockey about which the plot centers, this comedy-drama of horse-racing switches from humor to suspense toward its close and bases interest on the outcome of the second of two races run off during the film. Circumstances leading up to this point are of a sort setting the film apart from pictures in kind.

Clarence Muse, portraying a Kentucky-born Negro who has brought a thoroughbred to New York and needs backing for its training, supplies a characterization which in itself adds much to the film and also sings a spiritual, without instrumental accompaniment, in a manner to make the music-conscious happy all over.

William Lively's screenplay keeps the story out of the routine established by other race films. Sam Katzman produced, with Joseph Lewis directing.

Previewed at studio.—W. R. W.

Melody and Moonlight

Musical Comedy

Republic's "Melody and Moonlight" excels the stature of many musical comedies achieved by studios with more resources at hand, by virtue of its liveliness, music, comedy, romance, and just about everything else that appeals to a universal audience.

The preview audience in Beverly Hills, enthralled throughout its unfolding, regarded the picture as one of the studio's best.

Johnny Downs and Jane Frazee supply the chief romantic interest, Miss Frazee's debut in films (her medium is radio as one of the Frazee sisters) obtaining much response. Barbara Allen, who is Vera Vague to countless radio fans, and Jerry Colonna, a favorite of transcontinental programs, supply most of the comedy. Included in the cast are Mary Lee, who has appeared in numerous Gene Autry westerns. Frank Jenks, Claire Carleton, Jonathan Hale, Marten Lamont and "The Kidoodlers," musical troupe featured in radio.

Bradford Ropes, who adapted the original story by David Silverstein, provided a framework which permits smooth flowing of dialogue and musical numbers. Joseph Santley, the director, emphasized speed and plausibility in the unfolding of the story of a rich girl determined to make her own way in show business.

Associate producer Robert North indicated his judgment of production values in the making of the film. Jule Styne, George H. Brown, Sol Meyer wrote the various song numbers.

Previewed at the Warners Beverly theatre, Beverly Hills, where the audience, predominantly lay, gave frequent indications of its approval of the entire film; the debut of Miss Frazee, who sings, dances and acts with equal skill; and the comedy of Miss Allen and Colonna. Few audiences have given greatter approval at previews than this.—V. K.

Western Melodrama

Under the directorial guidance of Ray Taylor and based on an original screen play by Sherman Lowe the latest in the Johnny Mack Brown series of western melodramas combines the basic elements that go into the production of fast action pictures.

Supporting Johnny Mack Brown as the investigator for a cattle association sent to capture rustlers, are Fuzzy Knight, who upholds the comedy end of the picture, and Nell O'Day providing the feminine interest. The Texas Rangers, who appeared in other pictures of this series, render a few songs of the west.

The plot of the picture concerns a young girl whose cattle are being stolen by a band of outlaws headed by a local politician, who is trying to force her to sell her property in a campaign to control all the land in the territory. The arrival of the cattle detective, interspersed with numerous adventures for all, upsets the plans of the rustlers and brings the outlaws to justice.

Reviewed at the Central theatre in New York where an afternoon audience composed mostly of men watched with interest and enjoyed the antics of Fuzzy Knight.—G. S.

Campus Comedy

What with Wayne Morris starring as both members of a twin-brother lead and the picture employing slow-motion for a dream sequence, this contribution to the season's stock of gridiron films differs in many ways from norm. Comedy is stressed more than school spirit, and no attempt is made to glorify football, but the right team wins the game in the final seconds of play.

One of the twins in the story is a student addicted to leading his classes. The other is a rounder who, by a chain of circumstances beyond the student's control, impersonates the classman on the gridiron. A gangster attempts to persuade the rounder to throw the game, the student is put into the lineup instead and things are going badly for the home team until the rounder, who has fallen in love with the same girl his brother loves, replaces him in the fourth quarter, wins the game, then disposes of the gangster and his mob by physical violence to clear the way for a happy ending.

The picture, a variant in the tradition of campus comedies, was produced by Anthony Veiller, with H. Bruce Humberstone directing, from an original screenplay by Robert Pirosh.

Previewed at the Village theatre, Westwood, which borders on the campus of the U.C.L.A., where an audience composed in large part of collegians received it favorably.—W. R. W.

Young Bill Hickok

Western Melodrama

The exploits of the adventurous Bill Hickok are brought again to the screen this time by Republic with Roy Rogers in the starring role. With Joseph Kane in the capacity of associate producer and director and based on an original screen play by the writing team of Norton S. Parker and Oliver Cooper the production has action for its keynote.

In supporting roles are John Miljan, Monte Blue, Hal Taliaferro and others. George "Gabby" Hayes continues as the constant companion of Rogers with Jacqueline Wells, who gives Roy ample opportunity to serenade her with his guitar, as the romantic interest.

The days of the pony express, romance provided by Miss Wells, melodrama by John Miljan and Hal Taliaferro, comedy by "Gabby" and Sally Payne, an abundance of outdoor scenery and action with gun fights and fisticuffs have been assembled in orderly continuity to provide the western fan with nearly an hour's entertainment.

Mala Yerba

(Gabriel Soria)

Mexican Drama

Depicting the fundamentals of life in Mexico, which are much the same now as they were 32 years ago, when the action occurs, "Mala Yerba" adroitly deals with Mexican-American intercourse. An American is one of the principal characters and he is shown in a very good light. Excellent direction by Gabriel Soria, the young Mexican who learned his craft in Holdywood and became producer-director so successfully that he has been awarded several gold medals; superior acting, good photography, sound and scenic effects contributed to the worth of this film, though its story is weak and scarcely suitable for American presentation.

The plot concerns Mexican farm life in the days before the Revolution, when there were big ranches and the peasants were semi-slaves, yet did not fare so badly. The boss of ranch, Rene Cardona, is the villain and the story revolves around his attempted seduction of a peasant girl. He kills her peasant lover, gets rid of her father, attempts to use similar methods with the girl's second native swain but is foiled by an American engineer who falls in love with her and very nearly takes her away himself.

"Mala Yerba" got good response at the Cine Teatro Alameda, swank Mexico City cinema, which is popular with Americans.—JAMES LOCKHART.

Gabriel Soria, producer-director. Roberto Gavaldon, assistant director. Script from Don Mariano Azuela's novel, "Mala Yerba." English tile, "Marcela," by Emilo Gomez Muriel and Mario Gonzalez. Cameramen, Alex Phillips and Victor Herrara. Sound, Jose D. Carles. Scenic effects, Jose Rodriguez Granada. Seen at the Cine Teatro Alameda, Mexico City. Running time, 109 minutes.

Eisenstein, Communist camera craftsman number one, composed as a commentary on Mexican political and ethnic history, here is offered under the aegis of Marie Seton, British newslady and globe circler, and the result of the renovations is an indefinite cross between a travelogue and an archeological documentary report.

The history of the film includes a prolonged period of gestation. Back in 1931, Comrade

SHOWMEN'S REVIEWS OF PRODUCT

Eisenstein journey to Mexico and during an 18-month stay amassed more than 100,000 feet of film. Before he could complete his magnum opus, he heeded the peremptory call of the Kremlin and was not able to finish. Sinclair, radical author, cut the Eisenstein film and issued parts of it as "Thunder Over Mexico". (Reviewed in MOTION PICTURE HERALD, May 20, 1933.)

The latest revision of the film came after a pilgrimage Miss Seton made to the Moscow shrine of Eisenstein and in collaboration with him she fashioned a scenario for the present picture running 59 minutes.

Miss Seton has denied any propaganda intention but the fact of the film's derivation remains.

SHORT PRODUCT

Britain's R. A. F.
(RKO Radio)
March of Time, No. 2, Vol. 7

Britain's flyers receive testimonial tribute in the most recent edition of the March of Time. It includes a concise and comprehensive review of British aerial training and tactics in defending the islands and insuring protection for the convoy lines, supply belts for carrying needed war material and food supplies. Until shortly before the war England was undisputed master of sea power and had allowed the air division to trail along in personnel and plane power as a subsidiary asset for naval resources. But, with the launching of aerial attacks from across the channel, the English government began a race with time in building up its air force. The results of this frantic stepping up in aeronautical production are vividly displayed. There are in addition some stirring sequences depicting flyer education, both in the land schools and in the cockpit. The camera closeups of wide winged machines zooming across the skies are impressive both from a pictorial angle and from a consideration of what the aerial scenes connote. Timeliness is lent by the daily newspaper stories of the present air battles over England.—Running time, two reels.

The Dandy Lion
(Paramount)
New Cartoon Series

"The Dandy Lion" is the start of a new Max Fleischer-Paramount cartoon series. This initial subject concerns the friendship of a very mild mountain lion and a little Indian maiden. The Indian maiden adopts the lion as a pet, shaving off its mane and pretending, for the benefit of the braves and squaws that the lion is but a large dog. The lion, however mild in other ways, has the roar of its fellows and every time he opens his mouth he puts his paw in it. The braves become suspicious but the lion saves the day by rescuing a papoose from the clutches of a vulture. Running time, 7 minutes.

Sportlight

Subjects that have to do with high and fancy diving are no novelty and, too, it is a favorite topic with the newsreels, but regardless it remains one of the more interesting sights to see on the screen. The slow motion camera in this Sportlight has captured the grace and ease of the divers as they perform their repertoire of dives to the envy and amazement of the onlooker. The performers here, all men, are champions or former champions. Running time, 10 minutes.

At this point a can of spinach comes to hand and Popeye sets about mopping up the opposition in the style to which he is accustomed. Running time, 7 minutes.

FREE-MOVIE PATRON IS CALLED 'HOUSEWRECKER'

New York ITOA Bulletin Calls Criticism of Free Advertising Unit Shows "Well Based"

One of the most serious denouncements of the practice of placing free shows in regular theatres for advertising merchandise and one of the first coming from exhibitors themselves, has been made by New York owners with respect to Chesterfield Cigarettes' unit shows now touring various parts of the country.

The Independent Theatre Owners of New York, one of the most expressive of regional exhibitor organizations, admits that the general industry criticism, coming from industry branches other than exhibition, arising from the rental of theatres to commercial advertisers for the showing of their ad films free to the public, is "well based."

Long Run Harm Seen

The ITOA charges that the renting of their auditoriums for such use by many of its organization members "was done without careful thinking on their part," and that "now that it is all over, they realize that the immediate profit ensuing therefrom does not nearly compromise for the harm such practice can do in the long run."

"Theatres are built for the prime purpose of selling motion picture entertainment to the public; they are an integral part of this broad industry and turning them over to advertisers is bad procedure, sure to harm the entire structure of our business," declares the ITOA, in its house-organ, The Independent, adding:

"There is no need to turn to national advertisers to fill our theatre seats. If the practice became common, soon the advertisers would have no need of theatres, for they could rent halls and show their films for weeks instead of days and then what originally seemed like quick money would cause heavy losses. No one can blame the public for wanting to see well produced films for nothing. But it is the height of silliness for exhibitors, who must sell tickets, to hand free showings to their customers. When it comes time to charge an admission again, the public won't like the change. In addition to which, having seen one show free, they'll skip going to the movies for awhile.

"The independents in New York did it once, but they'll never do it again. The industry, they now realize, is too big to allow this kind of small change to upset it," it was said.

Meanwhile, it was reported that, although the free shows drew many persons to theatres who have never been there before, the patrons were of such a type as to do the theatre more harm than good. Harry Brandt, ITOA leader and head of the Brandt Circuit in New York, this week, declared that neither Chesterfield Cigarettes or anybody else could give further free shows in any of his theatres. He said his managers reported extensive damage to theatre upholstery, rugs, chairbacks, and men's and women's restrooms, reportedly inflicted by the admission-free patrons.

Having already played in some 175 theatres throughout the United States, the Chesterfield Cigarette admission-free film show featuring "Pleasuretime" with Fred Waring and "Tobaccoland, U. S. A." was booked early in September in some 60 additional theatres in the New York area, in competiton to admission-charging houses.

Both of the films were completed a year ago by the Industrial Pictures' Division of the March of Time, under the supervision of John Wood, general manager. "Tobaccoland U. S. A.," runs 36 minutes, while "Pleasuretime" runs 22 minutes.

Tickets are distributed through merchants in the localities where the theatres are located.

Chesterfield is reported to pay exhibitors at the rate of 17 cents per unit for each seat of the individual theatre's capacity. The theatres are taken over from one to three days.

The show is booked through Newell-Emmett Company, advertising agency for Chesterfield.

Free shows such as offered by Chesterfield "are creating a Frankenstein" for the film industry. Charles C. Moskowitz, vice-president of Loew's in charge of New York theatres, has declared.

Circuits Booked Show

Among the New York circuits which booked the show were Century, Randforce, Consolidated, Brandt and Fabian. The theatre suspends its regular performances and puts on a continuous one-hour performance. Advertising and exploitation material is sniped throughout the territory.

Martin H. Barrett, chief of the motion picture department of Newell-Emmett Company, advertising agency, is directing the campaign. "Tobaccoland" was in production from March, 1939, through December, 1939, and was filmed on location in the various tobacco-growing localities.

Build in Atlantic City

A 1,450 seat theatre with facilities for both legitimate shows and for motion pictures will be constructed in Atlantic City by Frank P. Gravatt, operator of the Steel Pier, on the site of the long closed Second National Bank. Mr. Gravatt is president of the SCA Company, which will operate the house when completed about January 1, 1941, at an estimated cost of $250,000.

Face Daylight Fight

Wisconsin exhibitors can look forward to an attempt being made in the 1941 legislature to repeal the 1931 law which prohibits the observance of any other than standard time in the state. Dr. Ralph P. Sproule, Milwaukee, new president of the State Medical Society of Wisconsin, will ask its committee on public policy at its next meeting to advocate statewide daylight saving in Wisconsin starting next spring. Exhibitors, labor and farmers have opposed past proposals to legalize daylight saving time in Wisconsin.

Leave for Latin America

J. A. McConville, Columbia foreign manager, and Jack Segal, manager of foreign exchange operations, left last weekend by plane for a business trip to the company's offices throughout Central and South America. The first stop is Mexico and from there they will continue by plane down the west coast of Latin America. They will return by air along the east coast.

Price Joins Select

Ben Price, who has been in charge of the New York territory for Universal for many years, has now become associated with the Select Film Exchange.

ASCAP AND BMI RACE TO GET BANDS' SUPPORT

Rival Music Organizations Seek Leaders' Aid before Contract Deadline on January 1st

Entering the last round of their struggle to obtain mastery over music sources for radios, screen, and stage, both the American Society of Composers, Authors, and Publishers, and Broadcast Music, Inc., this week appealed to the leaders of popular radio dance orchestras.

Entertained by ASCAP

ASCAP entertained the leaders on Friday, September 20th, at a luncheon in New York City. John Paine, general manager, expressed confidence that the controversy would be settled to ASCAP's liking, warned the leaders to think of their interests, and said that by January 1st every station would have an ASCAP contract.

January 1st is the date on which ASCAP's old five year contracts with the broadcasters no longer apply; and on which its new contracts, signed as yet, with not half the broadcasters, take effect. It is also the day on which Broadcast Music, Inc., established by the networks several months ago to supplant ASCAP as a music source, will have to have enough songs on hand to satisfy sponsors, advertising agencies, band leaders and the public.

BMI on Monday also played host at lunch to the band leaders. Sidney Kaye, its vice-president and general counsel, told them that BMI would endeavor to "cushion" the change from ASCAP to non-ASCAP music and that BMI's facilities for a change regarded as inevitable were available to every musician.

It is estimated that musicians have about $10,000,000 invested in music libraries, and that about 80 per cent of their music is ASCAP. Some of the band leaders are ASCAP members.

ASCAP and BMI last week both claimed a majority of American radio stations, as subscribers. BMI said it had 390, who do 90 per cent of the dollar volume of commercial business on the air. ASCAP said it had signed a majority of independent stations, but refused to reveal how many, nor their call letters, claiming that to do so would subject the stations to punitive measures by the large networks.

This week, it was estimated that BMI had raised $1,400,000 to fight ASCAP and had already gained the music of 160 composers, with 200 new tunes, 200 new arrangements of songs in the public domain, and 14,000 copyrighted songs.

Dispute Over Festival

ASCAP last week used its three-day festival at the Golden Gate Exposition, San Francisco, to embarrass the radio chains. Its star personalities, including Hoagy Carmichael, Walter Donaldson, Sigmund Romberg, Peter De Rose and others appeared; their songs were played as well as such popular songs from ASCAP's library as "God Bless America," "A Perfect Day," "Old Man River," and others.

The Coast networks would not broadcast the festival and it was reported ASCAP and the Fair officials intend to bring charges of abuse of franchise against the broadcasters to the Federal Communications Commission.

It was further charged that station KFWB, of Los Angeles, operated by Warner Brothers, had volunteered to broadcast the Festival, but was unable to secure the "necessary physical facilities and cooperation from the chains."

Meanwhile, battling BMI and the broadcasters for control of music on radio, ASCAP continues its fight against anti-ASCAP legislation in various states. This week, its litigation to test the constitutionality of Washingon's anti-Society laws, in Federal Court at Tacoma several years, was further delayed, when a Federal statutory court granted both sides 30 days in which to file briefs on confirmation of a special master's report finding the law unconstitutional, and on the issuance of a permanent injunction restraining the state from enforcing the law.

Additionally, 15 days thereafter were allowed, for both sides to file reply briefs. Thus, no decision is expected before late November.

In Omaha, Nebraska, a hearing will be held on October 12, which will decide what type of record will go to the United States Supreme Court of the action involving ASCAP and Nebraska.

Cinecolor Amends Statement

Cinecolor, Inc., Burbank, Cal., has amended its pending registration statement with the Securities and Exchange Commission to make its proposed offering 427,000 rights for $1.50 par common to stockholders and 71,166 $1.50 par common reserved for rights at $1 and 71,166 shares unsubscribed stock through an underwriter at $1.25.

National Theatre Supply Demonstrates New Screen

The National Theatre Supply Company demonstrated on Friday of last week a new Walker plastic molded screen at the Twentieth Century-Fox projection room. The surface of the screen is covered with an amorpho-crystalline pigment in plastic form and the perforations are arranged in uniform chevron lines.

The new screen gives better contrasts, especially in color motion pictures, it was reported. The company announced that the pigment used has the highest reflective efficiency known in screen manufactiuring. For the demonstration a combination of one half regular Walker white screen and one half the new Walker screen which has no seams was used.

The perforations remain more clear of dust that those in ordinary screens and consequently do not affect the sound transmission as the screen ages, it was claimed, and the peak efficiency can be maintained over twice as long as the regular Walker white screen. The plastic screen costs more than the regular type.

Equity Answers Red Bias Charge

In one of the biggest and noisest meetings in recent years, the Actors Equity Association, last Friday, September 28th, passed a resolution condemning Communism, Nazism and Fascism, in the face of charges by Congressman Lambertson of Kansas that the group is "dominated by Communists." The meeting, held in the Hotel Astor, New York, was attended by 799 members.

The association also adopted a resolution to bar Communists, Nazis and Fascists from holding office or being employed by Equity.

Another resolution, denying that members of the Council are Communists and demanding that Congressman Lambertson's charges be investigated by Chairman Dies, of the un-American activities committee, was adopted. A copy of the document was ordered sent to Mr. Dies. It said, in part:

"This council goes on record as declaring that it is unalterably opposed to Communism, the Communist Party, the principles it advocates and the tactics it employs."

Last July, Mr. Lambertson charged in the Congressional Record that seven members of the Council were Communists. The Council and membership voted to forward to him a copy of the denial of his accusation for inclusion in the Record. Paul Dullzell, executive secretary, accused by the congressman of protecting the so-called Communist sympathizers, was given a vote of confidence by the members.

On Tuesday, Equity appointed a committee to confer with its lawyers, on amendments to the constitution and by-laws, to make effective its resolution against un-American officeholders.

Hays Sees Films As Peace Force

The contributions which motion pictures have made in building a foundation of sound citizenship through films portraying American history, ideals and traditions was pointed to by Will H. Hays, president of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, Tuesday in French Lick, Ind., during an address in which he said that America should be made not only impregnable to war but strong enough to compel all who profess the doctrine of violence to respect our peace.

Early Aims Recalled

Addressing the state meeting of the Indiana Chapter of the Daughters of the American Revolution at the French Lick Hotel, Mr. Hays recalled that 18 years ago as president of the newly formed MPPDA, he was privilege to invite 100 representatives of the DAR and other civic, patriotic, religious and educational organizations to meet with representatives of the film industry to discuss "the broad objectives which the then immature but aspiring medium of expression might set itself and the methods by which those objectives could most likely be realized."

Few people at that time, Mr. Hays said, "looked upon the motion picture as more than an unimportant means of amusement. Fewer still recognized its possibilities. The concern of these national organizations with the movies of that day is a tribute to their vision.

"You gave organized support at the theatres in your own communities to all motion pictures which in your judgment contributed to an understanding of American democracy and sound citizenship," he told the meeting.

Mr. Hays called attention to the picture, "Land of Liberty," which the industry prepared for exhibition at the San Francisco and New York Fairs. When the question for exhibition of representation at the Fairs came up, he said, it was thought that nothing less than a new feature motion picture would be adequate.

"For this purpose, however, it was discovered not to be necessary to produce a single foot of new film," Mr. Hays said, adding: "We found a veritable wealth of material."

Mr. Hays said that in response to many requests, "Land of Liberty," would be shown in motion picture theatres all over the country starting this winter.

Mr. Hays also said that approximately 500 films "telling the story of the United States" were being used in school classrooms through the cooperation of the MPPDA.

Seymour Felix, currently directing the dances in "Tin Pan Alley," has been signed to a long-term contract by Twentieth Century-Fox. The studio also has signed a long-term contract with Elena Verdugo, who recently completed a small part in the company's musical "Down Argentine Way."

New World Films, Chicago, is completing a series of one-reel subjects on the Townsend Plan. Ted Robinson has been placed in charge of distribution.

Establish Talent Department

The Mutual Broadcasting System has established a talent department in Chicago under Noel Gerson. It will supply talent to film theatres.

GUILD WILL REPRESENT ALL SCREEN WRITERS, ENDING SEVEN-YEAR FIGHT

Contract Designates Unit as Sole Bargaining Agency on Coast; Extensive Machinery To Arbitrate Credits To Be Established

One of the film industry's longest labor disputes ended last week in Hollywood after seven years, when the Screen Writers Guild finally won from the producers a collective bargaining contract designating it as sole bargaining agency for all writers for motion pictures in California, providing an 80 per cent guild shop, and setting up what is described as the most comprehensive credit arbitration machinery in the film industry.

The agreement is effective next Thursday, and is for six months.

Board Set Up

Three active SWG members and three producer representative are to administer the contract provisions, and negotiate further. Included in the agreement are a limitation of layoff periods, a prohibition on writing on speculation, a no strike clause, and accommodations for writers on location. Subjects still to be settled, possibly by the special administrative committee, are the right of writers to create and own material during periods in which they are not steadily employed, a minimum salary for them, and classification of junior writers.

Studios signing the agreement are Twentieth Century-Fox, Loew's, Columbia, Goldwyn, Warner Brothers, RKO, Universal, and Paramount. The guild is now approaching the other studios.

That all writers still do not agree with the guild, even in its victory, was seen last week when Howard Emmett Rogers, one of the organizers of the now defunct Screen Playwrights, Inc., a rival to the guild, declared he would remain in the "20 per cent non-guild members" until it rid itself of "subversive" interests.

The guild contract, in negotiation so long, had bogged down up to this year on three major points: the length of contract, percentage of guild shop, and right of writers to create their own material while not employed.

Bioff Returns

William Bioff, West Coast leader of the International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employees and chairman of the Conference of American Federation of Labor Studio Unions, returned to Hollywood by plane Monday from Chicago where he had served a six-month jail term for a pandering conviction, imposed in 1922. He is taking a "three weeks' rest" at an undisclosed place, his representatives said. He faces trial in Federal Court in Los Angeles in February, on income tax evasion charges.

Florence Wix has been elected chairman of the Screen Actors Guild Council, succeeding Robert Davis, resigned.

The Moving Picture Painters Local, No. 644, won a collective bargaining agency election over the scenic artists' union, last week, before the local National Labor Relations Board office. The victory is expected to end the jurisdictional fight, unless the scenic artists' unit challenges the election, in the courts.

Harriet Reynolds has been placed in charge of the Screen Actors Guild Eastern office, in New York City, in the absence of Mrs. Florence Marston, Eastern head, who is recuperating after an operation.

Angered by the new and reportedly uncompromising attitude of the St. Louis stagehands' union Local 6, two of that city's exhibitors, Clarence Kaimann and Mrs. Bess Schulter, have lodged complaints with the local office of the anti-trust division of the U. S. Department of Justice.

Mrs. Schulter owns the Powhattan, small neighborhood house in suburban Maplewood. Last Tuesday night, her projectionists, members of Local 143, also of the IATSE, walked out because of Mrs. Schulter's dispute with the stangehands' local. Mrs. Schulter said the local was asking reinstatement at $80 per week, of a stagehand dismissed two years ago.

Stage Shows Cancelled

On last Friday, September 27th, stage shows were cancelled at three of Mr. Kaimann's theatres, the O'Fallon, Baden, and Salisbury, all in North St. Louis. Mr. Kaimann said the stagehands' local had withdrawn its men because it claimed he had caused negotiations to be stalemated one year ago, when the union had sought to put stagehands in all independent theatres. However, C. Orville Newlin, business agent for the stagehands, said the local would have furnished the stagehands for the three stage shows, if Mr. Kaimann had not cancelled them.

It was after these two happenings that Mrs. Schulter and Mr. Kaimann went to the anti-trust division of the U. S. Department of Justice in St. Louis, which had been responsible for the successful prosecution for racketeering and extortion of John P. Nick and Clyde Weston, deposed head and business agent, respectively, of the projectionists' Local 143.

This week, the American Guild of Musical Artists and the American Federation of Musicians were awaiting a decision by New York Supreme Court Justic Aron Steuer, on the application by the former for a temporary injunction to restrain the latter from barring guild members from radio, stage, and concert hall because they do not belong to the AFM.

Denies Conciliator Reports

Justice Steuer reserved decision two weeks ago, indicating he might give it only after lengthy deliberation. Meanwhile, the AFM, organ of James C. Petrillo, music "czar" of Chicago and America, is restrained from interfering with engagements of guild members, by a stay granted previously by New York Supreme Court Justice Ferdinand Pecora.

Mr. Petrillo last week denied reports he might accept office as Chicago labor conciliator.

Meanwhile, mediation proceeded this week between the American Federation of Radio Artists and the networks over a contract for artists on sustaining programs. The union had threatened a national strike. This was avoided by mediation of the New York State Labor Board, in whose New York City offices the talks are proceeding.

Representatives of the major circuits and of the American Guild of Variety Artists, "vaudeville" union, were to meet in New York late this week, possibly signing a closed shop contract, long under negotiation.

New Contract in Detroit

In Detroit this week it is reported the city's major theatres have signed one year contracts with the stagehands' Local, 38. Virtually no changes were made.

In Seattle, Frank McCormick, formerly assistant manager of the Hamrick-Evergreen Coliseum, has been made business agent of the city's theatre employees' union, succeeding Lawrence Wicklund, who became assistant to the manager of the city auditorium.

The IATSE has added a new Michigan local, No. 735 at Mount Clemens. It is the first new local in the state in 15 years. Bert Penzine is president; Fritz DeVanteir, vice-president; Dan Defenbaugh, secretary; and T. E. Bauman, business agent.

The IATSE also has issued a charter for a local in the "B" category for ushers, cashiers, doormen, and the like, in Buffalo. Its number is 178.

Officers of the Chicago projectionists local were to meet this week with counsel of the Balaban and Katz circuits over a contract retroactive to September 1st.

CUT OUTDOOR ADS IN PENNSYLVANIA

The Pennsylvania State Planning Board, the Outdoor Advertising Association of Pennsylvania and the Pennsylvania Roadside Council have agreed tentatively to a zoning system to restrict advertising along the William Penn and Lincoln Highways, between Harrisburg and Pittsburgh. Representatives of the groups will make a tour and pick out sections where advertising displays would detract from the scenic beauty.

National Decency Legion Classifies Six Pictures

Of six pictures reviewed and classified by the National Legion of Decency in its listing for the current week three were approved for general patronage, two were listed as unobjectionable for adults and one was found objectionable in part. The films and their classification follow:

Class A-1, Unobjectionable for General Patronage: "Sky Murder," "Spring Parade," "The Westerner." Class A-2, Unobjectionable for Adults: "City of Conquest," "Diamond Frontier." Class B, Objectionable in Part: "The Great Profile."

The Better Films Council of Chicago recommended the following films in the period August 31st to September 9th:

Family Type: "The Adventures of Chico," "Lucky Cisco Kid," "Rhythm on the River," "Tom Brown's Schooldays." Mature Type: "Boom Town," "Earthbound," "False Rapture," "The Great McGinty," "Ladies Must Live," "Life and Loves of Tschaikowsky," "The Man I Married," "My Love Came Back," "Queen of the Mob," "The Return of Frank James."

The report was compiled by Mrs. Charles R. Holton, vice-president of the council.

de Rochemont Promoted

Richard de Rochemont has been appointed by Louis de Rochemont, producer of the March of Time, to the post of managing editor of the March of Time. Santa Fe Trail

(Warner Brothers)

Combining romance with history, Warners has here cast Errol Flynn as "Jeb" Stuart in the period between his graduation from West Point in 1854, and 1859, five years before the Civil War which made him a Confederate hero.

Co-starring is Olivia de Havilland, as the girl who becomes Jeb's wife, while the large cast includes Raymond Massey, as John Brown, early leader of the anti-slave movement; Van Heflin, as a young disciple of Brown's; Ronald Reagan, Alan Hale, William Lundigan, Gene Reynolds, Henry O'Neill, as Cyrus Halliday, builder of the Santa Fe system; "Big Boy" Williams, Alan Baxter, John Litel and Hobart Cavanaugh.

The original screen play by Robert Buckner emphasises events prior to the Civil War, culminating in the attack on Harper's Ferry. Simultaneously, the laying of the new Santa Fe rail line receives story treatment, along with the romance of the co-stars, Miss de Havilland being seen as Halliday's daughter.

Hal Wallis was executive producer of the picture, with Robert Fellows associate. Michael Curtiz directed, his last two having been "The Sea Hawk" and "Virginia City."

Release date: To be determined.

Love Thy Neighbor

(Paramount)

Jack Benny, of the radio Jell-O interests, and Fred Allen, of the air waves' "Town Hall Tonight," meet here on celluloid in what is hopefully described as a quips-kreig.

Figuring largely in the proceedings, too, are Mary Martin, of "My Heart Belongs to Daddy" fame, last seen in "Rhythm on the River," Eddie Anderson, Veree Teasdale, Theresa Harris, and the Merry Macs.

As he did on "Buck Benny Rides Again," Mark Sandrich produced and directed this comedy, which has a locale stretching from New York to Miami.

Tentative release date: December 27, 1940.

Li'l Abner

(Vogue Pictures - RKO)

Based on the Al Capp comic strip, which appears in 435 newspapers and has an estimated audience of some 20,000,000 people, "Li'l Abner" is a widely known subject prior to its exhibition as a film.

Mr. Capp wrote the screen story, adaptation being made by Charles Kerr and Tyler Johnson. The story is treated, in general, as slapstick, but also provides action and romance in the community of Dogpatch. There the title character manages successfully to evade two attempts to get him into a matrimonial alliance, after wining a reward for capturing a bank bandit.

First film produced by the Vogue Pictures headed by Lou Ostrow, who started the "Hardy Family" series at MGM, it has in the title role Granville Owen, former Golden Gloves heavyweight champion, with Martha O'Driscoll as "Daisy Mae," Mona Ray and Johnny Morris as the diminutive "Mammy and Pappy Yokum," Buster Keaton as "Lonesome Polecat," Kay Sutton as "Wendy Wilecat," Billy Seward as "Cousin Delightful," Maude Eburn as "Granny Scraggs" and Walter Catlett as the Barber.

Albert S. Rogell, who handled "Private Affairs" and "Argentine Nights" recently, directed with Herman Raymaker directing special slapstick sequences.

Release date: November 8, 1940.

Release date: To be determined.

Canadians Extend Daylight Saving

Daylight Saving Time will be extended indefinitely past its normal period throughout Ontario and Quebec as a war measure, the Dominion Government announced last week. The measure would benefit the industrial centers, the move being taken to obtain maximum use of daylight for war industries. Previously, Daylight Saving was exclusively a matter for municipal choice, but authority in this case had been assumed under the wide powers of the Federal Government in war time.

Confusion has been caused by the extension of Daylight Saving, because the Canadian Broadcasting Corp. has just completed program schedules in conformity with U. S. Eastern Standard Time and had sent advance copies for publication to daily newspapers. Hasty efforts are now being made to rearrange the schedules and to advise sponsors and radio artists of the change.

MGM Extends Closing Of Exploitation Contest

At the request of a number of independent exhibitors who have expressed a desire to participate in MGM's $10,000 independent exhibitor exploitation contest, the company has announced extension of the contest to include all films to be released until November 1st. It is expected that names of the prize-winners would be announced before Christmas.

More than 3,500 entry blanks have been received to date, indicating the most successful contest ever conducted by the company. A feature is that identical prizes will be awarded to first-run and subsequent run exhibitors.

MGM has iaugurated an Honor Roll campaign which will accord recognition to outstanding exhibitor campaigns on the company's product. Showmen so honored will be awarded Honor Roll buttons. Exhibitors winning such recognition six times within a six-month period will receive plaques.

First recipient of an Honor Roll button is Charles Taylor, director of advertising and publicity of Shea's Great Lakes, Theatre, in Buffalo, for his campaign on "Boom Town."

STARS RETURN TO THE AIR IN GUILD SHOW

Gulf Oil Program for Relief Fund Benefit Resumes on CBS; Royal Reported Leavng NBC

The Screen Guild Theatre, sponsored by the Gulf Oil Company, started last Sunday night over the Columbia Broadcasting System its 1940-41 series of radio versions of popular motion pictures and featuring motion picture stars.

Guest stars appearing on the programs donate their services and Gulf pays the sum they would normally receive for a radio show to the Motion Picture Relief Fund. Jean Hersholt, president of the Relief Fund, introduced the program to the radio audience.

MGM Picture Adapted

The first show in the new season was a version of "Shop Around the Corner" (released by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, January 12, 1940), adapted and directed by Norman Corwin. Margaret Sullavan and James Stewart took the same parts they played in the motion picture. Frank Morgan was interlocutor.

The program for the coming Sunday night over a CBS national radio hookup will be "Red Dust" with Clark Gable in the role he played in the MGM picture which was released on October 9, 1932.

The commercial code adopted by the National Association of Broadcasters went into effect on Tuesday. The length of commercial announcements, objected to by many listeners, has been regulated and only sponsors engaged in legitimate commerce and sale of products or services are permitted. The general maximum set up for advertising on radio programs is as follows: daytime—15 minute programs, 3¼ minutes of commercials; 30-minute programs, 4¼ minutes and one hour programs, 9 minutes; in the evening—2½ of advertising on 15 minute programs, 3 on thirty minute shows and 6 on one-hour programs.

Royal May Resign

John R. Royal, vice-president in charge of programs for the National Broadcasting Company, according to reports published this week, may resign his position. It was said that he has been invited to head the Pacific Coast Division of the network but has not yet reached a decision.

Sidney N. Strotz, vice-president in charge of the Central Division, would take over Mr. Royal's post if he resigns, it was reported. Mr. Strotz was formerly program director in Chicago under Niles Trammel, president, when he was head of the Chicago division.

Mr. Royal was put in charge of the NBC programs in 1931 and prior to joining the network he was manager of Station WTAM, Cleveland, for two years. In 1910 Mr. Royal became vaudeville press agent for B. F. Keith and in 1916 he was appointed manager of the Cleveland Hippodrome. Later he was general manager for the B. F. Keith interests. He started in radio in 1929.

Representative Lawrence J. Connery advocated last week heavy taxes on radio as a check on monopoly and as a protection to newspapers whose advertising revenue is threatened. Mr. Connery said newspapers and magazines employed 100,000 at an average weekly wage of close to $50 and that 700 radio stations had only 11,000 workers at an average of less than $30 a week, some 3,000 musicians and artists making an average of $46 a week and part time workers averaging $15-$18 weekly.

It was further claimed that most newspapers and magazines earned 10 percent or less on their investments during the past 10 years while the two largest networks had shown net profits of almost 100 percent on their investments during the past 12 years.

William G. H. Finch, head of Finch Telecommunications, has filed an application with the FCC for a high frequency broadcasting station to be located in New York and to operate on 44.7 mc and cover an area of 4,400 square miles with a populate of 10,600,000 in the metropolitan area.

The FCC has given authority to the Cleveland Board of Education to change the school system's radio service from the regular AM to FM. The station will operate on 42.5 mc with a power of 1,000 watts. There are 156 receivers in the school system.

Light Beam Sends Program

WOR in New York is experimenting with a light beam to transmit its FM programs from its studio at 1440 Broadway to the transmitter atop 444 Madison Avenue, a distance of about a mile. It was said that, while the studio and station are linked with special telephone wires, the light relay is being planned for emergency use. At the studio the sound would modulate a beam of light foused on a sensitive photo-electric cell with a telescophic sight at the transmitter. J. R. Poppele, chief engineer for WOR, said research at W2XOR, the FM station, also would include work with fog and rain piercing infra-red rays. General Electric for some years has been demonstrating "sound-over-light" transmission at its "House of Magic" and also in a recent broadcast in Schenectady.

St. Louis Competition

Theatres in the St. Louis area are expecting stiff competition for the next few weeks with the start of the gigantic "Cavalcade" sponsored by local firemen for their pension fund. The William Morris agency is producing the show, which is expected to cost nearly $75,000. It features Tom Mix and 450 entertainers and will be given twice daily for the next two weeks. More than 100,000 tickets have been sold by the firemen for the show.

Heads Drive Division

Jack Kirsch, president of Illinois Allied, has been appointed chairman of the amusement division of the Chicago Community Fund, with a quota of 25,000. John Balaban, Eddie Silverman, Clyde Eckhardt, James Coston and Jack Osserman were named assistants.

SEES POLLS WEIGHTED IN DUALS' FAVOR

To the Editor of the Herald:

A layman speaking. Merely a movie enthusiast, a guy who would like to go to the movies often but who stays away most of the time because he's sick of duals. I could really do you an agitated letter on the subject, but I'm forcibly restraining myself to one point.

In your September 7 issue (the office copy was slow reaching my desk) there's news of exhibitors in Des Moines and Milwaukee who have decided to continue double features on the basis of polls conducted among the patrons of their several theatres. Does that make any kind of sense? The people who dislike duals and would vote against them do not come to the theatres, hence cannot register their opinion in the polls. It's a loaded poll—and about as useful as a presidential preference poll conducted in the offices of the Democratic National Committee.

It doesn't seem to me that much astuteness is needed to see an hysterical confession of weakness in the whole double feature business. Too, they're pretty sour showmanship. And theatre polls on the subject are just plain silly.

TELEVISION, FILMS FURTHER LINKED BY B & K TRANSMITTER IN CHICAGO

W9XBK To Be Located in Building Housing State-Lake Theatre; Color Television Demonstrated to FCC by Columbia

Balaban & Katz has selected the twelfth floor of the State-Lake Building in Chicago for its new television station which has been assigned the call letters, W9XBK, by the Federal Communications Commission.

The State-Lake theatre occupies the ground floor of the large Loop building where the B. & K. television station will be located. The building is owned by the Balaban & Katz Real Estate Corporation and is directly across the street from the Chicago theatre where the Balaban & Katz organization has its general offices.

B. & K.'s television station in a theatre building, and in the heart of Chicago's downtown district, brings television and motion pictures closer together than ever before.

Werrenrath Joins Staff

The engineering staff for the B. & K. experimental television station was augmented Saturday by the arrival in Chicago of Reinald Werrenrath, Jr., who has been appointed general assistant to William C. Eddy, general manager for B. & K. television. Like Mr. Eddy, Mr. Werrenrath formerly was a television engineer for the National Broadcasting Company in New York.

Installation of equipment for the new station which is being manufactured by the Allen B. DuMont Laboratories, Paramount television affiliate, will begin shortly, it was reported. B. & K. officials would not predict when experimental telecasts would begin, but within a few months the necessary equipment can be installed and the studios prepared for operation and transmission.

Color television, as developed by the Columbia Broadcasting System, was demonstrated on Friday of last week to members of the FCC. The system was explained by Peter C. Goldmark, chief television engineer for CBS. James L. Fly, chairman of the FCC, saw a private test of the color television several weeks ago and suggested that other members of the commission see the development.

In addition to showing color television from 16 mm. motion picture film on a 5 by 7½ inch screen, Dr. Goldmark presented a new and experimental "magnified" screen development which enlarged the color television picture images by 80 per cent without loss of detail, CBS reported.

The CBS color demonstration was seen by FCC Commissioners T. A. M. Craven, Frederick I. Thompson and Paul A. Walker; Andrew W. Ring, chief engineer in charge of broadcasting; Nathan David, assistant to the chairman; William A. Bauer and Benjamin W. Cottone, of the legal department; W. K. Boese, of the engineering staff, and George C. Gillingham, director of information.

After the showing Mr. Craven said:

"Color television as demonstrated by the Columbia Broadcasting System is a valuable contribution to television development. Undoubtedly it will advance public acceptance of television. I hope color television will be made available at an early date as a service to the public."

Mr. Thompson remarked:

"I think color television well confirms the commission's judgment in postponing the establishment of fixed standards six months ago."

The visiting Government men and CBS officials discussed the possibility of converting the present black and white television receivers into color receivers, the possibility of early commercial color television with pictures of about two-foot size.

Commenting on converting ordinary television sets to receive color, Dr. Goldmark pointed out that the conversion would be easy and inexpensive on sets built anticipating such a conversion but would be expensive and therefore might not be practical on sets which have been sold.

NBC Station Remodeling

The National Broadcating Company, meanwhile, has been rebuilding its television transmitter atop the Empire State building in New York to the new frequency assigned it by the FCC and to increase the number of lines in each of the television pictures from the old 441 standard to 507. Although much of the work has already been finished officials would not set a time when regular program operation can be resumed. It was said many small details would have to be taken care of before the station was ready once more for daily telecasts.

The first telecasting of a complete football schedule is to begin Saturday when Philco, in cooperation with the University of Pennsylvania, the Atlantic Refining Company and the N. W. Ayer & Son, advertising agency, present the Maryland-Pennsylvania football game. The Atlantic company, which has the broadcast rights to the Pennsylvania home football games, is allowing Philco to telecast the games in exchange for experimental commercial announcements to be carried as part of the television programs. The N. W. Ayer & Son agency is working out special types of announcements, featuring visual appeal.

Show at Fair

An eight-hour television show was presented as a feature of KPO-KGO Day at the San Francisco World's Fair. The program featured Maxie Rosenbloom, Gale Page and 40 NBC stars and was relayed to television receivers set up in eight parts of the Fair grounds.

DRAFT CHICAGO MARQUEE LAW

The installation of huge canopies and marquees in front of taverns in Chicago has led to a demand by Mayor Edward J. Kelly that the existing ordinance be changed to preclude the possibility of taverns being permitted to make such installations.

A series of conferences and meetings between an aldermanic committee, Balaban & Katz, Essaness and Jack Kirsch, representing Illinois Allied, and Henry Schoenstadt, resulted in a new ordinance being drafted which is to be introduced at the next council meeting, with successful passage foreseen.

The ordinance will not affect canopies or marquees already installed but regulates the size of any future installations.

400,000 Music Machines Used

Approximately 400,000 "juke-boxes"—nickel-in-the-slot record music machines—are at present operating in this country's hotel grills, bars, taverns, roadhouses, and the like, representing a current investment of $60,000,000 and they are "a major stimulant in the rebirth of the popular music field," Billboard, amusement weekly magazine, reports, in a survey of the field, published in the second annual edition of its Talent and Tunes Supplement, out last week.

720,000 Records a Week

The music machines necessitate the manufacture of 720,000 records weekly, the supplement says, adding that record machines will "influence the rise of tunes and artists more than ever before."

Improvements in these machines are noted. There are now several types of selector units, installed at tables, at bars, and on walls. New machines are being created, embodying the latest designs and color combinations.

It is said the music machine industry estimates that between 70,000 and 90,000 new machines will be sold to operators before the year's end. These will cost approximately $21,000,000.

Band leaders, it is noted, are displaying much concern over recordings they make, aware of the circulation the recordings will have, and of what that means to the song, and to the band.

It is added that the growth of the record industry itself is attributable, largely, to the increased use of the machines.

B'Nai B'rith Ball

Leading executives of major film companies are serving on the advisory board of the Cinema Lodge, B'Nai B'rith, for the first annual banquet and ball at the Hotel Pennsylvania, on Saturday, October 26th, Alfred W. Schwalberg, president, announced this week. On the board are:

Robert M. Weitman, managing director of the Paramount Theatre, has been appointed chairman of the entertainment committee and will be assisted by Victor Blau, Jesse Block, Phil Bloom, Zev Epstein, Ed Fishman, Harry A. Gourfain, Harry Kalcheim, Jesse Kay, William Kent, Ted Lewis, Abe Lyman, Harry Mayer, Michael Nidorf, Milton Pickman, Emanuel Sacks, Edward Sherman and Michael Todd.

In addition to stars appearing on the Broadway musical comedy stage, Mr. Weitman plans to have the casts of many legitimate shows make an appearance.

Toler Contract Renewed

Sidney Toler will continue in his "Charlie Chan" character for Twentieth Century-Fox under a new contract recently signed.

WHAT THE PICTURE DID FOR ME

FIVE LITTLE PEPPERS AT HOME: Edith Fellows, Dorothy Peterson—We did nice business on Foto-Nite with picture. The second night it died.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

HE STAYED FOR BREAKFAST: Melvyn Douglas, Loretta Young—I ran this with "Our Town" to a good sized audience. The combination drew very well. There are plenty of double meaning jokes in it but outside of that my crowd didn't think it was as funny as it had been advertised. I agree on this fact. It is a very good film and there are some laughs in it but I don't think you should over-advertise the hilarious end of it. You miss a lot of dialogue here on a really funny film but you could hear practically all of it this time. That is the reason for my judgment. Running time, 87 minutes. Played September 21.—W. Varick Nevins, III, Alfred Co-Op Theatre, Alfred, N. Y. Small college town and rural patronage.

First National

ANGEL FROM TEXAS, AN: Eddie Albert, Rosemary Lane, Wayne Morris, Ronald Reagan, Jane Wyman—Played with "Girl from Avenue A." A good little picture that seemed to please all who came. Business way below average second night because of football game. Running time, 69 minutes. Played September 18-19.—Irvin Baker, Jr., Roaring Spring Theatre, Roaring Spring, Pa. Rural and small town patronage.

FLOWING GOLD: Pat O'Brien, John Garfield, Frances Farmer—Very good action picture and good business. Running time, 81 minutes. Played September 18-19.—E. M. Freiburger, Paramount Theatre, Dewey, Okla. Small town patronage.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer

ANDY HARDY MEETS DEBUTANTE: Mickey Rooney, Judy Garland, Lewis Stone, Fay Holden, Cecilia Parker—As good as any of the "Hardy" pictures. Showed some signs of being in the same grove as its predecessors. Audience liked it and that's all that's needed. Business good. Running time, 87 minutes. Played September 13-14.—Irvin Baker, Jr., Roaring Spring Theatre, Roaring Spring, Pa. Rural and small town patronage.

ANDY HARDY MEETS DEBUTANTE: Mickey Rooney, Judy Garland, Lewis Stone, Cecilia Parker, Fay Holden—Although in many respects this is not as good as previous "Hardy" pictures, that fact does not prevent it from being very enjoyable. It had an appreciative audience every time it was shown. It drew very well and the college treated 255 Freshmen to the show. Therefore, MGM is getting quite a good average from us. Running time, 87 minutes. Played September 19-20.—W. Varick Nevins, III, Alfred Co-Op Theatre, Alfred, N. Y. Small college town and rural patronage.

DR. KILDARE GOES HOME: Lew Ayres, Lionel Barrymore, Laraine Day—Good picture and good business. This one has plenty of comedy and will please all. Running time, 80 minutes. Played September 22.—E. M. Freiburger, Paramount Theatre, Dewey, Okla. Small town patronage.

GOLD RUSH MAISIE: Ann Sothern, Lee Bowman, Virginia Weidler—All the "Maisie" series have been good in this situation and this one is no exception. Pleased everyone and drew well. Running time, 82 minutes. Played September 19.—John W. Warner, Plaza Theatre, Greenville, N. C. Colored patronage.

COLD RUSH MAISIE: Ann Sothern, Lee Bowman, Virginia Weidler—Just an average picture. It has some comedy, but not enough to make picture interesting. Business good on account of Cash Nites. Running time, 82 minutes. Played September 16-17.—Irvin Baker, Jr., Roaring Spring Theatre, Roaring Spring, Pa. Rural and small town patronage.

GOLD RUSH MAISIE: Ann Sothern, Lee Bowman, Virginia Weidler—Not the best of this series by a long shot but still good entertainment that pleased generally and pulled only average business. Ann Sothern tops as usual but the script failed to take advantage of the opportunities that might have made this a really good picture. Running time, 82 minutes. Played September 13-14.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

MORTAL STORM, THE: Margaret Sullavan, James Stewart, Frank Morgan, Irene Rich, Bonita Granville—A good picture, teaching tolerance. However, business was only fair. Running time, 100 minutes. Played September 8-9.—Ray Peacock, Onalaska Theatre, Onalaska, Wash. Loggers and mill workers patronage.

MORTAL STORM, THE: James Stewart, Margaret Sullavan, Frank Morgan, Irene Rich, Bonita Granville—A truly wonderful picture. All who see it will surely like it. Running time, 99 minutes. Played September 1, 2.—B. F. Jackson, Delta Theatre, Ruleville, Miss. General patronage.

NEW MOON: Jeanette MacDonald, Nelson Eddy, Mary Boland—A very good picture. However, it will not do business in small town.—B. F. Jackson, Delta Theatre, Ruleville, Miss. General patronage.

NINOTCHKA: Greta Garbo, Melvyn Douglas, Ina Claire—Garbo not popular here but this feature seemed to please about 60 per cent of my patrons. Not enough music or action for a small town. However, was a very good production for larger centers. Running time, 90 minutes. Played September 19.—A. L. Dove, Bengough Theatre, Bengough, Saskatchewan, Canada. Rural and small town patronage.

NORTHWEST PASSAGE: Spencer Tracy, Robert Young, Walter Brennan—The skillful acting and direction, the scenes and color were fine but it seemed to us many of the scenes were duplicated, causing one to lose some interest in the picture. The massacres and fighting scenes were rather gruesome and for this reason the weaker sex stayed away. Running time, 126 minutes. Played September 1-3.—Irving A. Westenskow, Roxy Theatre, Union, Ore. Small town patronage.

Monogram

QUEEN OF THE YUKON: Charles Bickford, Irene Rich—This pulled 'em in to exceptional business and pleased very well. Not a big production by any means but serves very well on a double bill. Chief fault is the slow pace of the first half but winds up with a bit more action and interest and sends the folks out telling you it was a good show. Running time, 76 minutes. Played September 6-7.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

Paramount

BISCUIT EATER, THE: Billy Lee, Cordell Hickman, "Promise"—A picture which can be classed in one word only, great. Had some come back to see it the second time. Tell your customers to see it, not for the business you will get but for the truly wonderful picture that it is and the good they will derive from seeing it.—B. F. Jackson, Delta Thatre, Ruleville, Miss. General patronage.

BISCUIT EATER, THE: Billy Lee, Cordell Hickman—A good show for this section. Pleased 90 per cent of large attendance. For those interested in bird dogs, it's great. Good photography and very interesting. Running time, 75 minutes. Played September 22.—John W. Warner, Plaza Theatre, Greenville, N. C. Colored patronage.

GERONIMO: Preston Foster, Andy Devine, Ellen Drew—This is another one of the middle westerns which Paramount has been getting big money for. Take it from me, when you want a good western at reasonable rental go to Republic and nine times out of ten do more business than an expensive western made by some of the supposedly larger companies. Running time, 90 minutes. Played August 30-31.—Irvin A. Westenskow, Roxy Theatre, Union, Ore. Small town patronage.

GHOST BREAKERS, THE: Bob Hope, Paulette Goddard—Good picture; good business. Keep up your good start, Paramount, and you will more than make up for your pictures which were not so good the first of the season.—B. F. Jackson, Delta Theatre, Ruleville, Miss. General patronage.

GOLDEN GLOVES: Richard Denning, Jean Cagney—Good action picture which failed to draw because it had no star power. Running time, 67 minutes. Played September 20.—E. M. Freiburger, Paramount Theatre, Dewey, Okla. Small town patronage.

NORTH WEST MOUNTED POLICE: Gary Cooper, Madeleine Carroll, Preston Foster, Paulette Goddard, Robert Preston—Slipped in the screening room in the Chicago Exchange and saw this feature. What this picture doesn't have, you won't want. Unquestionably the most beautiful color yet. Great performances by every member of the fine cast. If this one doesn't break records everywhere, we may just as well give the industry back to the Stone Agers. Good anywhere, anytime and for anybody. I intend to give all features anywhere near as worthy as this one extra playing time.—Everett Clapp, American Theatre, Sidell, Ill. General patronage.

OUR NEIGHBORS—THE CARTERS: Fay Bainter, Frank Craven—This is a fine picture and certainly down to earth entertainment for small town exhibitors. Running time, 85 minutes. Played August 21-22.—Irvin A. Westenskow, Roxy Theatre, Union, Ore. Small town patronage.

STAGECOACH WAR: William Boyd, Russell Hayden—We simply cannot put over these Hopalong Cassidy pictures. This one proved no exception to the rule. Seemed to stack up quite well with previous releases in the series but for this situation they are all just something to sit through until the main feature starts. Running time, 63 minutes. Played September 11-12.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

THOSE WERE THE DAYS: William Holden, Bonita Granville, Ezra Stone, Judith Barrett—Not a super but it pulled and pleased a lot more than any so called specials at much higher rental. It's enjoyable entertainment that proves that pictures do not always need big stars and high production budgets to make them box office attractions. Running time, 75 minutes. Played September 11-12.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

UNTAMED: Ray Milland, Patricia Morison, Akim Tamiroff—A good picture. The outdoor scenes were very good, and color beautiful. Excellent business for Friday and Saturday. Running time, 83 minutes. Played September 20-21.—Irvin Baker, Jr., Roaring Spring Theatre, Roaring Spring, Pa. Rural and small town patronage.

UNTAMED: Ray Milland, Akim Tamiroff, Patricia Morison—Business on this one away above average but sorry to say the picture does not live up to advance promises. Beautifully photographed in color, amid eye pleasing backgrounds, the story failed to develop along the lines promised in the trailer and the advertising. Good performances by Milland and Tamiroff but Patricia Morison was noticeably amateurish and unconvincing. Patron comments very much at variance. Running time, 83 minutes. Played September 13-14.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

Republic

ARIZONA KID, THE: Roy Rogers, George "Gabby" Hayes—Pleasing entertainment for those who like their musical westerns. This may stretch historical truth somewhat, but even so it does it quite entertainingly. "Gabby" Hayes is the star of these pictures as far as our patrons are concerned. This pulled only average business but seemed to please quite well. Running time, 61 minutes. Played September 13-14.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

GANGS OF CHICAGO: Barton MacLane, Lloyd Nolan, Lola Lane—Good action picture for colored audience. Played this one instead of "Son of Ingagi," which I pulled, and it satisfied the customers. Running time, 66 minutes. Played September 15.—John W. Warner, Plaza Theatre, Greenville, N. C. Colored patronage.

GANGS OF CHICAGO: Lola Lane, Lloyd Nolan,

Barton MacLane—A very good picture of its kind. Lloyd Nolan expectionally good. But no business here. Running time, 66 minutes. Played September 11-12.—Ray Peacock, Onalaska Theatre, Onalaska, Wash. Loggers and mill workers patronage.

GRAND OLE OPRY: Weaver Brothers and Elviry—Hillbilly hilarity that pulled good business and seemed to please generally. Possibly not the best of this series but on the whole very acceptable entertainment. Running time, 66 minutes. Played September 4-5.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

GRAND OLE OPRY: Weaver Brothers and Elviry—Our folk sure like Weaver Brothers and especially Elviry. This picture did extra good here. Running time, 68 minutes. Played September 13-14.—Ray Peacock, Onalaska Theatre, Onalaska, Wash. Loggers and mill workers patronage.

ONE MAN'S LAW: Don "Red" Barry, Janet Waldo—This new star is going well here. The serial, "Adventures of Red Ryder," has won him many patrons. The biggest Friday-Saturday in a year. Good season here, though. Played September 20-21.—John W. Warner, Plaza Theatre, Greenville, N. C. Colored patronage.

RANGER AND THE LADY, THE: Roy Rogers, George "Gabby" Hayes, Jacqueline Wells—Did nice week-end business on single bill. That is what we like. —Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

SCATTERBRAIN: Judy Canova, Alan Mowbray, Ruth Donnelly—Good picture and good business. This is an ideal small town picture with plenty of hillbilly comedy. Play it quick. Running time, 72 minutes. Played September 17.—E. M. Freiburger, Paramount Theatre, Dewey, Okla. Small town patronage.

SING, DANCE, PLENTY HOT: Johnny Downs, Ruth Terry—Played this on a week day and it drew better than average and was pretty well received. Running time, 72 minutes.—John W. Warner, Plaza Theatre, Greenville, N. C. Colored patronage.

WAGONS WESTWARD: Chester Morris, Anita Louise, Ona Munson, Buck Jones, George "Gabby" Hayes—A poor western that fell in the top allocation. Running time, 69 minutes. Played September 6-7.—Irvin A. Westenskow, Roxy Theatre, Union, Ore. Small town patronage.

RKO Radio

ANNE OF WINDY POPLARS: Anne Shirley, James Ellison—Just an average picture, although audience seemed to like it. Played with "Saps at Sea." Business way below average second night because of football game. Running time, 86 minutes. Played September 11-12.—Irvin Baker, Jr., Roaring Spring Theatre, Roaring Spring, Pa. Rural and small town patronage.

PRIMROSE PATH: Ginger Rogers, Joel McCrea, Marjorie Rambeau—This is the type picture that will please most colored fans. A bit depressing but they liked it. Running time, 94 minutes.—John W. Warner, Plaza Theatre, Greenville, N. C. Colored patronage.

Twentieth Century-Fox

FOUR SONS: Don Ameche, Mary Beth Hughes, Eugenie Leontovich—Unlike "The Mortal Storm," with a lesson in tolerance, this picture teaches hatred. Business very, very poor. Running time, 88 minutes. Played September 15-16.—Ray Peacock, Onalaska Theatre, Onalaska, Wash. Loggers and mill workers patronage.

GIRL FROM AVENUE A: Jane Withers, Kent Taylor—Played on double feature program with "An Angel from Texas." Audience reaction: some liked it and some did not. Business away below average second night because of football game. Running time, 70 minutes. Played September 18-19.—Irvin Baker, Jr., Roaring Spring Theatre, Roaring Spring, Pa. Rural and small town patronage.

LILLIAN RUSSELL: Alice Faye, Don Ameche, Henry Fonda, Edward Arnold, Warren William, Leo Carrillo, Weber and Fields—Very good. Did nice mid-week business.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

RETURN OF FRANK JAMES, THE: Henry Fonda, Henry Hull, Jackie Cooper, John Carradine, Gene Tierney—Well worth your preferred playing time and will give your patrons their money's worth in splendid entertainment. In this situation it proved exceptional box office and pleased immensely. Henry Fonda may have been billed as the star but it was Henry Hull who walked off with the picture as far as our patrons were concerned. He's priceless in the courtroom scene, especially. Running time, 92 minutes. Played September 15-17.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

Universal

BOYS FROM SYRACUSE: Allan Jones, Joe Penner, Martha Raye, Rosemary Lane, Irene Hervey—Lots of laughs in this one. Audience showed their appreciation by laughing most of the time and that's the way we like to see them. Business good. Running time, 73 minutes. Played September 23-24.—Irvin Baker, Jr., Roaring Spring Theatre, Roaring Spring, Pa. Rural and small town patronage.

CHARLIE McCARTHY, DETECTIVE: "Charlie McCarthy," "Mortimer Snerd," Edgar Bergen, Robert Cummings, Constance Moore—Played this on Friday-Saturday to above average business. "McCarthy" and "Mortimer Snerd" go well in our town. More power to Mr. Bergen as he certainly is a genius in this line. Running time, 77 minutes. Played August 23-24.—Irving A. Westenskow, Roxy Theatre, Union, Ore. Small town patronage.

IT'S A DATE: Deanna Durbin, Kay Francis, Walter Pidgeon—This picture failed to draw even an average crowd, although it is one of the finest pictures produced this year Everyone should play it whether it does business or not. Running time, 100 minutes. Played September 8-10.—Irvin A. Westenskow, Roxy Theatre, Union, Ore. Small town patronage.

MY LITTLE CHICKADEE: Mae West, W. C. Fields, Joseph Calleia, Dick Foran—A good picture of its kind but Mae is not so hot here. And Fields has never been appreciated. The few admirers were well pleased. Running time, 84 minutes. Played September 23-24.—John W. Warner, Plaza Theatre, Greenville, N. C. Colored patronage.

MY LITTLE CHICKADEE: Mae West, W. C. Fields, Joseph Calleia, Dick Foran—Take our advice and leave this print in the can. This was our first Mae West picture in five years and hope it is our last. As far as the acting was concerned, it was alright but the story and plot were so thin they could not hold one's attention long enough to hear Mae West say "Come up and see me sometime." Running time, 84 minutes. Played September 4-5.—Irvin A. Westenskow, Roxy Theatre, Union, Ore. Small town patronage.

WHEN THE DALTONS RODE: Kay Francis, Randolph Scott, Brian Donlevy—A very fine picture. Did not do "Jesse James" business but could be classed with "Jesse James." Give it all you have and you won't be disappointed in it. Running time, 81 minutes. Played September 22-23.—B. F. Jackson, Delta Theatre, Ruleville, Miss. General patronage.

United Artists

HOUSEKEEPER'S DAUGHTER, THE: Joan Bennett, Adolphe Menjou—Good picture but was titled wrong. We have yet to get a good box office picture from United Artists. To us all their supposedly A pictures fall in the lower group. Running time, 80 minutes. Played August 18-20.—Irvin A. Westenskow, Roxy Theatre, Union, Ore. Small town patronage.

OUR TOWN: William Holden, Martha Scott, Frank Craven, Thomas Mitchell, Fay Bainter, Beulah Bondi, Guy Kibbee, Stuart Erwin—Here is a very unusual type of film and no one can predict how it will do in your town. Last year the college students presented this as a stage play. They and all those who saw the play were interested in seeing the picture which is very well done. Naturally, that explains partly why we had a very good crowd. Another reason was that it was doubled with "He Stayed for Breakfast." I had good comments on it afterward. Running time, 90 minutes. Played September 21.—W. Varick Nevins, III, Alfred Co-Op Theatre, Alfred, N. Y. Small college town and rural patronage.

SAPS AT SEA: Laurel and Hardy—A good little comedy. Audience showed their approval by laughing most of the time. Played on double feature program with "Anne of Windy Poplars." Running time, 57 minutes. Played September 11-12.—Irvin Baker, Jr., Roaring Spring Theatre, Roaring Spring, Pa. Rural and small town patronage.

WESTERNER, THE: Gary Cooper, Walter Brennan, Doris Davenport, Fred Stone—One of the greatest outdoor action pictures ever filmed, full of action from start to finish and not a dull moment anywhere in evidence. Cooper, Miss Davenport, Walter Brennan and Fred Stone with excellent support. Their superb acting is a guarantee of superlative entertainment, so book "The Westerner" and make money by doing so. Played September 20-26.—William Noble, Criterion Theatre, Oklahoma City, Okla. General patronage.

Warner Brothers

KNUTE ROCKNE—ALL AMERICAN: Pat O'Brien, Ronald Reagan, Gale Page—Was really surprised to find this film carrying so much dramatic punch. It's more than a football story. It's a story of clean living, told with enough punch to appeal to all. Am not prophet enough to foretell box office fate of this one but it definitely will be a good grosser. Seen in screening room in Chicago. Reagan very good as George Gipp.—Everett Clapp, American Theatre, Sidell, Ill. General patronage.

MY LOVE CAME BACK: Olivia de Havilland, Jeffrey Lynn, Charles Winninger, Jane Wyman, Ann Gillis, Eddie Albert—I don't know that they could have titled this different. But, I do know that the old name love militated against the picture, for it is just as clever a little sophisticated comedy we have run for some time. It has clever situations and the music is great, the old waltzes and mazurkas of Vienna. All liked it and then you get this "I wouldn't take a chance on the picture because of the title." Then the water is over the dam, and a good picture is penalized along with the poor box office, because they figure it is another mushy love story, when the opposite was true. Two young stars that should come along with the right roles in support, Jane Wyman and Ann Gillis (bet she is an Irisher). She is a cute little trick.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

MY LOVE CAME BACK: Olivia de Havilland, Jeffrey Lynn, Charles Winninger, Jane Wyman, Eddie Albert—Had more good comments than most any other picture so far this year. Business not so good the first night but doubled the second night. Running time, 81 minutes. Played September 19-20.—B. F. Jackson, Delta Theatre, Ruleville, Miss. General patronage.

RIVER'S END: Dennis Morgan, Elizabeth Earl—Very good entertainment for a small town. A good story with plenty of action and comedy. In fact, the bar room fight scene and comedy rocked my house with laughter. What a change to have an audience get a real good laugh these times. Can recommend this for any spot. Running time, 70 minutes. Played September 12.—A. L. Dove, Bengough Theatre, Bengough, Saskatchewan, Canada. Rural and small town patronage.

RIVER'S END: Dennis Morgan, Elizabeth Earl—Good action picture which pleased. Running time, 70 minutes. Played September 3.—E. M. Freiburger, Paramount Theatre, Dewey, Okla. Small town patronage.

ships, convicted men groaning and pulling at the oars in the galleys. A parade of action shots, some very creditable exploits by Flynn and it might be Sir Francis Drake whom Flynn portrays. Miss Robson looked and acted like good Queen Bess and Brenda Marshall in her first starring role was both very clever and good looking. The picture should please all audiences seeing it. Played September 13.—William Noble, Criterion Theatre, Oklahoma City, Okla. General patronage.

TEAR GAS SQUAD: Dennis Morgan, John Payne, Gloria Dickson—I thought this one of the best program pictures of the year. Will stand one day anywhere. Played August 17.—B. F. Jackson, Delta Theatre, Ruleville, Miss. General patronage.

Miscellaneous

SON OF INGAGI (Hollywood Productions)—This is absolutely the poorest excuse for a picture that I have ever seen. Due to bad condition of print, I screened this one and I am sure glad I did, so that I did not burden the customers with it. I wouldn't run this picture on a free show. "Midnight Shadow" is another all colored cast picture that is just as bad. Running time, listed as 75 minutes; actual running time, 55 minutes.—John W. Warner, Plaza Theatre, Greenville, N. C. Colored patronage.

TWO CONTRIBUTORS JOIN DEPARTMENT

Two exhibitors this week join those contributing to the What the Picture Did for Me department. They are:

IRVIN BAKER, JR., Roaring Spring Theatre, Roaring Spring, Pa.

IRVIN A. WESTENSKOW, Roxy Theatre, Union, Ore.

Read the reports of these and other exhibitors in the adjoining columns.

SWING SOCIAL: Cartoons—Very good cartoon. I hope Harmon-Ising will get back into the stride of two years ago and imitate more colored characters as they are entertaining and help the colored houses. Running time, one reel.—John W. Warner, Plaza Theatre, Greenville, N. C. Colored patronage.

SWING SOCIAL: Cartoons—This is an excellently executed color cartoon, but it proved boring to a group of college students. They are more apt to be interested in swing than anyone else around here, and, if they didn't like it, I don't know who would. It is very difficult to understand the talk in it. Running time, eight minutes.—W. Varick, Nevins, Ill., Alfred Co-Op Theatre, Alfred, N. Y. Small college town and rural patronage.

TRIFLES OF IMPORTANCE: Passing Parade, No. 15—Entertaining. Running time, 10 minutes.—E. M. Freiburger, Paramount Theatre, Dewey, Okla. Small town patronage.

WOMEN IN HIDING: Crime Doesn't Pay Series—I don't think this one as good as the average "Crime Doesn't Pay" series. Running time, 22 minutes.—Ray Peacock, Onalaska Theatre, Onalaska, Wash. Loggers and mill workers patronage.

MGM MINIATURES—Just so so.—Ray Peacock, Onalaska Theatre, Onalaska, Wash. Loggers and mill workers patronage.

Paramount

ANTS IN THE PLANTS: Color Classics—This is a lively color cartoon that will be enjoyed by any audience. The ants have the queerest voices in this subject or else the sound track we had was defective. I guess it was done on purpose. Running time, eight minutes.—W. Varick Nevins, III, Alfred Co-Op Theatre, Alfred, N. Y. Small college town and rural patronage.

FEMALES IS FICKLE: Popeye the Sailor—Ordinary Popeye.—Ray Peacock, Onalaska Theatre, Onalaska, Wash. Loggers and mill workers partonage.

POPULAR SCIENCE: No. 1—Very good.—Ray Peacock, Onalaska Theatre, Onalaska, Wash. Loggers and mill workers patronage.

PUDGY THE WATCHMAN: Betty Boop Cartoons—The cartoon market is being overrun. This one is only fair.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

SPRINGTIME IN THE ROCK AGE: Stone Age Cartoons—Just an average black and white cartoon. Running time, seven minutes.—E. M. Freiburger, Paramount Theatre, Dewey, Okla. Small town patronage.

RKO Radio

BANDITS AND BALLADS: Ray Whitley Comedies—An entertaining short of Whitley and his band. Good singing all the way through. One of those cowboy numbers that will help out a weak feature. Runing time, 20 minutes.—Emerson Theatre, Hartford, Ark. Small town and rural patronage.

INFORMATION PLEASE: No. 8—Very good single reel short. This is one of the favorite shorts for this neighborhood. It keeps young and old well occupied for the duration of its run and in my estimation is very educational. Running time, 10 minutes.—George O. Wiggin, Maplewood Theatre, Malden, Mass. Neighborhood patronage.

INFORMATION PLEASE, NO. 11—Christopher Morley is the guest in this one and it is as good as all the others. They go over very well here. If only the sound could be just a little better on them. Running time, 10 minutes.—W. Varick Nevins, III, Alfred Co-Op Theatre, Alfred, N. Y. Small college town and rural patronage.

MARCH OF TIME, No. 11: U. S. Navy, 1940—This March of Time was very good and was very interesting in view of the current publicity in regard to National Defense. Running time, 18 minutes.—J. M. Thomsen, Center Theatre, Marlette, Mich. Rural and small town patronage.

MARCH OF TIME. No. 11: U. S. Navy—1940—Very well pictured and very interesting as well. Running time, 20 minutes.—George O. Wiggin, Maplewood Theatre, Malden, Mass. Neighborhood patronage.

MARCH OF TIME, NO. 11: U. S. Navy—1940—Most instructive. Made for American audiences.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

MERBABIES: Walt Disney Cartoons—Good color cartoon. Running time, seven minutes.—E. M. Freiburger, Paramount Theatre, Dewey, Okla. Small town patronage.

TRUTH ACHES: Leon Errol Comedies—Funny all the way through. It's awful hard to get the audience back to normal after one of these. Running time, 18 minutes.—Irvin Baker, Jr., Roaring Theatre, Roaring Spring, Pa. Rural and small town patronage.

PUT PUT TROUBLE: Walt Disney Cartoons—This color cartoon nearly brought down the house. It is fast action from beginning to end and extremely clever all the way. Just when you think some other cartoons are catching up to Disney, he jumps far out in front with one like this. Running time, eight minutes.—W. Varick Nevins, III, Alfred Co-Op Theatre, Alfred, N. Y. Small college town and rural patronage.

Author Decision Sets Precedent

The decision by which Samuel Mandelbaum, federal judge, denied a temporary injunction in U. S. district court in New York September 18th to Eleanor Harris, author, to restrain Twentieth Century-Fox from distributing and exhibiting the film "Brigham Young" is the first in the United States to hold that an author may divest himself of his moral rights it was said this week by Edwin P. Kilroe, Twentieth-Fox copyright lawyer and industry authority on the subject.

Mr. Kilroe said the contention abroad was that moral rights are not assignable and this principle was partially written into the Berne Convention in Paragraph 6 bis, although the enforcement of the principle was left to the law of each member of the Convention.

The plaintiff, Eleanor Harris, in her suit claimed that she was the author of the original story and co-author of the motion picture treatment. The plaintiff sought relief predicated upon the contention that the failure of the defendant to give her the proper screen credit was a fraud upon her in that she was deprived of publicity and credit to which she was entitled.

The defendant, in contesting the application submitted that the plaintiff was not the author of the story and as a matter of law was not entitled to any screen credit whatsoever although it did give her screen credit for "story research."

Judge Mandelbaum denying the motion for a temporary injunction in summing up the case said: "In the contract, it is provided that the defendant would be deemed the author of the literary property created by the plaintiff during her term of employment and that she divested herself of all rights generally known as the moral rights of authors, which rights include the right to credit as author of a work."

Final Title Judgment

Felix Benvenga, New York supreme court justice, this week signed a final judgement restraining Film Alliance of the United States from using the title "Fifth Column Squad" for its film originally titled "Spies of the Air." The injunction was obtained after suit was filed by Ernest Hemingway, Benjamin Glazer and the Theatre Guild, Inc., which had charged infringement and contended that the words "Fifth Column" belong exclusively to Mr. Hemingway as creator of the play of the same title.

Income Tax Refunded

The Internal Revenue Bureau in Washington this week disclosed that on July 18th it had determined that the R&R Theatres, Inc., Dallas, was entitled to a refund and credit of $59,104.52 on their income tax return for 1937. It was explained that the amount represented deficiencies in tax and interest assessed against the company as a transferee of the assets of other taxpayers whom later investigation showed to have no tax liabilities.

Goldwyn Amends UA Complaint

His contract with United Artists having five years to run, until September 2, 1945, Samuel Goldwyn on Monday filed an amended complaint to his suit against that company, seeking to cancel this contract and enjoining United Artists from interfering with any plans he may have to distribute elsewhere.

Mr. Goldwyn also seeks $215,000 damages for himself and his company, Samuel Goldwyn, Inc., charging interference with his aims to distribute elsewhere the picture, "The Westerner." He claims UA forced him to distribute that picture through them. George Z. Medalie is Mr. Goldwyn's attorney.

Mr. Goldwyn claims that United Artists permitted Alexander Korda and London Film Production, Ltd., to have a financial interest in Harefield Productions, Ltd., of London. This constituted a violation of his contract, he charges, because Harefield distributed the films, "The Spy in Black" and "Q Planes" through Columbia Pictures. Recent efforts to settle the Goldwyn-UA controversy out of court failed.

In the amended complaint the cost of "The Westerner" was claimed to be $1,200,000.

Pay Claim Action

Marian Palmer, as assignee of Moe Messeri, former general manager in Portugal and Spain for Twentieth Century-Fox, filed suit in New York supreme court this week for $6,000 against the company. The plaintiff charges that the sum sought is back pay for Mr. Messeri under an agreement by which he received one-third of his salary in Spain while the other two-thirds was to be deposited in a New York bank. The complaint claims the defendant failed to make deposits after September, 1939.

Sues on "Ninotchka"

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Pictures, MGM Distributing Corporation and Loew's Inc., have been named defendants in a suit for an injunction, accounting and damages filed by Stephen Tamas in New York supreme court. The action charges the defendants with infringing the plaintiff's "Moscow, Paris and Return," in the film "Ninotchka."

Song Action Filed

Suit for $250,000 damages has been filed in New York supreme court by Byron Gay against Twentieth Century-Fox, Robbins Music Corporation and Leo Feist, Inc. The complaint charges that the defendants infringed the plaintiff's song, "The Vamp," in the film "Rose of Washington Square."

Philadelphia Suit Filed

The National Association of Performing Artists has filed suit in Common Pleas court in Philadelphia seeking an injunction to restrain station KYW from broadcasting phonograph records. Use of the records was made on both sustaining and commercial programs, the complaint states. The suit contends that the station has broadcast records made by members of NAPA despite the fact that the records were made for use on phonographs in homes and that they were forbidden for commercial purposes.

Delay Drive-In Case

The injunction case brought against the Drive-In theatre, Pittsburgh, by 85 neighboring residents based on a claim that the screen speaker created excessive noise has been indefinitely continued. Norbert Stern and George Davis, operators, agreed to lower the pitch of their amplifiers and to install a system of ground speakers if they reopen the theatre next spring.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE

An international association of showmen meeting weekly in MOTION PICTURE HERALD for mutual aid and progress

A-MIKE VOGEL, Chairman and Editor GERTRUDE MERRIAM, Associate Editor

Looking at It from This Corner

Immediate acceptance of Charlie Schlaifer's "column" advertising approach for the United Artists, in San Francisco, is noted by the amount of mail received by the theatre in praise of the idea. Reproduced in last week's issue, the "column", run in other pages other than the drama section, carried a specialized appeal directed at the infrequent patron.

In breaking the new copy, Schlaifer reasons there are potential ticket-buyers who do not read the drama pages. That would be something to ponder.

The New Haven Register has decided to expand and streamline its motion picture pages, a previously neglected service. Local theatremen as a result are elated. The paper also should be, in fully awakening to the circulation value of the movies.

Newspapers less than open-handed on conventional publicity ofttimes are cooperative when material is injected with a local slant. Thus, the conservative press of Utica, N. Y., was sold on running almost a column prepared by Arnold Stoltz, on the stressing of patriotic and purely American themes in the new season's product. The story was tied in locally with expressions from every manager in town to give the yarn a fresh and interesting news angle.

First evidence to hand in substantiation of circuitwide exploitation plans announced at recent conventions, is the electrically-decorated and sound-equipped automobile float of the Griffith circuit. Making some 40 towns in Oklahoma and Texas, the Ballyhoo, shown on another page, is telling the customers effectively on behalf of "When the Daltons Rode".

Other selected dates are to be given the same treatment. And much good can come of it. Nothing yet has equalled glittering circus-parade stuff in nailing the ticket-buyers.

Further along in the pages is a trick card idea which did well for Manager Stan Benford at Warners Colonial, Philadelphia, on "Boys from Syracuse". Folks who received the cards were invited to swap around for complete sets. According to the Round Tabler, there was a lot of laughs.

The average human hones for fun and the theatreman who provides it usually profits. That goes as well for exploitation ideas wherein the boys and girls are invited to "join the party."

"A showing like this certainly brings out the executive timber in your personnel. We know of no other way in which a theatre can garner as much goodwill, free space and additional business."

Thus speaks Manager Earle Bailey, of the Harris-Warren, Warren, Ohio, in commenting upon his second annual Employees Week program, detailed elsewhere in this section.

Theatremen usually unconcerned with election promotions, are girding themselves to take advantage of this November's drama. Up in Waterville, Maine, at the Haines, Jim O'Donnell is aiming for attention with a political score card listing the states and their electoral votes. Space next to each, under the different party headings, is to be filled in on election day.

The heralds distributed in advance, will announce that returns are to be given from the stage. That should satisfy politically-concerned patrons who might otherwise remain away.

Suggested by Harry Goldberg, circuit ad head, as a means to heighten boxoffice interest in coming pictures based on books, the free circulating lobby library has spread all over the Warner theatres. Success of the plan is found in the quick demand which far exceeds the supply. Attractively displayed, the books are given only to patrons with telephones as a measure for control of borrowers. Though deposits or rentals are not required, the losses have been found to come to less than two per cent.

Among immediate results is a decided increase in the number of inquiries regarding playdates of pictures with book backgrounds.

Round Table In Pictures

Reported by Sam Gilman at Loew's, in Dayton, was street bally engineered by his assistant, Tommy Delbridge, for "Boom Town". Girls, wearing white sweaters with red embroidered cast and title letters, visited night baseball games and other spots where crowds gathered.

Giant directional arrows, 16 by 5 feet, were planted on all roads leading into Niagara Falls in connection with the opening of "Boom Town" at the Cataract Theatre, Niagara Falls. Teaser stunt was arranged by Manager Harold Wackett, says ad man, Dick Walsh.

Arranged by the Warner LaFalce ad forces, in Washington, D. C., for "Howards of Virginia" at the Earle Theatre, were two window displays in furniture store illustrating furniture popular in the Revolutionary period.

Sure-fire attractor was street stunt employed by Russ Bovim for "Foreign Correspondent" at Loew's Ohio, in Columbus. Girl seated atop stepladder, sides of which were appropriately bannered, tuned in to news broadcasts picked up on radio carried for that purpose.

Tying in with five-and-dime store, Pat Notaro at the Columbia, in Sharon, Pa., planted "Sea Hawk" cards on all weighing machines. Guest tickets were offered to those drawing cards which bore a cut of any of the stars appearing in the picture.

THIRD "QUARTER-MASTER" AWARDS DECIDED BY JUDGING COMMITTEE

Honors Voted to 84 Entrants in Three Quigley Divisions; Callow Takes Third Plaque as Previous Winners Score

by A-MIKE VOGEL

THE important decisions for the Third Quarter have been made and set down on this page are the results arrived at by the Judging Committee for the Quarter-Master honors. In all, 84 entrants are named. Three take down Plaques, five, the Medals and 76 share the Citations. All the winners were previously listed in the "Fortnights" of the Quarter and selected for Quarterly consideration principally because of their records made in the preliminaries.

With a Plaque award to E. C. Callow, the Philadelphia Warner ad head now becomes the first Round Tabler this year to win these honors for the third time. Ed Fitzpatrick also adds to his Plaque honors, making his current award the second of the year. Chuck Shannon enters the Plaque division for the first time, topping his previous high of a Medal, in the Second Quarter.

Among the Medal names, every winner is a "repeater." Thus, Johnny Barcroft steps up from the Citation list, as does Arnold Stoltz. Ken Grimes adds a Medal to his score, as does Francis Deering. And Roy Wheeler, with two Plaques, also makes his a perfect score with a current Medal classification.

The Citation listings also include a number of Plaque and Medal names from the First and Second Quarters. In addition, while there will be noted that the majority under this heading have been there before, as to be expected, newcomers again are to the fore. Many promise to be prominently in the Competitions for the rest of the year.

Special Citation Voted

As usual, the judges' findings leaned more to those entrants who had scored most often in the Fortnight periods. It was felt that a winner in one preliminary should be able to repeat. In all cases, however, full consideration was given to individual entries as noted by the Special Quarter-Master Citation voted to Frank V. King, for his unique County Fair and Stock Show on the stage of the Midland, in Newark, Ohio, and detailed in these pages, some issues back.

The Judging Committee comprised Arthur Mayer, of the New York Rialto Theatre, Harry Goldberg, of Warner Brothers Theatres, and Hal Danson, of Paramount Pictures.

The Fourth and concluding Quarter of the year now occupies the spotlight. Much is anticipated from, and much will be done by aspiring theatremen both for the Fortnight and Quarter-Master distinctions. Six two-week periods remain, the first of which is current.

Syracuse Mayor Telegraphs Bridgeport Mayor on "Boys"

Good for stories and two columns of art was stunt arranged for "Boys from Syracuse" by Morris Rosenthal at the Majestic, in Bridgeport who arranged for a wire from Mayor Marvin of Syracuse to be sent to Mayor McLevy congratulating him on playing the picture that had its world premiere in Syracuse.

Street bally consisted of boys with sports sweaters and title on backs riding bicycles about town, attending baseball games, beaches and midget auto races during the week. Cart was also converted into a chariot, properly bannered and driven around by lads in togas. Girl dressed in Grecian outfit distributed special heralds in theatre lobby ahead and since she had a good singing voice, Rosenthal arranged for her to be booked into several night clubs where they have bands, singing hit tunes from the picture.

Since one of the stills from the picture shows Joe Penner eating a popsicle, window strips were made up for all Fro-joy dealers, theatreman also promoting 1,000 popsicles for giveaway to children attending Saturday matinee.

Peters Ties Department Store To "Boom Town" Treasure Hunt

A Boom Town Treasure Hunt, staged in cooperation with Reading's largest department store, was the highlight of the "Boom Town" campaign put over by George Peters for the film's premiere at Loew's Colonial. Entry blanks were distributed to all making purchases at any counter. The store's customers then were asked to identify, from stills planted in each department, the names of pictures in which the stars of "Boom Town" previously had appeared. Window cards in every front window of the store, carrying appropriate copy, plugged the film and the Treasure Hunt

Corker's Planted "Love" Ad Tied to Feature Stories

His good standing with the local press was indicated recently by Moon Corker for his date on "My Love Came Back," at the Palace, Athens, Ga., on a teaser personal ad campaign waged by the L&J city manager in advance of the date. Corker inserted a personal greeting as follows: "Information Wanted. A researcher in preparation of a book on Social Problems and Marriage seeks information on number of people who remarry after divorce. Confidential. Write Box DF. Banner Herald."

From there it was picked up by the daily paper for a front page story which referred to the personal and detailed the efforts of one of the staff to dig up some of the results requested in the ad. Few days later, feature article was run on "Remarriage After Divorce," of which the picture treats, to tie in with the theatre advertising on the date.

"LET'S HEAR FROM YOU"

Atmospheric Record Builds "Ghost Breakers" Trailer

For additional color on the "Ghost Breakers" trailer at the LeClaire, in Moline, Ill., Manager Francis Gillon devised a novelty record made at a local store and run immediately in advance, record playing over sound system with the house blacked out. Opening with oriental gong crashes followed by "villainous laughter," two voices supposedly in a haunted house were heard, one straight and the other in negro dialect. They argued back and forth about where "it" was, or was not. On discovery of the "it," the straight voice called for "the gun," which was followed by shots and high pitched screams.

As the shots were fired, a skeleton made of celluloid and treated with luminous substance swept across the auditorium on a wire. As it disappeared back stage, the trailer opened with Bob Hope greeting the audience.

Fitz Invites 'Em To Pose As Stars

Adding a bit to his previously used gag of inviting patrons to pose alongside of full-size star cutouts, Ed Fitzpatrick elaborated upon the idea for "Strike Up the Band" at Loew's, Waterbury, Conn., by allowing the folks to pose behind headless figures of Mickey and Judy. Other full-lengths of the two were carried in an old jallopy which properly bannered and lettered made all the weekend football games and other gathering spots of local interest.

Fitz tied one of his music stores to a Rooney-Garland doubles contest, the store paying for heralds and other necessary materials. Another slant was put on with WBRY to conduct a song-guessing contest named after the picture. Further music tieins were made with the local park ballroom where in addition to posters on the date, guest tickets were offered for the best rhumba dancers in exchange for spot announcements. The Conga routine from the picture was featured in a dancing school revue and on opening day the high school band, in uniform played the song hits from a platform in front of the house.

Publicity was topped with a series on the life of Judy Garland and a strip showing the LaConga routine. Special syndicate features to break with the local campaign made additional helpful reading and Fitz wangled further attention with a number of prominent co-op ads. Window displays in downtown spots stressed the advertising and house-to-house promotion was handled by a dairy tiein wherein imprinted bottle tops were used for all local milk deliveries.

Offers Second Honeymoon On "Lucky Partners"

Three-day contest which proved attractor was that arranged by Dave Bachner of Warner's for date on "Lucky Partners" at the Hippodrome Theatre. All expense trip to Niagara Falls for a second honeymoon with guest tickets for runners up were offered in connection with a contest planted in the Cleveland Press, entrants being requested to submit letters on why they considered themselves lucky in love. Cooperating paper ran stories together with generous art work during life of contest, in which the picture, title and playdates were conspicuously listed.

Daley Ties "Boom Town" To Red Cross Relief Fund

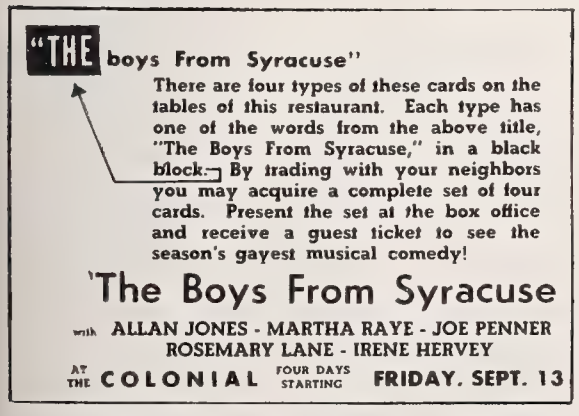
A unique exploitation angle that was not only timely but a good-will factor was that put over by H. J. Daley, Croswell, Adrian, Mich., during his "Boom Town" campaign. A container was placed at an important intersection with a sign attached stating that the four stars of the film requested local residents to help the Red Cross War Relief Fund. The public was invited to pitch coins, and those who succeeded in tossing two consecutive coins into the container were awarded guest tickets. Daley also displayed a joint telegram from the stars wishing luck to those trying for the ducats.

Reverse Roles for 'Employees Week'

Staff members of the Harris-Warren, in Warren, Ohio, ambitious to test their executive skill, were given the spotlight recently in the second annual Employees Week put on by Manager Earle Bailey, wherein each of the personnel served as manager for one day. In exchange, Bailey acted as ticket-taker, distributed window cards and took over other personnel duties for conspicuous publicity and other attentions.

The daily "manager" took over as many activities as possible, such as schedule-making, copy writing, sign layout, among other operations. Ushers planned campaigns and followed through to execute their ideas. Keen rivalry was evidenced between the personnel handling the first-half and last-half programs.

Campaign opened in advance with a series of teaser ads centering upon "abdication." One had to do with the abdication of Napoleon, another with Al Smith, a third with the New York Yankees, and so on, tag line in the ads asking "Who's Next." The answer broke day ahead, with box at top of theatre ad announcing that Bailey was "abdicating" in favor of his staff. The daily following ads then carried cuts of the personnel under the heading, "Today's Manager Is."



Endorsement Cards Distributed

Newspaper publicity was in keeping, the dailies giving the unusual event a pleasing play. Special electric sign on front of the house also called attention to Week. On the sidewalk was placed a frame with "employee" copy and each day photo of the current "manager" was inserted over a strip bearing his name.

Wide coverage for the occasion was obtained by means of a signed endorsement card distributed at the theatre, stores and from house-to-house. Copy stated that the special Week and programs had been called to the signer's attention by a member of the staff. Bailey put up prizes for those bringing in the most cards. Further awards were made for increased business to the "managers" increasing business on their day.

Among the exploitations contrived by the personnel, a walking-book stunt on "Pride and Prejudice" attracted, the book, six feet high and two wide, carried about town by two men inside.

"LET'S HEAR FROM YOU"

SWAP STUNT. For "Syracuse" at Warners' Colonial, Philadelphia, Manager Stanley Benford distributed cards, as illustrated above, in restaurants. As a result, there was much swapping, with passes limited by control of fourth blocked word.

Decorated Sound Truck Travels Griffith Towns for "Daltons"

Equipped with loud speaker for music and microphone announcements, plus electrical color signs for added displays, is the auto ballyhoo truck (above) currently used in 40 Oklahoma towns of the Griffith circuit to stimulate business on "When the Daltons Rode", and later for other selected dates. The title, spelled out in 18-inch neon letters is bordered in flashing blue, side of the truck outlined in white power neon. The art work of the horsemen is a specially made oil painting, the guns illuminated with red neon flashing to represent gun fire. Cab is trimmed in red and green lighting.

Truck carries wax figures of the four Dalton brothers and collection of pioneer "thumbuster" pistols for lobby display at the theatres. Power is furnished with 110-volt plant for the lighting and loud speaker, and generator for truck. One man travels with the outfit, with added help taken on at the various stops to distribute special handbills.

Kidwell Requests Patrons To Write "Maryland" Copy

Lobby stunt arranged by Ed Kidwell at Schine's Kent, in Kent, Ohio, for "Maryland" consisted of lobby easel carrying a few rave comments on the picture over which was sign reading: "We're stuck for copy, all we can say is." Table, typewriter and paper were available and patrons were invited to write copy after seeing the picture. To those submitting best material, guest tickets were presented. Other media used in advertising the picture was a classified ad tieup with paper which netted the theatreman 40 inches of free space over a six-day period.

For "They Drive By Night," Kidwell mailed postcards with mat of Sheridan and Raft to all truck drivers in the county, special driving rules were used in local dailies and special dialogue stills were used for lobby display week ahead.

"LET'S HEAR FROM YOU"

Festival Queen Chosen From Hauschild's Stage

For the past several years, the Northern Indiana district finals in the Indiana Tomato Festival Queen contest have been conducted in a local hotel lobby, this year, through the efforts of Thor Hauschild at the Paramount, in Marion, Ind., the activities were transferred to the theatre. Girls from all over the state converged to compete for the chance to participate in the final judging which was held on the Paramount stage.

Special set was installed and orchestra background music was furnished by a popular local band gratis, while other entertainment was spotted into the program through the cooperation of local dance studio and the Conservatory of Music. Special prizes were promoted for the winners in addition to a three-day all-expense trip to Chicago and three days at Elwood for the Tomato Festival. Activity was publicized in the local paper weeks ahead with the theatre and management coming in for plenty of extra advertising.

EXPLOITATION BRIEFS FROM A-FIELD

A hitching rack was planted in front of the Roxy Theatre, Alamo, Tenn., ahead of opening for Guido Trusty's "Buck Benny Rides Again" date, copy over all read "Here is where Jack Benny will hitch his horse when Buck Benny Rides Again." Day picture opened, Guido added an empty film can with appropriate copy.

Clipping scene stills from his press book, Chris Chamales at the Roxy, in Delphi, Ind., pastes them on the windows of his box-office so that patrons when purchasing tickets can see what the following week's attraction is.

Animated was Charles Rich's "Edison, the Man" lobby display at the Surf Theatre, in Brooklyn, through use of carbon monoxide used in all test tubes to produce steam, which were placed at base of giant cutout of Tracy.

Putting over the vivid action theme of "Boom Town," Joe Longo, Loew's Cleveland publicity man, planted a four-column art strip in the local Press, depicting the Clark Gable-Spencer Tracy battle that occurs in the film, as part of the advance campaign for the picture there.

A lavish buffet dinner in honor of the city's oil pioneers was one of the highlights of the "Boom Town" campaign put over by R. H. Suits, Loew's, Evansville, Ind. On opening night a police-escorted parade covered the downtown area. There was a special 15-minute broadcast from the lobby during which local dignitaries were interviewed. One week in advance, all downtown streets were stencilled with "Boom Town" copy, bumper strips were used by 100 taxis and 250 "Boom Town" arrows were used to round out the campaign.

A letter, outlining the every-day background of "We Who Are Young," and pointing out how the characters in the picture might have been drawn right out of the average home these days, was prepared and sent out to a large mailing list by Walt Dunn, publicity director for Paramount-Richards, and L. M. Ash, Tudor, New Orleans, as part of their campaign for the film.

Hit tunes from "Strike Up the Band" were plugged by a local high school band at the first student dance of the new term as part of the campaign for the film put over by Bill Elder, Loew's, Harrisburg. Guest tickets were awarded the five couples selected as the best rhumba dancers.

In order to ascertain how many times a week his patrons attend his theatre, and what their preferences are in film fare, Bill Yeakle at the Kentucky, in Danville, Ky., recently distributed a questionnaire to his customers. To insure their return, Bill carried a note at the bottom to the effect that a certain number of them would be picked at random for guest tickets. In addition, the theatreman received a more up-to-date mailing list for his use.

GRAND PRIZE OFFERED FOOTBALL "GUESSERS"

For the eighth annual football guessing contest co-sponsored by the Haines, Waterville, Me., and the local Sentinel, Manager Jim O'Donnell is working out plans for a grand prize to the entrant with the highest average for the season's games. This will include trip to Boston, attendance at theatres and night clubs, 50-yard line seats for the Yale-Harvard game.

Paper runs weekly box of 20 representative Saturday games, readers asked to place an "X" in square opposite each team to designate selection of winner. A third square is added for tie guesses. Weekly prizes are guest tickets for first ten entrants submitting nearest correct number of winners to paper, before noon on Fridays. Contest box also carries listing of programs at the theatre.

In planning his campaign for "All This and Heaven, Too," Frank Shaffer at the Dixie, in Staunton, Va., used a select mailing list to reach people out of the city, special heralds being distributed to these folks. These were also stuffed in Sunday papers and handed out to workers in factories. Book displays were landed in leading stores, contest planted in newspaper and special lobby display built for the occasion.

Five and dime stores featured a "Boom Town" sundae, stickers were pasted on autos, poles and windows, bakers and grocers imprinted bags with title copy and numerous displays were landed in store windows. Assistant Jim Ackron aided on the campaign.

Week before opening of ATAHT at the Warner Smoot, in Parkersburg, West Va., F. T. Thomas for a teaser stunt stencilled a large letter "A" on sidewalk in front of theatre. Each succeeding day a letter was added to each flagging until ATAHT was completed. On opening day, the title in full was completed, with the word "now" at the top and an arrow at the bottom pointing to entrance. Stunt created considerable curiosity and rated mention in newspapers. THE CHART

Productions are listed under distributors. Features in work or completed for release later than the date of this issue are listed as "Coming Attractions." Parenthesis after title denotes audience classification: (A) Adult, (G) General. Numerals following classification are production numbers. Dagger (†) indicates the 1940-41 season. Asterisk (*) after title denotes first appearance.

NOTE: The totals for running time are the official figures.

When a production is reviewed the running time is as given by the studio and this is denoted by an asterisk (*) preceding the number. When the home office has established the running time for national release, the studio figure is changed. Running times are subject to change according to local conditions. State or city censorship deletions or repairs to the film may cause variations.

By An Exhibitor

FOR years I've read about the STUDIO that makes the hits!
UNTIL you see it with your own eyes
YOU don't know
THE half of it!
I SAW acres of activity, factories, mills—
I SAW power plants, office buildings—
I SAW miles of clean, wide streets
LINED with huge stages where DREAMS come true!
I FOUND STABILITY! SECURITY!
I surveyed this exciting scene with the PRIDE of partnership for truly
THE solidity of this Studio is
A cooperative responsibility
BETWEEN the men who make the pictures and
WE who exhibit them.
I WAS at the preview of

"THIRD Finger, Left Hand" (Myrna Loy, Melvyn Douglas)
I roared with that howling audience and
I predict it will top "I Love You Again."
I SAT with the first enthralled public to see
"ESCAPE" that great film from a great book!
(Norma Shearer is the Countess, Robert Taylor is the lover.)
I laughed and wept at Judy Garland's
"LITTLE Nellie Kelly" a darling of a show.
I attended the historic preview of "THE Philadelphia Story," (a New Year's Gift!)
HERE is box-office entertainment that SPARKLES with fun, romance and CAST! (Cary Grant, Katharine Hepburn, James Stewart)
I SAW "Bitter Sweet" in the projection room!
SUCH opulence of Technicolor spectacle has NEVER before graced the screen
SUCH music (Jeanette MacDonald, Nelson Eddy) has NEVER been heard since magic sound began!
I'M thrilled to return to my theatre
INSPIRED by the infectious pep of M-G-M
BY my talks with its down-to-earth
PRODUCING staff, directors, executives!
BY the many M-G-M stars and by the AMAZING group of young stars on the way UP!
I SAW the smoothest functioning organization

"TOO BIG TO TRY"

AS the alleged time for the signing of that "Consent Decree" in the Government's anti-trust action, and its submission to the court approached, all that was certain was that nothing was certain, unless it might be more confusion and further delay.

This mid-week there were prospects that the controversy might not be settled before the national election.

Not since the Corticelli kitten in electric lights played with tangled strands of yarn over Broadway has the motion picture industry viewed so competently complete a picture of confusion.

The contribution of the suit so far is closely equivalent to that conferred by the Blue Eagle planning period and its Code when the Government essayed designs for industry. The Blue Eagle matter is now remembered only for the degree of delay, interruption and confusion it generated.

It is now reported by Mr. Ed Kuykendall that Mr. Thurman Arnold told him that if the industry did not accept the decree, the trial might "go on for ten or twelve years".

Once upon a time reporters used to have fun around police station press tables formulating headlines for stories too big to print. Now we have a lawyer talking about a lawsuit too big to try.

"POCKET MONEY"

PROBABLY there is nothing to be done about it, but the rise of installment selling, which seems to go on with increasing intensity, has done and is doing this motion pic ture business no good. The impression rises again just now after a Sunday night loitering over the newspapers.

It seems that nowadays one may have not only an automobile or a house and lot for a little down and some more now-and-then but also a baby, a travel tour, anything at all to wear, radios, pianos, diamonds, including most everything that is unnecessary. Probably the largest item is the installment automobile, which is usually only a device for taking people from where they are discontented to some place where they will be disappointed. No motor car, however, can take the customer away from himself, which the screen does often manage to do. That is what he is looking for, usually.

Once, all selling was addressed at the money burning in pocket. But now the merchandisers, competition driven, sell into tomorrow's earnings, exploiting the childish human frailty that can see today but cannot imagine the day after that Curiously interesting is the recent announcement of a New York department store, operating for many, many years on a widely proclaimed cash-buy and cash-sales program, of a new scheme by which even cash is sold on the installment plan. The store does not sell goods on credit; it only sells scrip "on time" on the promise to pay, for buying now.

The motion picture with its cash transaction at the box office has to be bought with money in hand—which means what is left over after the credit sellers and installment plans have taken their bit.

Many a scheme has been tried, sometimes with success, to pre-sell the drama, concerts, recitals and opera with season tickets by subscription. Only one further step, adopting the installment plan, would put thet selling in step with the competing merchandisers—and might just possibly be a device, in some situations, for the picture theatre. Any such plan, obviously, would not fit with "juggled admissions".

WHO SAYS?

FROM Cue, an amusement guide magazine of the New York area, came the other day proud proofs of a piece about an optical gadget, starting with: "When you go to your local movie theatre and come out bleary-eyed and tottering, weak with the jumping jitters and blind staggers symptomatic of audiences exhausted by the endurance contests euphemistically termed 'motion picture entertainment', just remember this one thing: The double features don't give you bouncing eyeballs. The double focuses do. . . . "

In this manner a departmental writer seeks to introduce, once again, another of those optical systems which promise to put all planes of a scene in precise focus. This time it is by "electronic oscillation".

The same general idea turns up about as often as the stereoscopic picture did for a spell.

Meanwhile, one cannot recall seeing all those "bleary-eyed and tottering" persons mentioned.

Competent projection with competent projection machines common to the screen of today, and for many a year, has produced no such devastating effect.

Incidentally, nobody actually wants any better focal capacity than the screen now enjoys. The camera sees much better than the eye, anyway. Also the place for sharp focus is where the accent of action and interest is, and between the director and cameraman they keep it there.

If Cue will tell where the pictures are, Hollywood will keep them in focus.

THAT perennial friend of the films, Mr. Damon Runyon, who writes "On the Brighter Side" for Hearst papers, the other day remarked: "Nearly all the critics started off their comment on 'Boom Town' by saying it was great entertainment, then several of them wound up by saying it was not a great picture. . . . Now what we say is that any picture that is great entertainment is per se a great picture. That is the fundamental principle of picture making—entertainment. It is absolutely all the cash customers of the movies ask. . . . "

COLLECTORS of oratorical and rhetorical stereotypes will now be indebted to the editorial page of the New York Times for a new one, in a piece talking of the wide spread of the technique of photography, which proclaimed "hundreds of camera clubs from Caribou, Me., to Port Arthur, Texas". In the old days it was "from the rock-bound coast of Maine to the shores of sunny California". That was, in turn, supplanted by "from the pine-clad hills of Minnesota to the silvery Rio Grande". —Terry Ramsaye

This Week in the News

To Rebuild Temple?

SHIRLEY TEMPLE is on the mind, or minds, of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer. Reports, not so accurate, have been about for a week that MGM was to sign the little Miss. Fact is MGM at midweek was not sure. There were two states of mind, one that she would perhaps prove important, teamed with some one, say for instance Judy Garland, the other that it might be too long a chance. Judy, you will be remembering, is the one the studio elected for the answer when Louis B. Mayer returned from Europe somewhat indignant that Deanna Durbin had escaped and triumphed elsewhere. The real issue being debated now is whether the decline of Shirley was her own or belonged to the nature of the vehicles of decline.

Trailer Defense

"PRIMER OF American Defense," three and a half minute trailer made for the Committee to Defend America by Aiding the Allies, was presented last week at the Trans-Lux Theatres, in New York, Boston, Washington and Philadelphia.

The trailer, which has a musical background but no commentary, shows an animated map of the eastern seaboard and the Atlantic Ocean. A title appears: "The first thing an invader must have, is bases from which to operate."

Then the proximity of the British and French-owned bases to the Atlantic seaboard and the air-mileage to the principal American cities in that area is shown. The possibility of Germany taking control of the French-owned islands of St. Martin, Martinique and Guadaloupe, within five hours' of the Panama Canal and the Island of St. Pierre, an ideal submarine base, is pointed out.

The trailer was made for the Committee under the personal supervision of Paul Benjamin, of National Screen Service. Schuyler Bradt, of the motion picture section of the Committee's publicity department, directed arrangements for the preparation, production and distribution of the film.

"Wind" Blows

"GONE With the Wind," having played to more than 2,500,000 New Yorkers, was to conclude its run in that city's Astor Theatre Sunday evening, making way for the Tuesday evening opening of Charles Chaplin's "The Great Dictator."

Only one picture, "The Big Parade," played longer at the Astor than "Gone With the Wind's" ten months. During part of its run at the Astor, the "Wind" competed with itself at the Capitol, several blocks away, and at New York neighborhood theatres.

The 2,500,000th person in New York to see the picture, arrived at the Astor Monday night. MGM admitted her free, gave her a copy of Margaret Mitchell's book. Her name is Mrs. John Corsa, and she lives in Lynbrook, Long Island.

FM for Television?

TELEVISION is considering frequency modulation transmission, according to Dr. W. R. G. Baker, head of the National Television Systems Committee. In a speech on Tuesday before the Radio Manufacturers Association at the Hotel Roosevelt, New York, Dr. Baker said this might delay the adoption of standards by the industry but he was hopeful of meeting the January 1st deadline.

Color television is only a minor problem, compared with FM television as far as standards are concerned, Dr. Baker asserted. He believes, moreover, that agreement will be so substantial as to leave no doubt that the bulk of the industry is supporting any standards ultimately adopted.

RMA members saw a demonstration of color television, Tuesday, at the CBS studios in the company of FCC Chairman James L. Fly, who later was their guest at an informal dinner. Plans were made for the 17th annual RMA convention and trade show at the Stevens Hotel, Chicago, June 10-11.

A committee will be appointed to draft standards for advertising copy to be used by RMA members. Committees will also be appointed for co-operation on the national defense program.

And Mickey, too

WALT DISNEY'S "Fantasia", multiple sound track, two-eared sound perspective, color cinema painting, which is before long to roadshow about, with a New York run at the Broadway theatre, is being subjected to the trickle system of publicity. There is no story, only a little of something now and then. It is a teaser method.

This week along comes, by way of a piece in Technicolor's houseorgan, by Janet Martin, director of Disney studio publicity, an announcement that "the only familiar character in 'Fantasia' will be Mickey Mouse. All the other characters are now imaginative creations—literally thousands of fresh personalities, ranging from tiny sprites to giant dinosaurs."

That's all very well, but none of them will be fresher than Mickey. Mr. Disney doesn't dare leave him out.

FCC is Listening

INQUIRY into foreign language broadcasts in the United States was launched Wednesday by the Federal Communications Commission in Washington. The Commission ordered a questionnaire sent to standard stations requesting complete data on programs in foreign languages.

FCC officials, on Tuesday, held a conference with representatives of international short wave stations, discussing plans for controlling foreign language broadcasts by requiring speakers to reduce their addresses to writing and to adhere to their scripts faithfully.

Some five per cent of the nation's 700-odd stations use foreign language broadcasts and many national advertisers use foreign language broadcasts for specialized markets. About $3,000,000 is spent annually for this type of broadcasts.

Fairbanks Fortune

EXCEPTION to the old adage that "actors never die rich," is Douglas Fairbanks, Sr., who passed away last December 12th. A motion to declare him a nonresident and to fix taxes granted by Surrogate James A. Foley on Tuesday in New York, indicated that the actor left a gross estate of $2,742,060, and a net estate of $2,318,651.

Schedules filed with the petition showed that Mr. Fairbanks owned property in California, New York and Pennsylvania. His West Coast holdings consisted mainly of real estate in and around Hollywood.

New York property consisted of two trusts, one for $693,738 held by the Guaranty Trust Company, and the other valued at $550,020, held by the Bankers Trust Company. In Pennsylvania, there is a $192,728 trust principal with the Union Trust Company.

The only tangible property found in New York, was a mink-lined overcoat, appraised at $100, a bag of miscellaneous golf clubs worth $15 and parts of an exercise machine considered valueless. It will be recalled that Mr. Fairbanks was an athlete.

Willkie Sees Double

WENDELL WILLKIE, Republican Presidential nominee, saw a double feature program Tuesday afternoon during his visit to New York City, in which he addressed a Times Square throng in front of the Father Duffy Statue. The double feature program is in the store-clubrooms of the Federated Willkie Clubs of America, sandwiched between the Palace Theatre and the Embassy Newsreel. On it are "Meet Wendell Willkie" and "No Third Term."

Whitney Coordinates

MOTION picture activies of the coordinator of commercial and cultural relations between the American republics, part of the national defense council, will come under the direct administration of John Hay Whitney, it was announced Wednesday by Nelson A. Rockefeller, coordinator, in Washington.

As director of the division of motion pictures, Mr. Whitney will be a chief assistant to James W. Young, director of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce of the Department of Commerce, who was appointed by Mr. Rockefeller as director of the Division of Communications, with general supervision of all motion pictures, radio and press work.

In carrying out President Roosevelt's instructions to seek to improve the relations between the American republics, Mr. Rockefeller will make the services of his organization available to film producers and distributors, broadcasters and newspaper and magazine publishers, but will not attempt to determine the policies to be followed.

Both Mr. Whitney and Mr. Young have been serving on the National Defense Advisory Commission, the former without pay.

Emporia Story

WILLIAM ALLEN WHITE is to have biographical film attentions, according to announcement of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer. Mr. White is, as of course you know, the world famous editor of a little town paper, the Emporia Gazette, out in Kansas. About the only prior attention that Kansas has had on the screen has been in the order of pictures about Quantrell, the border ruffian who burned the village of Lawrence and of the Dalton boys who shot up Coffeyville. William Rankin, script writer, has just returned to Culver City from a sojourn at Emporia looking into the career of Mr. White.

War Time Exports

NOTING a boost in South American business which the major distributors themselves are said to have not officially noted, Massce-Barnett, New York film forwarding company, is reporting that film shipments have increased 15 per cent since the European War began, one year ago.

William Barnett also observed that film forwarding to foreign countries, generally, had dropped approximately 35 per cent in the same period; this, of course, being from the closing of European countries to American films.

Film deliveries to Sweden and Finland are being resumed, he said. There had been a delay, from mine peril, and blockade (during which it was difficult to secure British navicerts); and the company had considered sending films to those countries from the West Coast, through Japan, Siberia, and Russia, instead of directly to Petsamo, in Northern Finland, the route now used. The British are again issuing navicerts, Mr. Barnett said. However, if further delays occur, the company may use the Far Eastern route, which takes 35 days, he said.

Films to North Africa, the Balkans, and the Near East, are routed around the Cape of Good Hope (South Africa) to ports on the Persian Gulf, and thence through Turkey, he said.

On Larcenous Publicity

WHEN it comes to publicity and its devious ways, one of the leading authorities is New York's busy mayor, Fiorello LaGuardia, demonstrating this week while sitting at a hearing about smut magazines to be debarred from licensed newsstands.

Counsel for defense of the publications concerned sought to have Paul Moss, license commissioner, identify offending passages.

"No," thundered the "Little Flower," "he will not qualify as an expert on filth. . . . I am not going to turn City Hall over to mountebanks to advertise obscene books."

The mayor's decision is reminiscent of the fact that certain producers of "prophylactic" pictures frequently seek to bait the editor of the HERALD into a denunciation and consequent publicity for pictures which can not be advertised.

Bar Hostile Press

TWENTY-FIVE news writers, of whom some are aliens and many are temporary residents of New York City, learned this week that the American major motion picture companies will no longer give them publicity material, no longer afford them courtesies ordinarily due a foreign newspaperman, and that their passes have been cancelled. They are correspondents of newspapers in Germany, and occupied countries.

The action is a measure of retaliation.

Newspapers and press associations represented by the correspondents are the Avrobode, Le Matin, and Chanteclair, Amsterdam; Paris Soir, Paris; The Filmgoer, Brussels; Opera Mundi, Paris; Prager Montagsblatt, Prague; Cinemonde, Paris; Berlingske Tidende, Denmark; Ceskoslovo, Prague; Pariser Tageszeitung, Paris; Cinema, Belgium; Tonfilm-Theatre-Tanz, Vienna; The Week-End, Belgium, De Telegraf, Amsterdam; National Tidende, Denmark; Le Journal, Paris; Le Petit Parisien, Paris; Cinematographie Francaise, France; ABC Press Service, Amsterdam; De Weredelkronieke, Holland, Liechensteiner Volkesblatt, Paris; and the European branch of the French news service, Havas.

Free Feature

A SIXTY minute feature will soon be competing with theatres, albeit in "non-theatrical situations," from coast to coast. It is Armand Denis' "Wheels Across Asia," acquired by the Chrysler Corporation for distribution to its dealers and, through them, to thousands of schools, clubs, churches, and the like, admission-free.

The feature is being prepared this week, with Mr. Denis retaining the lecture rights. United Artists has the theatrical rights outside the United States.

The Dictator

LAWYERS REMAIN IN CONFERENCE; SQUABBLING SLOWS DECREE ACTION

Washington Meeting at Which Signing Was Expected Ends in Confusion and Conflict; Court Sets Hearing for Next Tuesday

Conferences between representatives of the five major motion picture companies which have already agreed "in principle" to the proposed consent decree and Department of Justice officials in Washington on Tuesday and talks by the defendants among themselves in New York marked a week which some predicted would bring final agreement and signing of the document, but ended with conflict still remaining not only between the companies and the Government, but between individual companies.

On Wednesday Department of Justice officials told major company representatives that any further proposals for changes in the draft were to be submitted by Thursday at the latest.

Hearing Postponed

Judge Henry W. Goddard, who will rule on the proposed consent decree after the Department of Justice and executives and attorneys for the five theatre owning defendants compromise disputed points, postponed the hearing scheduled for last Monday until Tuesday, October 15th. At the same time the Judge referred Jacob Schechter, attorney for Max A. Cohen, head of Allied of New York, an exhibitor organization which hoped to intervene in the case to protest against the block-of-five clause, to the Department of Justice.

"I take it that the Department of Justice is acting on behalf of the entire industry and the public, so you should make your requests to them," Judge Goddard said, after Mr. Schechter raised the exhibitor organization's objections to the decree.

In Washington representatives of the five companies and the Department of Justice conferred on Tuesday from early afternoon until darkness and were unable to develop anything concrete and prepared to meet again in New York Thursday for further explorations of the consent decree proposals.

The temper of the session was such that it could not even brook the sight of a news photographer. No pictorial record was wanted.

After the three-hour conference in Washington it was made known that the company representatives were unable to agree among themselves on important points and further efforts to settle the differences would be necessary.

So confused was the picture that Wendell Berge, chief assistant to Assistant Attorney General Thurman Arnold, who presided in the latter's absence from Washington, let it be known that he would make no recommendations to either his chief or to Attorney General Robert H. Jackson until the decree had been definitely settled to the satisfaction of all the companies.

The failure to reach a quick agreement at the Washington meeting Tuesday was not a cause for surprise to the Department of Justice. Officials indicated before the conference that no consent decree would be signed that day. Contrarily, last week when the meeting was originally scheduled it was anticipated that the decree would be signed by the companies and accepted by the Government without much formality.

Film company representatives at the Washington conferencee were George J. Schaefer, president of RKO Radio; Nicholas M. Schenck, president, and J. Robert Rubin, vice-president and general counsel, Loew's, Inc.; Richard Dwight, attorney for Twentieth Century-Fox; Bertram Shipman, attorney for Chase National Bank and National Theatres; Thomas D. Thacher, attorney, and Austin C. Keough, vice-president and general counsel, Paramount; Joseph H. Hazen, vice-president, and Robert W. Perkins, general counsel, Warner Brothers.

Although final action was taken in Washington and many points still have to be settled, especially with regard to language, it was said that this was not to be interpreted as indicating a possibility of a breakdown in negotiations. The Department of Justice and the five companies are reported to wish a settlement as much as ever to avoid a costly trial which "might run ten or 12 years," according to a quotation of Mr. Arnold made by Ed Kuykendall, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, at a convention of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Western New York.

Arbitration Not Settled

Among the points still in dispute this week in the proposed consent decree were the arbitration clause and rules. Government and industry lawyers have been asserting for some time that the only differences were over matters of language. It was reported that the final draft of the decree would run considerably longer, chiefly on account of the legal language used, than the text printed in the August 10th issue of Motion Picture Herald. It was said that no basic changes have been made since that draft was completed.

United Artists and Columbia were reported to be awaiting the final draft of the decree before making their decision on opposing the decree in court on the grounds that it would be "injurious" to their interests. Attack would be directed especially against the "escape" clause in the consent decree. Universal, the other defendant, was said to have decided that it had no legal basis for attempting to intervene when the hearing should be held in court.

In addition to negotiations to reconcile differences over the proposed consent decree to end the Government's key New York case, industry and Department of Justice lawyers have been considering what disposition should be made of the many anti trust suits brought by the Government in the field. The film companies would like the field suits dismissed, if the proposed decree is adopted.

Special attention has been given to the Balaban and Katz and Fox West Coast consent decrees. It was reported that those decrees would either have to be dismissed or revised to avoid conflict with the New York consent decree. Paramount has asked that the Balaban & Katz decree be dismissed entirely on the grounds that B. & K. or distributors might find themselves in contempt of one decree as a result of having complied with the terms of the other.

This week exhibitors continued their efforts to prevent the acceptance of the blocks-of-five clause in the proposed consent decree. It was reported that exhibitors had requested their Congressmen to intervene with the Department of Justice and it was said some members of Congress had shown an interest in the protests.

At mid-week it was reported that the proposed consent decree would not be ready for submission to the court for a few weeks—possibly, or probably, not until after the Presidential election.

Illinois Group Opposes Decree

Edward G. Zorn, president of the United Theatre Owners of Illinois, has urged all members of that organization to wire or write a "strenuous protest immediately to assistant attorney general Thurman W. Arnold," attacking the proposed settlement of the motion picture case.

In a special bulletin to members Mr. Zorn wrote: "The proposed consent decree is a compromise settlement of a lawsuit between several parties and represents a typical bureaucratic attitude of the government towards business." He asserted that the block-of-five proposal "will work a costly hardship upon the exhibitor it is supposed to help. Instead of eliminating block booking it actually confirms it without the saving grace of a cancellation clause."

Connecticut MPTO Objects

The Connecticut Motion Picture Theatre Owners Association, through Herman M. Levy, executive secretary, presents its objections to the proposed consent decree in a letter sent last weekend to Mr. Arnold. The letter said in part, "It is the sentiment of this group that the proposed consent decree aggravates the problem of 'block-booking' to a degree which makes any advantages of the partial elimination of 'blind-selling' insignificant. What benefits an exhibitor will be able to see pictures before he buys them, if he has to take all or none of the pictures he sees? When the only cancellation right he has is on 'religious, racial or moral grounds'? Pictures that fall into these categories are few and far between."

It was further pointed out that "while they (exhibitors) will not have to take shorts, etc., if they do not want them, it is also obvious that distributors will make up this revenue by increased rentals."

NEELY BILL, AGAIN?

Pressure is now being put on the House Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee to revive the Neely block-booking bill.

However, members of the committee, who are engaged on many important matters, including their own re-election to Congress, have not indicated a desire to revive the measure and possibly create a situation in the House which would delay the session. Congress will probably not adjourn but recess either until after election or for three-day periods.

Congressmen are reported to feel that the new selling methods proposed in the consent decree should be tried out before new legislation is enacted. If Congress passed a bill now, it was pointed out, a different set up might be required, causing additional disorganization in the industry. If the suit settlement is not successful the Neely bill can be introduced again but in that case it will have to pass both the Senate and the House before it would become a law. The present bill has already passed the Senate.

THREE OF NEW SEASON'S FILMS MAKE DEBUT AT ROAD PREMIERES

"Knute Rockne" Opening at South Bend Climaxes Week of Celebration; "Wind" Makes Way for "Dictator" at Astor

The score in the premiere world series at midweek was three in and six to come. Of the three "Knute Rockne—All American" opened at South Bend, Ind., Friday, October 4th, climaxing a week in which nationwide tribute was paid the late Notre Dame football coach and youth builder, and rivalled the advance publicity and exploitation of a "Gone with the Wind." RKO Radio's "They Knew What They Wanted" at the Golden Gate theatre, San Francisco, and Walter Wanger's "The Long Voyage Home" at the Rivoli, New York, opened the same night, on Tuesday.

The six to come are "The Thief of Bagdad" at Warm Springs, Ga., October 14th; "The Great Dictator" at New York, October 15th; "Who Killed Aunt Maggie" at Atlanta, October 17th; "Tugboat Annie Sails Again" at Tacoma, Wash., October 18th, and "North West Mounted Police" at Regina, Saskatchewan, October 21st and the American premiere at Chicago, October 24th.

Speaking of "Gone with the Wind" the David Selznick - Metro - Goldwyn - Mayer classic is taking leave of the Astor theatre in New York Sunday to make way for Charlie Chaplin and his "The Great Dictator." "Gone with the Wind" by then will have played 44 consecutive weeks at the Astor to rather consecutive prosperity, marked this past week by a ceremony centered around the purchaser of the 2,500,000th admission.

"Knute Rockne-All American"

A crowd estimated at over 200,000, which is nearly double the normal population of South Bend, was in that city for the premiere of Warners' "Knute Rockne—All American." Hotels, restaurants and streets were jammed.

From the moment the stars detrained at the Union Station where a huge crowd had awaited their arrival for hours, jamming every inch of available space in front of the depot, it was a mad scramble for all concerned to keep up with the schedule of events which had been planned for them by the arrangements committee.

Bob Hope, who made the trip at the special request of Pat O'Brien, was master of ceremonies at practically all the functions, starting off at the station where O'Brien, Ronald Reagan, Donald Crisp, Gale Page, Rosemary Lane, Jimmy Fidler, Irene Rich, Ricardo Cortez, Owen P. Davis and Jr., Franklin D. Roosevelt, Jr., were counted among those present.

That was Thursday afternoon. Thursday night the visitors were taken to Notre Dame University where a banquet was tendered the stars and officials. WGN and 147 other stations of the Mutual Broadcasting System broadcast the dinner and special wires carried the speechmaking and introductions to 45 Notre Dame alumni dinners throughout the country.

Postmaster General Frank C. Walker, a Notre Dame alumnus, attended the South Bend dinner at which Franklin D. Roosevelt, Jr., read a letter from the President to Mrs. Bonnie Skiles Rockne, widow of Knute.

Mayor Jesse I. Pavey was host to the visitors on Friday at a huge luncheon at the South Bend Country Club. The premiere was held Friday night of four theatres, State, Palace, Colfax and Granada. The stars made appearances at all theatres, dashing madly from one to the other and being introduced by Bob Hope, who was master of ceremonies at all of the theatres.

Also Friday night, Kate Smith broadcast from the South Bend high school with the stars of the film enacting scenes from the picture. After the premiere and broadcast all the stars made appearances at a ball sponsored by the City of South Bend.

Placed Wreath on Grave

Saturday morning Pat O'Brien, who portrays the title role, accompanied by Mrs. Rockne visited and placed a wreath on the grave of Knute Rockne. Before the football game Saturday afternoon the visitors were guests of St. Mary's College at a luncheon and then taken to the stadium where Notre Dame defeated the College of the Pacific to open its 1940 season.

Alonzo Stagg, who for many years was football coach at the University of Chicago and who now is the coach of the College of the Pacific team, was honored between halves by the C Club of the University of Chicago. Mr. Stagg also appears in the film. After the game the stars were taken to the station where the Warner Brothers' special trains were waiting.

The Hollywood contingent of Warners was headed by S. Charles Einfeld, director of publicity and advertising, who supervised the arrangements, while from New York the eastern delegation was led by Mort Blumenstock.

Sam Clark, Bob Taplinger, Monroe Rubinger, Bill Rice and George Schaeffer of Warners helped to make the premiere the success it was.

Knute Rockne Week was officially proclaimed by the Governor of 14 states. Warners said this week that 400 simultaneous engagements have been set on the picture.

Warner Brothers reported that over 6,000 high schools throughout the country will dedicate their October football games to Knute Rockne with celebrations in conjunction with the film.

"They Knew What They Wanted"

"They Knew What They Wanted," co-starring Carole Lombard and Charles Laughton, and one of RKO Radio's top-notch productions of the new season, had its world premiere at the Golden Gate theatre in San Francisco Tuesday. Napa Valley, in the heart of the Grape-wine country and close-by San Francisco, is the locale of the picture.

Laughton, Zasu Pitts, Linda Hayes, Leon Errol, Simon Simone, Anne Shirley, Guy Kibbee and Wendy Barrie were among the stars to attend the opening.

A highlight of the festivities was a giant grape tub erected in the street, 90 feet in diameter and draped with three tons of grapes from the Napa Valley. A band of 30 pieces played from the marquee of the theatre. A whole city block was roped off for the world premiere.

Charles Laughton left for Chicago following the premiere of the Erich Pommer production at the Golden Gate in San Francisco to begin a personal appearance tour. The picture opens at the Palace in Chicago Friday. From there the actor will go to Detroit and then start eastward, stopping off at theatres en route.

The film opened at the Radio City Music Hall in New York Thursday. Garson Kanin, director of the picture, attended the Music Hall opening.

"The Long Voyage Home"

Walter Wanger's new John Ford production, "The Long Voyage Home," opened Tuesday at the Rivoli theatre in New York. Attending the opening were Walter Brennan, Joan Bennett, Ralph Bellamy, Loretta Young, Lillian Bond, Eddie Cantor, Murray Silverstone, Erich Pommer, Kate Smith, Lowell Thomas, H. V. Kaltenborn, Gabriel Heatter, Major Edward Bowes.

Also Wythe Williams, Jules Glaenzer, Honorable Godfrey and Mrs. Haggard, Jules Brulatour, Hope Hampton, Felix Warburg, Herbert Bayard Swope, Adam Gimbel, David Sarnoff, Conde Nast, Dr. Stephen S. Wise, Gene Tunney, Irving Berlin, Colonel and Mrs. Julius Ochs Adler, Mrs. Ogden Reid, Mr. and Mrs. Orson D. Munn and Roy W. Howard.

A United Artists release "The Long Voyage Home" is based on the four plays of the sea by Eugene O'Neill—"Moon of the Caribbees," "Bound East for Cardiff," "In the Zone" and "The Long Voyage Home." Heading the cast are John Wayne, Thomas Mitchell, Ian Hunter, Barry Fitzgerald, John Qualen, Ward Bond and Wilfred Lawson.

"The Thief of Bagdad"

"The Thief of Bagdad," Alexander Korda-United Artists film, will be given three premieres within one week. The opening Monday at Warm Springs, Ga., will be under the auspices of President Roosevelt. Sabu and June Duprez, members of the cast, will attend the premiere at the President's infantile paralysis foundation.

The picture will open at the Carthay Circle, Los Angeles, and Globe, New York, October 17th. For the former opening seats will be scaled up to $5 and proceeds will be donated to the Motion Picture Relief Fund and British-American Ambulance Corps.

Mr. Korda has extended his deal with the Russell Birdwell organization for the handling of advertising, publicity, exploitation and play dates on the picture through roadshow and first run engagements in the United States, Canada and South America.

"DICTATOR" CAUSES TRAFFIC PROBLEM

The opening of the Astor theatre box offices Monday for the sale of tickets for Charlie Caplin's "The Great Dictator" caused a traffic blocking problem in Times Square, New York.

The box offices were scheduled to open at 10 a.m., but because of the crowd of waiting ticket buyers, gathered as early at 9 a.m., the Police Department requested the theatre to open its doors earlier. Tickets went on sale at 9:30 a.m. lin's "Hynkel," will be in New York for the dual premiere.

In London "The Great Dictator" will be presented simultaneously at the Gaumont and the Odeon theatres, the former on a reserved seat policy and the latter on a continuous, popular priced policy, Arthur W. Kelly, vice-president of United Artists and head of the company's foreign department said this week.

United Artists' sales terms on the film in England will be in keeping with current theatre conditions there, Mr. Kelly said, adding that a master print being prepared for British use will be ready for shipment shortly.

The Chaplin film will open October 31st in Chicago at the Apollo and Roosevelt theatres. The Apollo will have a two-a-day policy and charge $1.65 and $1.10. At the Roosevelt the film will play continuous run at $1.10 evenings and 75 cents matinees. The terms are reported to be 70 and 30 per cent.

"North West Mounted Police"

Preparations for the world premiere in Regina, Saskatchewan, October 21st, and the American premiere in Chicago, October 24th, of Cecil B. DeMille's color epic, "North West Mounted Police" continued apace this week with much of the spotlight on Chicago where that city's powerful State Street Council is cooperating with Paramount in the premiere.

David Mayer, Jr., president of the organization whose various members collectively pay 34 per cent of the City of Chicago's annual tax bill, officially announced that the group had become sponsors for the premiere.

The Council will decorate State Street for a distance of two miles—from Congress to Lake Street—with Canadian and American flags, banners, photographs of the stars and special decorations on light standards.

Every store on State Street, including Marshall Field & Co., Chas. A. Stevens & Co., Carson Pirie Scott Co., Netcher's Boston Store, The Fair, Maurice L. Rothschild, Sears, Roebuck & Co., Henry C. Lytton & Sons and Mandel Brothers will devote its entire window display to "North West Mounted Police."

The premiere program includes a three-day gala civic celebration beginning October 22nd and concluding October 24th with the showing of the film at the Chicago theatre.

"Tugboat Annie"

The world premiere of Warners' "Tugboat Annie Sails Again" will be held October 18th in three Tacoma, Wash., theatres. Marjorie Rambeau and Alan Hale, stars of the film, will head the Hollywood contingent that will take part in the premiere activities.

"Aunt Maggie"

KUYKENDALL TELLS OF ARNOLD'S DELAY THREAT

MPTOA Unit Hears Prediction of Ten-Year Trial of Suit If Decree Is Not Signed

If the industry does not accept the proposed consent decree, the resultant anti-trust suit might drag on for "10 or 12 years," Ed Kuykendall, MPTOA president has been informed by Thurman W. Arnold, assistant U. S. Attorney General. Mr. Kuykendall made this disclosure during an address before the MPTO of New York State, at Buffalo, on Monday.

Two Allied Units Meet

The consent decree and film rentals were the principal subjects of discussion at the annual convention of the Independent Theatre Owners Protective Association of Wisconsin and Upper Michigan, last Wednesday and Thursday, October 2d and 3d, at Milwaukee.

Reports that Michigan Allied might not follow the lead of the national organization in accepting the consent decree were in circulation as the three-day convention of the group at Jackson, Michigan, which was to have opened on Monday, this week.

At Monday's meeting of the MPTO of the State of New York, in Buffalo, the organization was incorporated under the New York membership corporation law. Directorships were increased from 12 to 24. Six regional vice-presidents will be appointed. Units will be established in Albany and Syracuse.

Mr. Kuykendall told the assembled exhibitors that he opposed Government interference in the industry, charging that lawyers and courts in consent decree litigation "do not understand our business, its background and its complexities."

The MPTOA chief charged that the consent decree was arrived at before consultation with theatre owners, even though it vitally affects their interests. No decision has yet been made about the intervention of exhibitors in the Government's anti-trust suit, however, he added.

In closing, Mr. Kuykendall said he was certain there would be a shortage of "good product," especially in view of the fact that the public is now more discriminating.

Samuelson in Milwaukee

Sidney Samuelson, business manager of Allied of New Jersey, a guest speaker at the meeting of ITPA of Wisconsin and Upper Michigan at the Schroeder Hotel, Milwaukee, last Wednesday and Thursday, October 2d and 3d, spoke about the consent decree and Allied film rental survey, recently made public. Open discussion from the floor followed. It was decided to leave the matter of the consent decree in the hands of National Allied.

The exhibitors discussed the proposal of the Wisconsin Medical Society to institute daylight saving time, which, they feel, would adversely affect them.

Opposition to 16mm film competition was aired and A. C. Berkholtz, of West Bend, was appointed chairman of a committee to investigate. The practice of various chains of handing our passes for special shows was condemned.

William L. Ainsworth, Fond du Lac, was re-elected president; A. C. Gutenberg, Milwaukee, vice president, and Max Krofta, Racine, secretary. Mr. Berkholtz was designated treasurer, succeeding H. J. Mirisch.

Directors designated, in addition to the officers, were: F. J. McWilliams, John Adler, George O. Langheinrich, Bert Nathan, Mrs. Henrietta Eckardt, Ben Marcus, Mark Morgan and William Smith. The number of directors was increased from nine to 12. Harry Perlewitz, business manager, was reappointed.

Convention guests included H. M. Richey, MGM exhibitor contact representative, and Fred Strom, executive secretary of Northwest Allied.

Myers in Michigan

Abram F. Myers, general counsel of National Allied, addressed the annual convention of Michigan Allied, which opened on Monday, at the Hotel Hayes in Jackson, Michigan. Mr. Richey, former general manager of the Michigan Unit of Michigan Allied, also addressed the delegates.

In addition to the luncheon meeting in Buffalo, on Monday, two other meetings were scheduled for this week by the MPTO, State of New York, Western Zone. A meeting was held at Syracuse on Tuesday, and in Albany on Wednesday. Mr. Kuykendall also addressed these meetings.

All of the Schine units are reported to have joined the organization.

The MPTOA is expected to co-operate with the New York Allied (MPTOA unit) in the latter's move toward intervention in the consent decree. The first step in the campaign was the series of meetings in up-state cities.

Methods of intervention and other details in connection with combating the decree were discussed at the three meetings. It was reported that MPTOA would intervene separately on the decree, together with New York units, although Mr. Kuykendall has not said so.

Directors of the Kansas-Missouri Theatres Association are waiting to learn the fate of the consent decree before setting a date for their annual convention. They sent telegrams to Mr. Arnold and Mr. Kuykendall protesting against the five-picture clause and urging adoption of a straight 20 per cent cancellation privilege.

Unionization of projectionists in small town theatres was to be discussed by Southern Illinois exhibitors affiliated with the United Theatre Owners of Illinois at a meeting in Mount Vernon, on Thursday. The agenda provided for discussion of the consent decree, which UTO opposes; tax legislation, free movie shows and film star participation in radio.

TREASURY STUDIES NEW REVENUE POSSIBILITIES

Congress May Be Asked to Widen Base of Admission Tax by Lowering Exemption

With the national defense program expected eventually to raise the public debt some $20,000,000,000 above its present limitation of $49,000,000,000, the Treasury was said this week to be preparing the draft of new revenue legislation to be submitted to Congress in January, with indications that the admission tax will be in for another raise.

Encouraged by the 150 per cent increase in revenue reported for the first month of the application of the 20-cent exemption, Treasury officials are said to be attempting to estimate how much more would come in if the exemption was reduced to 10 cents or even eliminated entirely.

Some agitation has been reported in exhibitor circles recently toward seeking a reduction of the present exemption to 10 cents in order to prevent disastrous price cutting wars. Opposition to the present level was voiced when it was included in the law a compromise at the beginning of the summer.

Other Sources Seen

While there are no figures available on the number of 10 and 15-cent admissions—not only to motion picture theatres but to other amusements, such as merry-go-rounds, "old mill" and similar rides—it is believed a very considerable revenue could be collected on a 10-cent exemption basis. Coney Island, alone, it is said, would bring in a very respectable amount during the summer months, and there are thousands of pleasure parks throughout the country which also would contribute.

In the event of a drastic need for new revenue—when the national debt reaches $69,000,000,000, it will require $1,380,000,000 or more for interest alone, even at the two per cent at which the Treasury now is borrowing—there is a good possibility that the schemes for taxing broadcasting will be revived, that being one of the very few amusements not now burdened.

Compare Income Taxes

Less than one-third of the country's amusement industry corporations paid Federal income taxes on their 1938 operations, it was disclosed this week by an analysis of returns filed in 1939 with the Internal Revenue Bureau.

Only 3,230 out of 10,353 such companies showed taxable net income for 1938, but that group, reporting an aggregate gross income of $797,709,000 and a net income of $80,734,000, paid $11,614,000 in income and undistributed profits taxes and $88,000 in excess profits taxes, the bureau reported.

Another 5,935 corporations, with aggregate gross income of $342,982,000, reported no net income but, instead, a deficit for tax purposes of $28,828,000. The remaining 1,188 corporations were inactive.

The 9,165 active corporations paid dividends, other than stock dividends, of $43,285,000, of which $42,484,000 was paid by the tax-paying and $801,000 by the deficit groups, it was stated.

Chicago Facing "Fight" Dispute

Chicago liberal groups are again trying to force the showing, in that city, of the Government made Pare Lorentz feature, "The Fight for Life," released nationally by Columbia Pictures. On Wednesday morning, a delegation representing the Chicago Civil Liberties League were to visit Police Commissioner James Allman, to demand that he reverse a ban on the picture, issued in May by the city's much-criticized board of censors.

On Tuesday, representatives of women's clubs and other civic groups viewed the film at a special showing sponsored by the League. After the showing, D. E. Mackelmann, director of the Metropolitan Housing Council, asked cooperation to force the Commissioner or Mayor Edward J. Kelly to rebuke the censor board. Ira Latimer, the League's executive secretary, said the film had been shown in other cities for which films are passed by censor boards: New York, Boston, Philadelphia, St. Louis. He also called the Chicago board inconsistent. It had, he said, barred "The Fight for Life," "Pastor Hall," and "The Goosestep"; yet it had approved "Reefer Madness," "Marijuahana," "The Sunset Strip Case," and "Blitzkrieg in Poland."

Precedent for a possible reversal of the censors' ban was seen in the reversal of the "Pastor Hall" ban recently by the Mayor.

Chicago's Maternity Center and some of its slum areas are pictured in "The Fight for Life."

STARS, FILMS, SCREEN CONTRIBUTIONS WEAPONS AS CAMPAIGN RACE SPEEDS

Democrats, Republicans Organizing Committees to Canvass Industry for Support; 16mm. Films for Rural Distribution

With the Presidential campaign winging into full speed, committees representing the motion picture and theatrical industries are beginning to take a vital part in the pre-election drives of the two big major parties.

16mm. Films Distributed

Charles L. O'Reilly, chairman of the Motion Picture Division of the Democratic National Committee, announced upon his return from Hollywood last week formation of a "Hollywood for Roosevelt Committee." Pat O'Brien is chairman. Announcement also was made that 2,000 bookings had been made in 11 farm States of a 16 mm campaign film, prepared by the Democratic National Committee, which is now being shown in schools, halls, auditoriums, parks, etc.

Meanwhile, the theatrical division of the Republican National Committee, of which Walter O'Keefe is chairman, reports that a series of nation-wide broadcasts of movie personalities would emanate from Hollywood within a week. The GOP also announced that special campaign films, mostly of 16mm variety, were being distributed throughout the country by the State Republican Chairmen of the various States. Other theatrical stunts and meetings, etc., are in prospect, it was said.

The films distributed by the Democrats through the rural areas, contain seven subjects, which are integrated into a complete show, running about 45 minutes.

The show opens with a cartoon, is followed by a one-reeler, "Defense of America," a speech of Henry A. Wallace, vice presidential nominee; then by "On the Record," a resume of the farming situation since 1932; "Electricity on the Farm"; a speech by President Roosevelt, especially made for this film and closes with a patriotic montage and rendition of "The Star Spangled Banner." The National Democratic Committee supplies the film, projector, sound equipment, screen and operator; also a complete set of display material, including street banners, posters and heralds.

William Nelson and Guy Bolte, of the publicity staff of the National Democratic Committee, produced the shorts in New York in nine days, at a cost of about $10,000.

The first showings were made in the Hotel Claypool, Indianapolis, last Tuesday, September 24th, in conjunction with a farm rally.

In certain cases, the equipment had to be transported to the scene of the showings on mule pack, so poor were the roads in the rural area where the pictures were shown. Recently, the film was shown in an isolated rural county in the Ozarks, in Missouri, where many of those in the audience had never seen or heard a movie before.

Mr. Bolte has made motion pictures for the U. S. Government in the WPA for three years and in the U. S. Film Service, where he worked with Pare Lorentz on the filming of the documentary, "Fight For Life," it was said.

Mr. Nelson was, for three years, in charge of the Washington Bureau of Look magazine and prior to that was a member of the faculty of the graduate school of the American University at the Capital. He has also written scripts for Columbia shorts.

At present, it was said, Mr. O'Reilly's committee is concerning itself with obtaining campaign contributions from the industry. Next month, mass meetings and various other activities centering around the industry, will be in full swing as the date for election nears. Also, within the next few weeks, financial and advisory committees are to be designated.

Screen stars of Hollywood gave Mr. Wallace a luncheon in Hollywood last Saturday, September 28th, during his campaign swing through the West. The luncheon was held in the Hotel Biltmore, under the chairmanship of Pat O'Brien. Others assisting Mr. O'Brien on the "Hollywood for Roosevelt Committee" are:

Joan Bennett, vice chairman; Bryan Foy, treasurer; Sid Grauman and Abe Lastvogel, assistant treasurers; Ralph Block, Secretary; Milton M. Black, counsel; and Fred B. Meyer, chairman of the Industrial Relations Committee. The advisory committee comprises:

John W. Considine Jr., Alice Faye, Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., Dorothy Lamour, Edward G. Robinson, Harry Joe Brown, Leo Carrillo, Miriam Hopkins and Winfield R. Sheehan.

Walter Wanger has been appointed to the advisory committee and Myron Selznick, chairman of the finance committee, of the "Hollywood for Roosevelt" campaign,

GOP Film Premiere Held

Rushville, Indiana, home town of Wendell L. Willkie, Republican presidential nominee, was the scene of the "world premiere" of the GOP campaign motion pictures, on Saturday, September 7th.

Produced under the auspices of the Republican National Committee by Eugene W. Castle, chief of the Graphic Illustrations Section, the films include a one-reel picture titled, "The Truth About Taxes;" another one reeler titled "Willkie-McNary Know Their Farming," and a two reel subject titled, "We the People."

It is planned to distribute these movies through the Republican State Committees for showings in all parts of the country until election day. GOP sound tracks also will be equipped with a library of these films for nightly showings in the field.

Some 650 prints of the 16mm film and 75 prints of the 35mm film have been prepared for distribution. The standard film will be used wherever standard equipment is available.

In New York, Mr. O'Keefe announced formation of a committee of motion picture actors and actresses to prepare a series of national radio broadcasts in support of Mr. Willkie's candidacy. Robert Montgomery, chairman, is being assisted by Mary Pickford, Edward Arnold, Ann Sothern, Roger Pryor, Gloria Swanson and George Murphy.

Denying that pressure from Democrats compelled them to take this action, RKO announced that release of Mr. Willkie's second "Information Please" film would be postponed until after election. RKO officials gave as their reason for the postponement the fact that the first "Information Please" would be playing subsequent runs until Election Day and to release another in the meantime would create confusion. Also, RKO feels the second would be a bigger draw if Mr. Willkie is elected. It was reported that the short might be released in December or January.

Meanwhile, speaking for the Republican National Committee in Washington on Thursday, Representative Everett M. Dirksen of Illinois, charged that motion pictures filmed at government expense are being used as New Deal campaign propaganda in violation of the Hatch Act.

Mr. Dirksen cited a bulletin from the Women's Division of the Democratic National Committee entitled "A New Way to Campaign," which urges pro-Roosevelt workers to ask the Democratic National Committee for prints of Government films exhibited at Democratic political meetings. He charged that each movie depicts various government enterprises and spoken commentaries gives the New Deal credit for the activities shown on the screen.

The GOP Presidential nominee recently addressed an audience of film folk, ranging from laborers to stars, in the Hollywood Bowl, following his speech at the Coliseum in Los Angeles. His talk was given under the auspices of the "We, the People Committee for Wendell L. Willkie." George Murphy was master of ceremonies. Robert Montgomery, chairman of the committee, introduced Mr. Willkie.

Authors Aid Roosevelt

Meanwhile, a group of authors and playwrights met recently in the Hotel Algonquin, New York, to formulate plans to aid in the re-election of President Roosevelt. Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt and Mrs. Henry Morgenthau, Jr., listened to the various suggestions made by the writers. Among those participating in the discussion were:

Robert E. Sherwood, Hendrik W. Van Loon, Edna Ferber, Hervey Allen, John Gunther, Rollin Kirby, George S. Kaufman, Moss Hart, S. N. Behrman, Russell Crouse and Pare Lorentz. Morris Ernst, an attorney, acted as temporary chairman.

An agreement in the squabble between the Democratic and Republican campaign committees for free time on the air has been reached by network officials and campaign officials, it was announced last week. Democrats will waive their claim for time on the air to reply to Mr. Willkie's Coffeyville speech and will let the matter rest until after Election Day.

At that time, it was said, if the Democrats still feel aggrieved, some form of mediation will be used to determine whether the networks should rebate charges for one speech to the Democrats. With the Democrats curbing their demands, network officals are reported to feel that the Republicans will have no basis for further requests for free time.

Mr. Willkie's Coffeeville speech was broadcast gratis because the GOP claimed that the President's Labor Day speech was political. Democrats, however, denied this.

The first of the paid Democratic broadcasts from a network studio last Friday, September 28th, featured Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt, over a NBC blue hookup of 108 stations. Among those who were to have been interviewed by Mrs. Roosevelt were:

Katharine Hepburn, Edna Ferber, Marc Connelly, James Thurber, William Saroyan, Sidney Kingsley, Robert E. Sherwood, Alice Duer Miller and Dr. Frank Kingdon.

HE MAKES THEM READ THE ADS

Persons living in North Buffalo are on their toes these days. The idea, carried through every week, was inaugurated by B. J. Lyons, manager of the theatre.

SUNDAY SHOWS PRESSED IN HALIFAX AS WAR AID

But Exhibitors Are Reluctant to Open Theatres, Despite Influx of Soldiers and Sailors

That the war emergency requires Sunday shows in Halifax, N.S., theatres is the contention of an increasing number of people there. So keen have some of them been in their advocacy of Sunday picture shows, they have been deluging the local newspapers, city council members and legislators with written and telephoned endorsements of the Sabbath show proposal.

Exhibitors Reluctant

Singularly, the exhibitors are playing no part in this movement. If they open their theatres it will be as a public service and not with profit as the objective. The consensus among theatremen of Halifax, and nearby Dartmouth, is that they are not eager to operate on Sundays, for two reasons: (1) any extra business profits would be absorbed by the excess profits tax of the Dominion Government; (2) the exhibitors want the day of rest for their staffs and themselves.

The agitation for Sunday operation of the theatres started with a plan to open the church halls to the public for Sunday entertainments. Later, it was realized that these halls lacked the necessary equipment.

Halifax is not only the Atlantic base for training, convoying and patrolling, in the British and Canadian navies, but is the garrison gateway for home defense in the artillery, infantry, anti-aircraft. At Dartmouth is an airforce base. All of this results in a concentration of thousands of naval and mercantile sailors, soldiers and airmen. The Sunday show movement has been aimed specifically at them.

Allied Discusses Regulations

At the annual convention of the Allied Exhibitors, held in a Halifax hotel, October 2nd, two major items of discussion were: (1) broadening of the war effort of the trade; (2) the maze of obsolete and contradictory regulations, now governing the trade in Nova Scotia. The morning session, limited to members, was devoted almost wholly to the two matters. It was proposed that the organization initiate and maintain war activities for the ensuing fiscal year, of 1940-41.

At the afternoon session, representatives of the distributing agencies, at St. John, were present, and there was a discussion of exhibitor-distributor relationships. The managers of the exchanges pledged their companies' cooperation in the war activities of the association.

At night the annual banquet was held. The Nova Scotian Government was represented by the attorney-general and the City of Halifax, by the Mayor. Both commended exhibitors and distributors for their support of Canada's war effort, with the concerted drive in behalf of war savings stamps singled out for special praise.

C. H. Bennett, chairman of the provincial board of censors, spoke for an hour in defense of the regulations.

Representing the recently-organized maritime provinces' branch of the Canadian Picture Pioneers were A. J. Mason, of Springhill, N. S., president; R. G. March, of St. John, and R. S. Roddick, of Halifax, associate secretaries.

At the annual election of officers of the Allied Exhibitors the 1939-40 slate was re-elected as follows: W. H. Cuzner, of Sydney Mines, president; Frank Sobey, of Stellarton, vice-president; T. J. Courtney, of Halifax, secretary-treasurer.

R. J. Macadam, of Halifax, was awarded an honorary life membership in the association. Cuzner is veteran operator of the Strand at Sydney Mines; Sobey is a veteran exhibitor and present mayor of Stellarton; Courtney succeeded Macadam as manager of the Casino, now in the Famous Players circuit.

A sub-committee which is canvassing exchanges includes: Gordon Lightstone, chairman; Paul Nathanson, Frank O'Bryne, Louis Rosenfeld, Herbert Allen and E. H. Wells. The national sub-committee on theatre subscription includes: Nat Taylor, chairman; Sam Fine, Ben Geldsaler, Harry Firestone, Jules Bernstein, Harry Alexander, Harry Ginsler, Richard Main and M. L. "Business prospects seem promising for the coming year," Joseph M. The matter of paying a monthly sum to the employee or his dependents is also under consideration.

Little Effect on Industry Seen in New Labor Act

Enforced adoption of the 40-hour week by establishments coming under the Fair Labor Standards Act was seen this week by wage-hour officials in Washington as having little effect on industry.

Under the act, the number of hours which an employee in a covered establishment may work without overtime pay is reduced October 24th from 42 to 40, thus achieving the first of the two goals sought in the law—the 40-hour week and a 40 cents an hour minimum wage.

Starting out in 1939 with a minimum wage of 25 cents an hour for the maximum working week of 44 hours, the bill provided that after one year the standards should be raised to 30 cents an hour and a 42-hour week. The minimum wage, except in industries for which committees had recommended higher rates, was to remain at the 30 cent level for six years, but the maximum working week was to be reduced after one year to 40 hours, which would be its permanent level.

Producers on 40-Hour Week

A survey of conditions in the motion picture industry by officials in Washington indicated that group would have less difficulty accommodating itself to the 40-hour week than most other lines, since the producers generally have been working on the 40-hour week, as have most of the distributors. It was pointed out that most of the workers in the studios are under union agreements which cover hours and wages and that the producers have used the 40-hour basis quite generally.

The only complaint of the studios has been the application of the hour limitation to employees in what are considered key positions, and that matter now is under consideration in the wage-hour division, which some weeks ago held lengthy hearings on the question.

So far as local theatres are concerned, the Government has included them in the classification of retail stores, which are exempt from the law unless a very substantial part of their business is interstate. Since the houses sell tickets at the entrance, the interstate feature has never been raised.

Circuits Worked Out Problem

With respect to circuits, the division has had the general ruling that any organization engaged in interstate activity is subject to the act and that employees engaged on interstate work come under the law, and the circuits appear to have worked the problem out satisfactorily as the Washington office has never had occasion to rule directly as to who in their organization are covered by the act.

With the adoption of the 40-hour week, the situation under the wage-hour act will remain "frozen" until October 24, 1945, when the minimum wage will be set at 40 cents an hour in all industries where industry committees have not held that conditions within the industry necessitate a lower wage. The industry committees will be allowed to recommend the highest wage which can be paid without substantially decreasing employment, but may not go below 30 cents or above 40 cents an hour.

Fitzgibbons of Canada Remarks:

TO THE EDITOR OF THE HERALD:

I hope every distribution executive and every producer responsible for motion pictures at the source will take time out to read your editorial in the Motion Picture Herald of September 21, 1940, and pay particular attention to the third paragraph and the contention in the fifth paragraph that "these customers, a majority of them being wage earners, want to know what they are going to spend when they set out for the movies".

[The editorial expression to which Mr. Fitzgibbons refers follows:]

¶ The question of admission prices, their "juggling" and inferential control by production-distribution dictation, puts up emphatically questions of exhibition policy which in some well grounded opinions can be solved and decided only by exhibitors—with decisions as various as are their local conditions.

¶ It is contended that these customers, a majority of them being wage earners, want to know what they are going to spend when they set out for the movies. The other position is that every film show is another and new entertainment enterprise, a new proposition to the public and that there will be acceptance of a variable price based on the entertainment value of the picture—the acceptance being on the assumption that picturegoers are all, or mainly, shoppers.

The ear-marking of special pictures at increased admission prices, with special publicity campaigns will destroy the treasure hunt quest for pleasure that has, in a great measure, helped make the motion picture business the great success it is.

Believe me when I tell you that the great wealth of information contained in the Motion Picture Herald each week for all departments, particularly for our managers, makes each issue of the Herald a looked-for pleasurable adventure. However, if we did not know what the price of the Herald was to be from week to week we might be tempted to read only those editions which came marked with the high price tag.

Incidentally, Famous Players Canadian Corporation will not juggle admission prices in any of its theatres at any time.

Improved Films Would Offset Loss, Says Small

Following his return to Hollywood from New York conferences with United Artists executives, Edward Small declared that the regeneration of American films could be effected through the new ideas in stories and new treatment. Improved product, he went on, would make up for the loss of foreign business.

Mr. Small said: "Audiences, today, are sophisticated and want their film fare treated in a sophisticated way. They demand new ideas treated with new and novel production embellishments. Naturally, such pictures will cost more but will regenerate interest."

IN THE BRITISH STUDIOS

by AUBREY FLANAGAN
in London

Business as Usual

Despite the continued intensity of the Nazi blitzkrieg, which has, of course, concentrated upon London as one of its primary objectives, British production has continued to operate with something more than its most recent vigor. There are more films in active production at the moment than has been the case for some months past. Some of these are of super caliber. A notable fact is that many of the films on the floors of the London studios are sponsored by American companies here, who are among the foremost in defying the blitzkrieg and carrying out their legal obligations in regard to the quota. Among those prominent in this regard are Paramount, 20th Century-Fox, RKO-Radio and Warner Bros. The intentions of the other three—Columbia, MGM and United Artists—are not as yet known.

The use of the "Spotter" system has enabled work to be continued during air raid alarms with a fortunate minimization of the amount of time lost. Indeed, in some instances, productions, far from being behind schedule, are ahead.

Under the "Spotter" system, which is used in most industrial and commercial undertakings in Britain today, the first "alarm" is considered as an "alert" and work continues. On the roofs of the studio buildings are posted "Spotters" who keep an eye peeled for the approach of enemy aircraft, for shrapnel, or for any action which would be considered dangerous to work under. If the situation becomes "hot," a secondary alarm is given and the workers are ushered to their shelters, to be called out when the coast is again all clear. This may be long before the general "All Clear" is sounded. In most cases the "Spotters" include representatives of the management and of the Employees' Union.

Two Weeks' Shooting On Wells Novel

Already a fortnight's shooting has been concluded on the Twentieth Century Production at Shepherds' Bush. It is a screen version of the H. G. Wells novel, "Kipps," with Carol Reed directing, and the Maurice Ostrer-Edward Black team in charge of production.

Michael Redgrave plays the part of "Kipps," with Diana Wynyard as Helen Walsingham, the sophisticated beauty with whom Wells' shop assistant falls in love.

Others in the cast include Phyllis Calvert, Arthur Riscoe, Frank Pettingell, Mackenzie Ward, George Carney, Hermione Baddeley, Cathleen Harrison and Muriel Aked—a strong one by British box-office standards.

Sidney Gilliatt prepared the script, while Arthur Crabtree and A. Vetchinsky are respectively in charge of cameras and art.

Cecil Beaton, society photographer and dress designer, has been engaged for the sets and dresses on the film.

Some trick photography has been included in the picture and has been used in one sequence, a day dream passage in which the bashful "Kipps," a dingy shop assistant, dreams he is making love to the beauteous Miss Walsingham. For this set some rare wood carvings were loaned by the Hammersmith Technical College, a nearby and distinguished educational institution. Otherwise much bric-a-brac and ornament of the 1906 period is used.

An interesting scheme has been devised by Maurice Ostrer to insure continuity of production. He has offered to evacuate the wives and families of the studio personnel to distant areas where they will be free from bombing raids. Their life is to be established and sustained on a communal basis. The studio staff will live in at Shepherds' Bush, where, of course, they will be afforded the utmost protection from the danger of bombers.

A five-day week is planned to enable the employees to spend a long weekend.

RELIEF SOUGHT ON QUOTA LAW

Formal conferences on measures designed to give American distributors relief or exemption from the Quota Act because of war conditions were to start this week in London. F. W. Allport, London representative for the MPPDA, and officials of all the major American companies met E. B. Somervell of the Films Department of the Board of Trade at a luncheon Wednesday, and concrete action was expected to follow. Meanwhile most of the companies are proceeding with production.

Warners Resume At Teddington

Forsaking for the time being single quota pictures and aiming at the world market, Warner Brothers have resumed production at Teddington on a super scale with "An Empire Is Built," an historical drama devised around the life and career of Disraeli.

This is the first of three top budget pictures scheduled by Max Milder, who has taken this step after lengthy consultation with Jack Warner.

Directing the picture is Thorold Dickinson, creator of the brilliant "Gaslight."

After many tests, John Gielgud has been assigned the role of Disraeli, with Diana Wynyard co-starring with him.

Others in the cast include Fay Compton as Queen Victoria, Owen Nares as Lord Derby, Stephen Murray as Gladstone, Frederick Leister, Irene Browne, Anthony Ireland and Vera Bogetti.

On the conclusion of the Disraeli film a second super production is to be launched by Max Milder, "Atlantic Ferry," another epic subject which will trace the history of the Cunard Line and the development of Britain's trade routes throughout the seven seas. It is intended that this picture shall have outstanding British star value.

A third picture, details of which have not yet been announced, will also be made by Warner Brothers.

Soskin Producing For Paramount

For Paramount release Paul Soskin is now well ahead with "Quiet Wedding," which is being made at Sound City, with a team including director Anthony Asquith, crack cameraman Bernard Knowles, and art director Paul Sherriff.

"Quiet Wedding" was, in fact, the first blitzkrieg film to be launched in Britain, being put on the floor at the height of Hitler's air attack on this country. As with the Warner and Twentieth Century productions, no time has been lost on the Soskin film, the "Spotter" system being used at the studios.

"Quiet Wedding" is a quiet type of English comedy, based upon the play which had a long and successful London run. It is essentially English in subject and treatment, and Soskin has given it a cast which reaches undue heights of box office brilliance.

Heading the players are Margaret Lockwood and Derek Farr, a comparative newcomer for whom sustained stardom is forecast by Soskin. Others in the film include Margaretta Scott, Peggy Ashcroft, Athene Seyler, Jean Cadell, Frank Cellier, Felix Aylmer, Muriel George, David Tomlinson, Wally Patch, Muriel Pavlow, Hay Petrie, Bernard Miles, Peter Bull, Ivor Barnard and Mike Johnson.

Two Productions Set On RKO-Radio Program

Although production at the time of writing has not actually been launched, probably by the time this reaches print William Sistrom's new RKO-Radio British film, "The Saint's Vacation," will be on the floor at Denham, with Hugh Sinclair in the title role. Final details are currently being negotiated by Sistrom and the picture will probably be launched shortly.

Meanwhile further details of the RKO-Radio programme have been made known. These include the Peter B. Kyne story, "A Gift to His Majesty" as the second film on the schedule. Brian Desmond Hurst has been assigned to direct.

The story deals with a master mariner and his chief engineer who set out to capture a German submarine.

In this film Sistrom hopes to pay screen tribute to the work being done today by Britain's Merchant Service.

MUTUAL INSURANCE PLAN TO COVER BOMB DAMAGE PRESSED BY BRITISH

Compensation, Curfews, Employee Protection Vital Problems as Raids Continue; Business Up in Areas Not Affected

by AUBREY FLANAGAN
in London

Inspired, no doubt, by a belief that even in wartime Providence is most likely to help those who help themselves, British exhibitors are currently giving earnest consideration to schemes of mutual insurance. The insurance aimed at is one which would offer guarantee against loss of livelihood following upon air raids and enemy action.

This mutual insurance principle is in fact the subject most urgently before exhibitors' councils today. The problem yet to be solved is whether a national scheme will be achieved, or whether it will be left to local initiative and operation.

Second only in urgency is the question of early closing, the "curfew," as it is loosely termed on this side.

A complete lack of uniformity, not only in conditions of opening and closing, but also in their application, is found all over the country. Exhibitor efforts are to be directed towards not only an improvement of the general conditions, but securing uniformity on a national basis—as far as this is possible.

Employees' Protection Studied

The question of protection for employees and a more exact application of ARP principles towards the operation of cinemas and studios comes perhaps third in the list of present pressing problems.

Trade conditions after a month of blitzkrieg are variable, whilst in certain reception areas so far unaffected by air raids—and they are many and widespread—box office figures are either normal, or better than normal, in the other districts subject to Nazi bombings conditions are, to say the least, lamentable. It is calculated that in such districts as the Northwest area, Central London, the South East Coast, and probably Southampton, Portsmouth and other similar centers, evening trade is at best not more than ten per cent of normal.

In the West End of London this week six larger houses—all of them on the Gaumont-British chain—have been compelled to close for various reasons, either direct bombing, damage to premises, or closure of areas on account of time bombs, etc.

In the Greater London area probably 120 picture houses are at the present moment dark through like conditions, though the vast majority of them will reopen in the immediate or not far distant future.

Figures for Merseyside, the North East coast and other vulnerable areas are not yet available; but the number of houses closed is probably not considerable.

Exhibitors Press for Insurance

The subject of mutual insuranace is one which was raised at the last General Council meeting of the Cinematograph Exhibitors' Association, when the view obtained that it was not the Council's duty or power to organize schemes of national insurance against war risks. Undeterred by this local branches of the CEA have pressed the matter. The appropriate committee—the Legal and Parliamentary Committee—has been empowered to investigate the matter and it will be raised and discussed comprehensively and nationally at the October meeting of the General Council.

First in the field to give the matter serious examination have been the Yorkshire exhibitor groups, notably at Huddersfield and Leeds. Branches of the CEA in these districts have pressed the matter so forcibly that it is almost certain that national action in one form or another will be considered, if not directly taken.

Insurance Schemes Studied

Other districts of the Association, which have suffered from air raids or enemy action, or which are likely to suffer, will follow the Yorkshire groups in pressing for consideration widely and constructively.

Differences of opinion exist which have yet to be reconciled. There is the question of whether mutual insurance schemes should be merely local in character, or whether a national scheme should be organized by or with the collaboration and approval of the CEA nationally. It has not yet been determined whether insurance schemes such as are foreshadowed should cover the rebuilding of cinemas, or merely the loss of working profits. Probably this latter limitation will be established.

Meanwhile much is dependent upon the Government's attitude in regard to compensation for businesses which have been destroyed, or mortally affected by air raids. This is, so far, not completely clear. Until it is the question of mutual insurance must remain a little indeterminate.

So far the insurance principle has been examined exclusively by independent exhibitors. They are aware that the Circuits are likely to stay out of any such scheme, because their commercial position allows them to recompense one affected district out of the revenue accruing in another, that takings in "A" can be so improved they can be used to offset the losses consequent upon the bombing of "B." Circuits thus are likely to deal with the question on a circuit, and not on a local or national CEA basis.

Compulsory closing, such as has been necessary in certain districts, obviously is a complication whch would remove cinemas affected thereby from the immediate orbit of any scheme such as is being considered.

Other Ideas Discussed

Charles Metcalfe, ex-president of the CEA and a prominent member of the Yorkshire group, as far back as last November raised this question, envisaging the setting up of a national scheme of insurance with CEA backing. He planned the formation of a company, limited by guarantee, with each participant liable to provide five per cent against the expense of promotion, running and compensation for damage. 300 or 400 participants, Mr. Metcalfe considered, would be adequate to make such a scheme practicable.

As an example, he quoted a potential instance with its basis a cinema insured for £20,000, the maximum expense that could be inflicted, on operating costs, being £500 spread over five years after the War. Even if all five cinemas in a given town were destroyed the proprietors could thus be given one hundred per cent compensation.

At Huddersfield, also a Yorkshire district, an alternative to a national scheme has already been launched by exhibitors, who are agreed upon a mutual plan with, as its basis, an entrance fee of £1. per week, permitting a maximum payment of £10. per week as compensation to any exhibitor whose house was put out of action and rendered inoperable.

Such a scheme as Huddersfield has planned does not consider structural repairs or rebuilding. It aims only at providing some financial relief for the exhibitor whose means of livelihood has been taken away by enemy action. It will continue until, at the end of the War, if not before, rebuilding is practicable.

It is likely that some delay would naturally ensue even if the Government intended to rebuild picture houses destroyed by bombing and a mutual insurance scheme would protect the exhibitor against such delay.

It is hoped to start the Huddersfield scheme immediately, twenty local picture houses having expressed their willingness to pay £6, together with four weekly subscriptions of £1, in advance, and, if there are any claims, to continue subscriptions at £1. per week. The exhibitor needing to draw upon the insurance would get, as already stated, £10. per week.

Jack Prendergast, John the Baptist of the Independents, and active force in the Leeds Branch, has agitated for the Huddersfield scheme to be extended throughout the whole Yorkshire area. He suggests that the small exhibitor may have much more difficulty than the big fellow in establishing himself as "essential" in case of emergency in respect of any immediate measures to replace his building. He would seem to foresee in the Huddersfield movement, with Leeds' practical backing, the nucleus of a general protective society.

GAUMONT-BRITISH PROFIT £612,599

Gross profit for the year ending March 31, 1940, of £612,599, is reported by the Gaumont-British Picture Corporation. From this is deducted provision for loss connected with certain subsidiary and associated companies amounting to £66,343, and a balance added of £77,437 from the previous year.

A sum of £3,329 has been allocated for income tax, £205,055 for interest on first mortgage debentures, £82,546 to debenture sinking fund reserve, and £32,716 to reserve for depreciation, etc. From the £300,044 left dividend on the first preference shares is deducted, leaving a balance of £121,294. Of this £42,500 has been carried to reserve, and £78,794 carried forward.

Commenting upon the year's trading the directors said that although the War had an adverse effect upon profits of the directly owned theatres, business, though restricted, was not unsatisfactory under the circumstances.

General Film Distributors continue to handle the Gaumont-British News Reel. GFD will also distribute another 6 films to be made at the G-B Studios. GFD will continue to run the film printing laboratory.

AGREEMENT ENDS RADIO ARTISTS' STRIKE THREAT

Federation, Broadcasters Negotiate New Contract; AFL in Studio Membership Campaign

The American Federation of Radio Artists won another battle in its comparatively brief history when, on Monday, in the New York City offices of the New York State Mediation Board, it reached an agreement with the broadcasters over a new contract and rates of pay for performers on sustaining programs. The signing ended the possibility of a strike in this field, which would have tied up some 6,500 radio artists throughout the country on the three networks, the National Broadcasting Company, the Columbia Broadcasting System, and the Mutual Broadcasting System, the possibility of enlistment of other radio artists on commercial programs; and involvement, through union affiliations and agreements, of possibly the whole entertainment industry.

Compromise on Scale

The union, seeking rates of pay and working hours for sustaining program performers comparable to those obtained by performers on commercial programs, threatened a strike several weeks ago. The networks prepared for the eventuality but both sides agreed to mediation by the New York board. During the mediation, the old contract between the broadcasters and the federation, which expired September 12th, was continued by mutual agreement.

The union sought a basic fee for actors of $12 for 15 minute programs, $15 for 30 minute programs, and $18 for 60 minute programs. It also asked rehearsal pay of $6 for the first hour, and $3 for each hour additional. The broadcasters countered with a scale differing from this, but still a variation from the existing contract and the union rejected it.

Details of the agreement reached on Monday will not be made public, it was said, until union members ratify it. Jules Freund, executive secretary of the mediation board, said on Monday all major points had been settled. The union is expected to poll the members on ratification next week.

AFL Hollywood Drive Starts

Some 5,000 Hollywood studio workers not yet affiliated with the American Federation of Labor will be solicited within the next two weeks for membership in existing unions and unions to be formed, Aubrey Blair, in charge of the national organization's new drive, said last week. First objectives of the organizing drive will be the wardrobe department workers, building service men, and office workers. A tentative unit has already been established for the first group.

It was reported, also last week, that AFL executives were making overtures to the Screen Office Employees Guild, independent, which has already petitioned the National Labor Relations Board for certification as the collective bargaining agency for office workers in the eight major studios.

The AFL is understood to be approaching other independent units. Mr. Blair has asserted that such units will be given full autonomy, and also receive assistance from other AFL unions, in obtaining recognition and other objectives from employers.

Also in Hollywood, this week, the standing committee appointed under Screen Actors Guild bargaining contract to study the problem of extras, urged a modified seniority rule in the hiring of extras, and the elimination of extras who, during the past year, have worked 10 days or less.

The New York chapter of the guild will hold its annual meeting November 15th at the Hotel Edison, New York. Five members will be elected to the advisory council.

Only 18 of 19,511 studio employees in the eight largest Hollywood studios are "refugees," Y. Frank Freeman, president of the Association of Motion Picture Producers, declared over the weekend in a letter to Kenneth Thomson, executive secretary of the Screen Actors Guild. The latter organization has been studying the "problem."

The Hollywood Local, 659, of the International Photographers, last week announced it would seek a conference with the producers on a five-day, 40-hour week.

To Aid Music Guild

Approximately 40 men and women, some of them America's most noted singers, and others well known patrons of the opera, pledged their active financial and moral support to the American Guild of Musical Artists last week at the New York City home of Lawrence Tibbett, president of the guild. The support is being given in the guild's current dispute with the American Federation of Musicians, headed by James Petrillo, of Chicago. The latter threatened to bar guild members from employment in various meetings unless its instrumentalist members joined his federation. The guild has applied for an injunction to restrain Mr. Petrillo, on which decision has been reserved, and it has already obtained a temporary stay.

The Theatre Authority, Inc., of New York, and the Screen Actors Guild, have forbidden film actors to make impromptu appearances in night clubs, theatres, and other public gathering places, without compensation. Beginning November 1st, violators will be fined $1,000.

The New York unit of the Screen Readers Guild held its first meeting last week. About 25 attended. Members claimed that 42 of the approximately 50 in the New York area who are eligible have joined. The membership is drawn from readers of story material in the major companies. The organization will shortly ask the film companies for a contract. The meeting featured discussion of the reforms to be asked. It is expected higher pay and a closed shop will be asked.

Aron Steuer, New York Supreme Court Justice, last week ordered Local 306, that city's projectionists' union, to submit its dispute with the People's Cinema, in Brooklyn, before it sues in court.

Chicago projectionists were scheduled to resume talks with that city's theatre owners this week on a new contract. Talks last week were postponed because of the Jewish holidays.

The District of Columbia's Board of Commissioners is expected to approve revised regulations for projectionists, at its next meeting. In the revision, operators working more than eight hours per day, are to be penalized and the license fee is $10 per year.

Record royalties for the first half of this year for the Robbins, Feist, and Miller music corporations are 95 per cent more than for the similar period last year. The figure for this year is $95,545; for last, $48,916. Jack Robbins, of the music firm bearing his name, declared this week: "At the present rate of increase, we anticipate this year's record sales on the songs of our three firms to hit the 20,000,000 mark." Said to be favorite records for the first half of this year are "The Woodpecker Song," "At the Balalaika" and "Make Believe Island."

Mr. Abrams, a native of New York, began work in the film industry in 1917, with Universal. He has, in addition to the two mentioned posts, been manager of the St. Louis and the Kansas City exchanges. He was also president of the New York Film Board of Trade.

Variety Artists To Sign

The American Guild of Variety Artists this week reached an agreement in principle with New York theatre circuits on negotiations for a closed shop. The contract, expected to be signed before the end of the week, will be the basis for similar negotiations throughout the country.

ASIDES and INTERLUDES

By JAMES P. CUNNINGHAM

During the years of his "Original Amateur Hour," on the air, Major Edward Bowes has become somewhat accustomed to ingenious forms of musical expression.

The Thursday evening feature of the CBS network has music wrung, riven and wrought from auto springs, soup bowls, drinking glasses, cups, doorbells—and even dinosaur bones.

And the Major thought the ultimate had been reached when the recent Bowes' Amateur Hour presented Bartolo Ortiz, of Mexico, who played tunes on:

A violin made of a five-gallon oil can, a mandolin-roasting pan, and a 25-frying-pan xylophone.

But the Major reeled in amazement at Bartolo Ortiz's musical finale.

Bartolo began beating the blazes out of his britches. And instead of dust, there came the tunes of "Madame La Zonga."

Bartolo, it was learned after a seizure-and-search sortie, had sewn dozens of automobile caps into his pants and was belting the tunes out with xylophone hammers striking the different-pitched pieces of steel.

Columbia's home office in New York and studios in Hollywood, its forces in the field and elsewhere have poised before them a weighty problem! "The coining of a new word," says Columbia, "requires much research and intensive study of derivations."

"In days of old, when knights were bold"—a new picture producing plan was started by Thomas Alva Edison, Inc., in the form of Conquest Pictures, whose opening announcement indicated that they would confine their dramatic efforts merely to "the mountains, the sea, the plains and the forests." And, they added, "No anemic men and neurasthenic women will be found among the characters appearing in them."

Fifty "representative moviegoers" were tested at the Warner Brothers' projection room in New York the other afternoon to determine what types of motion pictures keep one coolest during hot weather, and vice versa. The tests were made with "Psychometers," instruments which measure directly the emotional tension or relaxation in the subjects tested. The Psychological Testing Bureau conducted the experiments.

It was found that scenes dealing with the sea are the most cooling in their effect on the audience, and therefore ideal hot weather entertainment. Newsreel shots dealing with the war gave the greatest excitement or heat reaction. Next in order of cooling effect were northern snow scenes. Westerns, mystery and horror films, love stories and heavy tragedies gave heat reactions.

Women showed a positive excitement (heat) reaction to love scenes while men remained comparatively cool. Women also showed a stronger excitement reaction to tragic scenes. Adventure scenes made the men hot under the collar but left women unmoved.

The Psychometer is so fashioned that emotional reactions register by means of an electric current, conducted to the electrodes by the perspiration on the hand. The degree of perspiration is the controlling factor in the results. Under excitement there is a greater secretion of perspiration and this increases the current on the dial.

Counsel for the Federal Government prosecuting the Nick-Weston movie projectionists' case in St. Louis turned the other day to the jurymen, and, as a sort of prelude to paving the way for a little "build-up" of the defendants' associates, asked each of the 12 veniremen in the box, whether they knew such characters as "Dang Dang" Mooney, "Rags" Callahan, "Putty Nose" Brady, et al.

Bugaboo problem of how to evacuate a theater crowded with kids who wanted to sit through two or three Mickey Rooney feature film matinees was solved by Everett Steinbuch, manager of Loew's State in Cleveland, without getting a single "Boo!" in return.

After each performance Mr. Steinbuch made this announcement to the moppets, who seemed glued to their seats: "The State and M-G-M are going to give a surprise present—a photograph of Mickey Rooney, autographed by Mickey himself. We have only a limited number of them at our lobby stand, but if you hurry immediately, you should be sure to get one." Five seconds after that announcement every kid in the house was tearing for the lobby.

Radio station WLW, in Cincinnati, has advanced its opening time from 5:45 to 5:30 A.M., E.S.T., for the special benefit of farmers, many of whom, station officials have discovered, take a portable receiving set into the dairy barn in order to listen to programs while doing the morning milking. The station is on the air until 2:30 A.M., with a total of 21 hours daily.

They're telling the story around Kansas City about the service manager of a local theatre who discovered an usher, Sol Blank, not doing his stuff. The service manager promptly fired Blank. Blank resented this, and told the service manager so, adding that, "I'm going to wait out front 'til you come out. Then I'm going to give you the works." The "S. M." started out of the house at 9 p. m., his quitting time, but pulled back when he saw Blank pacing back and forth in front of the theatre. He looked out again at ten; Blank was still there. He looked out again at eleven, at twelve, and at one. Finally he sent a member of the staff out to get Blank.

"Blank, you're hired," he announced to the erstwhile usher, remembering that Blank was a Golden Gloves boxer.

While the city repaired the cement floor in the fire house across from the Northio Paramount theatre, in Middletown, Ohio, firemen parked the hose truck in front of the theatre. Manager Roy Peffley immediately placed a painted placard on the apparatus announcing that it would be given away at the Paramount soon. Realism was added because the city forbids parking in front of the theatre, and, further, because the public had heard that the fire chief had been advocating replacement of this truck with a new one.

An unusual case of dismissal of an industry employee has come to light at Milford, Ohio, near Cincinnati, where Carl Fischer, projectionist at the Milford theatre, has been asked to resign "because of the pressure of public opinion."

Mr. Fischer's two sons, who with their parents, are members of a semi-religious cult, Jehovah's Witness, recently were expelled from public school for their refusal to salute the American flag, which action subsequently was upheld by the Board of Education.

Public indignation over the incident precipitated the theatre management's action.

Former Program Director in Charge of "New Activities", Including Televsion and FM

John F. Royal, for 10 years program director of the National Broadcasting Company, has accepted the position of vice-president in charge of plans for new activities and developments, including television, facsimile, frequency modulation (FM), and short wave broadcasting.

Sidney N. Strotz, vice-president in charge of NBC's central division with headquarters in Chicago was reported to be Mr. Royal's successor in the program post.

NBC's announcement of the new position created for Mr. Royal said that it was established "to assure such advance planning and coordination in new radio broadcasting services as will facilitate their commercial introduction or development." Niles Trammell, NBC president, said, "Mr. Royal has been largely responsible for a 10-year development of NBC's program activities, with the creation of many of radio's outstanding public service features and a long list of commercial successes. He is, therefore, ideally fitted for the wider responsibilities which he will now undertake."

Frank E. Mason will remain with NBC as vice-president in charge of the information department but he will be relieved from supervision of the short wave division, Mr. Trammell said Tuesday. Lunsford P. Yandell, executive in charge of short wave sales, has been appointed manager of the short wave division.

Clayland Morgan has been promoted from assistant to the president in charge of public relations to director of institutional promotion.

September billings of the combined Red and Blue NBC network in the month of September were $3,879,779, up 17 percent over the corresponding month of 1939. Sales for the first nine months of 1940 amounted to $36,008,355, an increase of 10.8 percent over the same period last year.

Columbia Broadcasting System time sales for the first eight months of 1940 totalled $26,404,427, an increase of 22.2 percent over last year. The net income was reported to be up about eight percent.

Film Regulations Issued

The FCC has issued rules dividing the 35 channels assigned to FM stations into three groups: "basic trade area," "limited trade area" and "rural area." There will be approximately 625 basic trade areas. Twenty-two channels were assigned to stations in basic and limited trade areas in which the transmitter is located in a city of over 25,000 and six channels where the population is less than 25,000.

Dr. W. R. G. Baker, head of the General Electric radio and television department, has predicted that there will be about 100 FM stations in operation throughout the country by a year from this time and perhaps 30 by January 1st where FM will be given full commercial priviliges.

Capital Broadcasting Company, Inc., of Schenectady has purchased land in New Scotland, N. Y., for a FM transmitter. The owners are James E. Cushing, Leonard L. A. Asch and Harold E. Blodgett. The cost of the station was estimated at $22,150, with operating expenses of $4,955 and revenue of $5,527 per month.

South American Program Set

A special two and one-half hour program, dedicated to South America, will be broadcast October 21st, to formally dedicate WLWO, Crosley international short-wave station in Cincinnati, which operates on a 50,000-watt beam power for 20 hours daily, with programs in Spanish, Portuguese, French and English. The first hour will originate in the Crosley studios in Cincinnati, and be carried additionally on the regular broadcast band by WLW, sister station. Balance of program will originate in Washington. WLWO, although usually transmitting on 15,270 or 9,590 kilocycles, is licensed to operate on any one of six frequencies as may be necessary to facilitate better reception because of prevailing atmospheric conditions.

World Series on Short Wave

General Electric's two Schenectady, N. Y. short wave stations, WGEO and WGEA broadcast the World Series on 9,530 and 15,330 kilocycles respectively and were received by the British Empire and U. S. Army, Navy and Marine Corps stationed in remote corners of the U. S. possessions and territories. General Electric received more than 15,000 letters asking if the facilities would be renewed this year. Rights to short wave the series were acquired from Mutual Broadcasting, which had exclusive coverage.

RCA Announces New Public Address System

RCA Manufacturing Company has announced the completion of a newly designed 15-watt portable public address system which is priced 15 per cent less than the 12-watt system which it replaces. The equipment is designed for indoor audiences up to 2,000 persons.

Improved cables designed to withstand hard usage of portable equipment are employed for the first time. The basic unit is the latest RCA amplifier. Increased length of all cables, permitting greater freedom for the system while in use and widening its field of operations, is another feature. The entire unit fits into a case measuring 21 inches high, 16¾ inches wide and 11 inches deep and weighs 43 pounds.

Mr. Derr will produce "The Shark Man," for Monogram release, and the Halperins will make a series of six films.

Recently organized to lease space at its studio, at Miami, the Colonnade Pictures Corp. is being reorganized. Arthur Sawyer is reported to have resigned as president. He holds an option to purchase the property at $45,000. Ed O'Toole, who died last week, was to have been Mr. Sawyer's successor.

TELEVISION FUTURE SEEN IN HOME NOT THEATRE BY PHILCO ENGINEERS

Penn-Maryland Football Game Telecast from Philadelphia by Company; Advertising Film Showing Prohibited by FCC

The future of television is not in the theatres but in the home alone in the opinion of the Philco Radio and Television Corporation and for this reason that company, unlike others in the field including the Radio Corporation of America, the Allen B. DuMont Laboratories, Don Lee, Scophony and Baird, is not conducting research and experiments aimed at the development of large screen television.

The position of Philco with regard to television as an attraction in motion picture theatres was explained last Saturday by Dave Grimes, chief engineer, at the first telecast of a collegiate football game held in Philadelphia with the cooperation of the University of Pennsylvania, the N. W. Ayer & Son advertising agency and the Atlantic Refining Company.

Advertising Film Banned

The Ayer agency and the Atlantic company had made a special advertising film to be shown as the commercial announcement during the television program of the Pennsylvania-Maryland football game but at the last moment the Federal Communications Commission informed the agency that no advertising would be permitted. The National Broadcasting Company's television station in New York presented a number of programs in cooperation with advertisers last season but at present the FCC does not allow even "limited commercial" television.

On the subject of theatre television Mr. Grimes remarked, "People will not want to pay 15 cents to go into a theatre to see a television show. They will want it right in their own homes."

He pointed out that when radio was first developed many thought it would be too expensive for the general public and that theatres would feature special radio programs.

The size of the screen for home television sets should be 15 inches or so wide, about the size of wall pictures in the home, Mr. Grimes said. At the special Philco demonstration the receivers showed a 10-inch picture. Mr. Grimes praised the work of the Columbia Broadcasting System on color television but expressed the opinion that while color television was an ultimate goal it, like coast to coast television network, was five or ten years away.

Although NBC telecast several professional football games last fall the Philco show Saturday was said to have been the first television broadcast of a college football game. Philco, working with the N. W. Ayer agency plans to telecast all the home games of the University of Pennsylvania.

Executives of the television company, the agency and the would-be sponsor and members of the press saw the first half of the game over two Philco experimental television receivers set up on the top floor of the Warwick Hotel in Philadelphia. At the half the party went to the field to observe the two cameras, one at each of the 20-yard lines set up on platforms rigged from the upper stand of Franklin Field.

The technique of television coverage of a football game and that of newsreels filming the same event is quite different, it was pointed out. The two television cameras, one on orthicon and the other an inconoscope, were kept in continuous operation and the picture to be sent over the air was selected by Nick Alexander, the program director working in a control room where he watched the images being picked up by both cameras.

Marked Difference Noted

Observers noted that there was a marked difference between the pictures of the two cameras. The orthicon, the most recent development of RCA, was by far the more efficient. Mr. Grimes said that it was ten times as sensitive to light as the iconoscope. The contrast between the two was so great that Mr. Grimes said he would try to borrow another orthicon from RCA-NBC to be used at other games.

The Philco television signals after being selected and checked in the control room located in the stands behind the 50-yard line were carried by a special telephone circuit installed by the Bell Telephone Company to a Philco relay transmitter atop Convention Hall. After again being monitored at the relay point the signals were sent to the main television station, W3XE to be telecast over the surrounding country to a distance of about 30 to 40 miles. Philco was using a standard of 525 lines and 30 frames per second with vertical polarization for the television pictures.

Although the FCC did not permit the telecasting of the first commercial prepared for the series the Ayer agency plans to go ahead this Winter with research and experiments in developing announcements that will have visual appeal.

NBC Leases Washington Site

Niles Trammell, president of the National Broadcasting Company signed a five-year lease last week with the Wardman Park Hotel in Washington for use of the hotel's Little Theatre and other space for a television studio and for rental of a plot of ground for the antenna tower.

"We hope to make Washington the originating point of a television service that will link the national capital with Philadelphia and New York City," Mr. Trammell said. "For the immediate future, however, we must content ourselves with carrying forward a broad program of experimental work here in Washington, laying particular emphasis on the artistic and technical problems involved in televising programs of governmental and national affairs."

The Wardman Park site for the station was chosen after an extensive field survey undertaken by NBC engineers Alfred H. Morton, vice-president in charge of television, said.

After the location is approved by the FCC, NBC will go ahead with the installation of a 1,000-watt station. The video and sound signals will be carried by separate transmitters. Also as part of the equipment will be a mobile unit for remote pick-ups.

In the Spring of 1939 NBC demonstrated television in Washington with a mobile outfit. NBC's Wardman Park station will be the first regular television transmitter in Washington which as the nation's capital is the scene of many events of special interest for television and also the headquarters of the commission controlling television as well as other Government officials having a voice in television's progress.

DuMont Gets Permit

The Allen B. DuMont Laboratories have also been assigned a permit for a television station in Washington but Mr. DuMont said a few weeks ago that nothing would be done in Washington until the company's New York station begins operations. The NBC station in Washington will operate on television channel number two, 60-66 mc. and the DuMont station has been given the number one band, 50-56 mc.

Mr. Morton mailed a letter on Wednesday of last week to all the owners of television sets in range of the company's New York television transmitter explaining that the transmitter was being shifted to the new channel assigned to it by the FCC. Enclosed was a booklet describing the television coverage of the Republican National Convention in Philadelphia through the use of the Telephone Company's coaxial cable and the Democratic Convention in Chicago in a tieup with Pathe News.

N. Y. May License Receivers

Paul Moss, Commissioner of Licenses of the City of New York, said on Tuesday that the question of licensing television receivers installed in public places was being considered. He said, "we are investigating the necessity of licensing television sets, with probable conferences with the people interested."

WISCONSIN CHILDREN ALLOWED OUT 'TIL 10

Marshfield, Wisconsin, has liberalized its curfew law so as to permit children under 16 years of age to remain on the streets until 10 P.M. Under the old statutes, children were not allowed to be on the streets after 9 P.M., from April 1st to September 30th, and after 8 P.M., from October 1st to March 31st.

The new law provides for a 10 P.M. curfew throughout the entire year. The ordinance specifically mentions theatres as included among public buildings, streets, etc., and subjects violators to fines of $5 for each offense.

Mr. Sarnoff also announced that the directors had decided to pay the full premium of the group life insurance policy, for one year, of any employee who may enlist or may be inducted into service.

FILM COMPANY SUPPORT FOR STAGE TO RESUME

Dramatists' Guild and Theatre League Drafting Agreement To Be Effective This Season

Film companies will return to the backing of Broadway plays in November. Several plays are reported under consideration, as the Dramatists Guild and the League of New York Theatres, representing stage producers, work out a satisfactory amendment to their basic agreement acceptable to the film companies.

The first draft of the proposal agreement, to be ready soon, is being prepared by Milton R. Weinberger and James F. Reilly, respectively, attorney and executive secretary of the League. The principal intention is protection for both film companies and Broadway managers.

No "Invasion" Sought

Film companies have repeatedly said that they did not desire to invade the Broadway field, as such, but producers of legitimate shows want assurance of this. Film companies, on the other hand, are concerned with the possibility that they may discover a play themselves and be unable to find a first-rate producer to stage it.

Companies are unwilling to be placed in a position where they would have to accept second-rate producers and seek a free hand in such contingencies. The League, moreover, is fearful lest any exemption granted in the basic agreement permit invasion of the Broadway field by "dummies" acting for film companies.

If the preliminary draft solves these problems, it is expected that it will be voted upon this Friday at a meeting of the Dramatists Guild Council. Financial backing of plays by film companies would be in operation next month, it was said.

Story editors of seven major companies met recently in the office of J. Robert Rubin, Loew's counsel. Others besides Mr. Rubin who attended were: Sidney Phillips, MGM; Franklin Underwood, Twentieth Century-Fox; Jake Wilk, Warners; John Byram, Paramount; Leda Bauer, RKO; Larney Goodkind, Universal; Eve Ettinger, Columbia.

Warner-Backed Play Closes

"Jupiter Laughs," Warner-financed play and written by Dr. A. J. Cronin, closed September 28th, at the Biltmore, New York, after a three-week run. It marked the first closing of the season. Warners is reported to have guaranteed Dr. Cronin a three-week minimum run.

Although the membership of Actors Equity took no official action at a meeting September 27th, on the Sunday show issue, ballots were reported sent out over the week-end in a national referendum to determine whether the union should permit members to play on the Sabbath at the regular rate of pay on an experimental basis, until June 1, 1941.

Equity Council had originally intended to distribute the ballots only if the membership approved but a heated debate on Communism prevented a vote on the Sunday-show issue and it was decided to send out the ballots anyway.

The tentative accord is said to place a limit of $200,000 to be paid to the author and manager out of the gross of a film-backed play. Any further payments would be obtained out of the profits. Film companies could sign the stars of the play for films at any time during the run of the play, but the latter could not leave the play until it closed. Previously, Guild and League rules barred the signing of stars during run of the play.

Under the proposed agreement, film companies would be permitted to close a play if it fails to gross 50 per cent of operating expenses the first week; 75 per cent the second, and 100 per cent the third week. Under this ruling, film companies must run the play for a minimum of three weeks.

At the end of 21 months following production of the play, according to the tentative agreement, the film company may ask that a release date for the picture be set at the close of the 24th month. If the author does not consent, he may refund all monies paid to date and sell the film rights on the open market to the highest bidder. The film company involved would have the right to bid.

Direct Mail Award Won Again by RKO

Leon J. Bamberger, sales promotion manager of RKO, and president of the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers, returned last Friday, October 4th, from Atlantic City, where he attended the annual convention of the Direct Mail Advertising Association, at the Hotel Haddon-Hall.

At the convention banquet, on Otober 3d, Mr. Bamberger accepted, on behalf of his company, a certificate of award presented to RKO as one of the fifty direct mail leaders of the United States for 1940.

This is the fifth consecutive year that RKO has been given this award for the quality of its direct mail advertising. Columbia Broadcasting System also won an award.

All of the RKO mail campaigns were on exhibition during the convention, together with those of other winners. Later, six duplicate exhibit books will be routed throughout the country for display at meetings of local advertising clubs, through the courtesy of DMAA.

Universal Sued On Merger Deal

A suit seeking an accounting and an injunction to restrain the proposed merger of Universal Pictures and Universal Corp., was filed last Friday, October 4th, in New York Supreme Court by counsel for Samuel I. Posen, a director of Universal.

The following statement was issued by the Universal board of directors: "The main basis of the complaint filed by Mr. Posen against Universal and its directors, is the sale of an English distributing subsidiary and the making of certain employment contracts after the recent change in ownership of Universal.

"The subsequent history of Universal and its record of progress and achievement domestically, in England, and throughout the world, is a complete justification of the distribution and other policies pursued by the new owners and management and a complete answer to the baseless and unfounded charges of mismanagement.

"Universal and its directors are confident that they will thoroughly answer these charges in court when the case comes up for trial."

Mrs. Posen, who owns 100 shares of Universal common stock and 50 shares of preferred and is representative of the preferred stockholders on the board, charged that the $5,450,000 paid to the late Carl Laemmle for the acquisition of his controlling stock in Universal, was "exorbitant." He also assailed the employment contracts subsequently made with Charles R. Rogers, R. H. Cochrane and J. Cheever Cowdin. Two other minority stockholders, Celia Brown and Esther M. Tolmach, are co-complainants.

Defendants, in addition to those already named, include: Western Electric, Erpi, Eastman Kodak, J. Arthur Rank, George N. Armsby, Lawrence W. Fox, Daniel Schaeffer, Preston Davie, Paul G. Brown, Willis H. Taylor, Ottavio Prochet, Samuel Spring, Willard S. McKay, Budd Rogers and Daniel C. Collins.

VARYING TERMS, SHORTS FORCING CHARGED BY ALLIED IN 'AID' REPORT

Survey Compares Sales Policies with Signed Contracts Listed by Exhibitors in 14 Centers; Ten Distributors Included

Forcing of shorts and numerous variations in individual cases from announced sales policies by the distributors are charged in the initial September report of the Allied Information Department of the National Allied States Association. The report was issued this week following a preliminary report made by Sidney E. Samuelson, head of the Department, at the eastern regional convention in Atlantic City.

The first report showed that while the 1940-41 buying season had advanced into its fourth month over 37 per cent of the exhibitors had not signed any contracts whatsoever for the new season. An analysis of prices paid for flat rentals and guarantees for 1940-41 compared with last year indicated that a majority of contracts completed were made at the same levels or slightly less than last year.

14 Centers Covered

The information is collated from extensive questionnaire cards sent by Allied to members and to non-members who request them on which the exhibitor indicates, anonymously, details of his contract terms for the season. Separate information is given for each distributor. The number of cards received by the Department from which the data given below and last week were taken was not indicated, but 14 exchange centers were said to have been included.

The report follows:

"COLUMBIA: Announced sales policy: 44 features, 16 westerns, 2 at 40 per cent; 6 at 35 per cent; 10 at 30 per cent; balance flat.

"Columbia sold most deals flat. They either sold selective contracts or allowed 20 per cent cancellation in most instances. Generally, the company did not force shorts. Where shorts were bought, the amounts varied from 15 to 72. Where percentage deals were made, contracts were sold on the following basis: 1 at 40 per cent, balance flat; 2 at 35 per cent, balance flat; 1 at 40 per cent, balance flat; 1 at 35 per cent, balance flat.

Generally, Columbia did not get any guarantees or preferred time.

"METRO-GOLDWYN-MAYER: Announced sales policy: Contract provides for a minimum of 44 and a maximum of 52 features, 4 at 40 per cent; 10 at 35 per cent; 10 at 30 per cent; balance flat.

"The majority of the Metro deals were made for 4 at 40 per cent; 10 at a high flat; 10 at a medium high flat, balance at a lower flat rental. Metro sold selective contracts and generally granted 20 per cent cancellation. Metro forced shorts in practically every instance. The number sold varied widely. The majority paid a guarantee and bought with preferred playing time. The following are examples of selective arrangements:

"Thirteen features: 1 at 40 per cent; 6 at 35 per cent; 1 at 30 per cent; 5 at 25 per cent.

"Eighteen features: 2 at 40 per cent; 2 at 35 per cent; balance flat.

"PARAMOUNT: Announced sales policy: Selling 38 features: 2 at 40 per cent; 8 at 35 per cent; 12 at 30 per cent; balance flat.

"Paramount deviated widely from its announced policy, as indicated by the following deals:

No. Bought	Flat	Percentage	Guarantee	(Preferred Time)	Cancellation (Per cent)
38	32	1 @ 40 5 @ 35	Yes	Yes	20
38	36	2 @ 40	No	No	10
38	35	1 @ 40 2 @ 35	No	Yes	20
38	38	.....	...	...	10

"Fox granted from 10 to 20 per cent cancellation, and in many instances gave an outright number, cancellable, varying from 5 to 10 pictures. It also wrote many selective contracts. Percentage contracts were sold usually without a guarantee or preferred playing time. Shorts and news were sold in most instances and forced most of the time. Some contracts were sold with 2 at 35 per cent; others with 1 at 40 per cent and 4 at 35 per cent.

"UNITED ARTISTS: United Artists has no set sales policy. They're offering 22 or more pictures, with a very wide variation in the kinds of deals sold. Usually, they were sold flat. Examples of percentage deals follow:

"UNIVERSAL: Announced sales policy: 45 features and 16 westerns; 4 at 40 per cent; 8 at 35 per cent; balance flat.

"Universal sold many selective contracts and gave cancellation privilege varying from 10 to 20 per cent. This company did not force shorts or news in the majority of cases. They got a guarantee and preferred time on some contracts, but not in the majority of deals. The following are examples of percentage deals:

"29 bought: 23 flat, 6 at 35 per cent.

"26 bought: 22 flat, 4 at 35 per cent.

A romantic comedy, the picture's backgrounds are laid in old Ireland and New York, with the training given by the New York Police School shown as Mr. Murphy learns to be a policeman. Miss Garland sings such Irish ballads as "Danny Boy" and "Pretty Girl Milking Her Cow," as well as the more modern "Singin' in the Rain." Playing his first straight dramatic role, Douglas McPhail will also sing "You Remind Me of My Mother" and "Little Nellie Kelly."

Directed by Norman Taurog, whose work includes "Young Tom Edison" and "Boys Town," the picture was produced by Arthur Freed, who handled "Babes in Arms" and "Strike Up the Band," in both of which Miss Garland also appeared.

En route to a stamp collectors' convention in Havana, the title character meets a girl bringing $100,000 in ransom money to the kidnappers. After a murder, the case is cleared up through a ruse involving the protagonist's stamp collection.

The doctor, meanwhile, has been teaching young Mr. Moran to take care of the sick animals in town. Although lack of money prevents the boy's further education, he and his mother both turn down offers of help from his grandfather, since the offers are made contingent to his leaving his mother.

Scott R. Dunlap produced and Robert McGowan directed the Dorothy Reid screen play, from an original by Gerald Breitigam.

American Films Gain in Mexico

by JAMES LOCKHART
in Mexico City

American motion pictures are enjoying progressively better business in Mexico, due to the distributors' alertness, the freezing out of Germans—an anti-Nazi spirit pervades—and a new pro-Americanism that has developed of late among Mexicans. Other contributing causes are the lack of French films and the paucity of pictures made in Mexico.

Hollywood Dominates Market

American pictures now dominate this market 97 per cent and it looks as if Hollywood will shortly have 100 per cent control because of the shutting off of imports from Europe and scant prospect that the home industry can speed production sufficiently to fill theatres' needs.

Also, films from the United States are much more popular. Several of them are being accorded the high compliment of applause at the end of each exhibition. The public is keen for anti-Nazi pictures. An outstanding example is "Four Sons," which is doing exceptionally well in Mexico City.

Not a German film, even a newsreel, has been exhibited in Mexico City since Hitler launched his intensified air drives against England. Public opinion, which early in the summer had somewhat of a Nazi leaning, has now turned to the other side with a realization that Mexico must play ball with the U. S.

Another factor, in the shutting out of Nazi and Fascist films and those even slightly tinged with those isms, is the powerful Confederation of Mexican Workers. The Confederation has an even greater say than the censors as to what shall be screened in Mexico, for it controls all motion picture workers, as well as radio employees and most stage folk.

The British Olympic newsreel has appeared here and is being very well received.

Forming DeLuxe Circuit

Much money is being spent by the select Cine Teatro Alameda, Mexico City, to found a de luxe circuit in the Mexican capital. This circuit is to start with the reconditioned Cine Bucareli and a theatre that is nearing completion in a good picture-audience neighborhood. Two other theatres are to be put up for the circuit soon at an expense of $400,000. Plans call for the circuit to eventually have six select cinemas.

Mexico City exhibitors have almost entirely eliminated stage shows because of poor response and heavy costs. The last theatre to take this action was the Cine Teatro Alameda, which was built especially for such spectacles. It is equipped with Mexico's only revolving stage. Only on very special occasions do exhibitors add stage entertainment.

Lift "Ninotchka" Ban

The exhibition ban on Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's "Ninotchka" has been lifted. The ban was enforced some time ago by the boycott of the Confederation of Mexican Workers and was rescinded, it is understood, because of the denouncement of Communists by President Lazaro Cardenas. The Confederation, which is decidedly leftist, boycotted the film because it resented the spoofing in the film of Communism.

Popo Films, a producing organization, is soon to begin business in Mexico City under the guidance of Fernando Rivero, a director, and Adolfo Fernandez Bustamente, a leading lawyer. The company is to start with the making of a "cinematographic album," a history of the talkies in Mexico, composed of excerpts from all the talkies produced in this country since that business began 10 years ago.

Finch Shows Uses of Facsimile Equipment

Facsimile equipment developed by the Finch Telecommunications, Inc., was demonstrated on Wednesday of last week and this Wednesday at the company's field laboratory in New Jersey and from an airplane flying in the vicinity.

The system uses either a radio relay or ordinary telephone lines. The advantage of sending written messages, including drawings and pictures, was stressed. The Finch company is now manufacturing a Duplex Unit which will weigh less than 50 pounds including the power supply. It will be used by organizations requiring rapid two way communication.

Truce in Music War Sought by Orchestra Heads

The country's best known orchestra leaders this week intervened in the fight between the National Association of Broadcasters and the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers. Fearing the dispute might cause the loss to them of valuable music libraries, for radio broadcasting, the band leaders invited officials of both sides to a luncheon this week at the New York Athletic Club, asked them to resume negotiations, and offered mediation.

Conference Uncertain

Early this week there were few indications that the invitation would be accepted. Officials of ASCAP, of the NAB, and of Broadcast Music, Inc., the organization set up by the broadcasters' association to supplant ASCAP as a music source for radio, screen, and stage, had not conferred since early this year when ASCAP introduced its new five-year contract, to take effect January 1st at the expiration of the present five-year agreements.

Both sides have since conducted a war by public statement, preparing for January 1st. BMI has acquired almost 400 station-subscribers, several thousand songs, and a "stable" of music writers. ASCAP has pointed out that its music is popular, and the public will resent its banning from the air after January 1st. It also signed stations.

Early this week, John G. Paine, general manager of ASCAP, denied that his unit was unwilling to meet with NAB and BMI officials. He was referring to an assertion by Sidney Kaye, vice-president and general counsel to BMI.

The band leaders intervening are headed by Fred Waring. Their action is the result of several meetings among themselves, with BMI-NAB officers, with ASCAP officers, and with heads of the New York musicians' local, 802. The band leaders fear a lack of popular music after January 1st, the necessity to popularize new BMI music and make new arrangements, the loss of old arrangements and the vast ASCAP catalogue; and they resent the order by networks that they include certain non-ASCAP numbers per sustaining program. They see themselves "in between," in the music fight.

Last week, after the meeting with Local 802 officials, it was said the orchestra men might ask the National American Federation of Musicians for aid.

Meanwhile, MGM's music publishing firms, the Robbins, Feist, and Miller corporations, this week were negotiating to continue affiliation with ASCAP. Attempts by BMI to acquire the catalogues of these corporations have apparently been dropped.

Members of Actors Equity will not have to pay dues during the period drafted, the Equity Council ruled on Thursday, in New York.

The Council also appointed Maida Reade to confer with the United States War Department on entertainment for draftees. Equity wishes to have its members used for such entertainment.

Vox Populi

A new conception directly utilizing public response to film material got under way this week at Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's Culver City studio, with start of work on a new one reel subject, "The Happiest Man on Earth."

Produced by Jack Chertok and Richard Goldstone, the picture, at the outset, will ask the audience to write to the studio stating whether or not they feel the medium is suitable for screen material. For the story, a departure from the norm, is based on the Harper's Magazine story written by Albert Mantz, which won the O. Henry Memorial Award for the best American short story of 1938.

The prologue, used thus for the first time, is being adapted as the best means of determining public opinion regarding the production of a series of short subjects based on outstanding short stories as a definite part of the company's program.

The screen adaptation was done by Karl Kamb and directed by Dave Miller. Paul Kelly and Victor Killian, the latter last seen in "All This and Heaven, Too," have the leading male roles.

ONE MAN DELEGATE

Orson Welles, one-time creator of panic on the airwaves, erstwhile Broadway actor and producer, and variously bearded and in degrees clean shaven, has some six union-guild memberships behind him in his various endeavors. Said endeavors currently still consist of writing, directing, producing and acting in pictures for RKO Radio.

Mr. Welles' wallet now bulges with the following, among, no doubt, other memorabilia: cards in the Screen Writers Guild, Screen Directors Guild, Screen Actors Guild, Radio Writers Guild, American Federation of Radio Artists, and Actors Equity Association.

Membership in the last-named entitles him to a minimum salary of $40.00 a week. Membership in all makes him a one man demonstration of certain advantages said to accrue if the "one big union" plan, so much discussed, goes through.

Grant's Next

With the exercising of an option, this week, Cary Grant will appear in four Columbia pictures during the next two years. One of the most sought after leading men in the Hollywood community, Grant's latest is Frank Lloyd's "The Howards of Virginia."

The first of his assignments under the new arrangement will cast Mr. Grant as a newspaper reporter when he co-stars with Irene Dunne in "Penny Serenade," filmization of the Martha Cheaven novel. First vehicle for producer-director George Stevens at Columbia, the story is slated to go before cameras this month, with screen play written by Morrie Ryskind.

Two of the other three vehicles planned for the star are "Royal Mail," concerned with England's early postal service, and "There They Go Again," a comedy in which it is planned to co-star Mr. Grant and Rosalind Russell.

"Amateur Angel," an original by Tom Kilpatrick, has been purchased by Columbia and set for production by Charles Rogers. Michael Blankfort, author of the novel, "The Brave and the Blind," has been assigned the screen play.

A romantic comedy with a college and gambling ship background, the story concerns a young professor, a marine biologist and a hostess on the ship. Production is slated for November, immediately following Mr. Rogers' current film, "A Girl's Best Friend Is Wall Street."

CHRISTINE CABANNE and MARGUERITE JENNINGS have been signed by Desider Pek for roles in "Forty Thousand Smiths," stage play which opens in Hollywood this month.

RAOUL WALSH is to direct "Strawberry Blonde" for Warners. The picture will star JAMES CAGNEY and ANN SHERIDAN.

ANN PENNINGTON has been signed by Republic for a role in "Texas Terror."

EDDIE ALBERT has been signed to a new term contract by Warners.

RAY BOLGER and PAUL and GRACE HARTMAN have been signed by RKO for roles in "Sunny."

WALLY KLEIN and AENEAS MACKENZIE are writing the screen play of "They Died With Their Boots On" for Warners.

Jed Buel has been added to the producing roster of Producers Releasing Corporation by Harry Rathner, president. His first picture will be "Heaven On a Dime," a comedy drama which recites the adventures of three synthetic "glamour girls," who hitchhike their way to fame.

Maude Fulton, author of "The Brat," stage play, and a number of screen comedies, and Vernon Smith, former chief writer for Mack Sennett, are writing the screen play. Production will start approximately October 20, at Fine Arts Studios, formerly Grand National.

Buell is the second of four unit heads to be placed under contract to Producers Releasing Corporation, the other being Sigmund Neufeld. Contracts with two other producers are being drawn and will be announced shortly.

William Dieterle has announced the formation of his own company, William Dieterle Productions, to produce on the RKO lot. Details were worked out recently when Mr. Dieterle went to New York to confer with George Schaefer, RKO president. The director has eight stories under consideration, two of which will be selected for production during the coming year. His previous pictures include "Pasteur," "The Life of Emile Zola," "Dr. Ehrlich's Magic Bullet," and "The Hunchback of Notre Dame."

Knute Rockne—All American

(Warner Brothers)

Biography of a Sportsman

First film to bring tears to more men's eyes than women's, this presentation of facts in the life of a sportsman who won the hearts of America and died between halves of a career that became a tradition stands apart from and above the football films of this or any year. And it is, in essence and in spite of all else it is, a football film at core, a football film featuring football games that may be looked up in the record books and checked for accuracy by whatever few there may be who do not know them by heart.

There's a saying in the Middle West that every man has two Alma Maters, the school he attended and Notre Dame. It is to be set down here that people on the Pacific Slope feel the same way about it, if reaction of a Hollywood preview audience may be accepted as indicative.

Cheers for the George Gipp who was Rockne's one-man team, and for the Four Horsemen of three seasons marked by no defeats, were as unanimous as if everyone present were wearing a letter. Tears for the Rockne who abandoned a professorship to coach a football team were of the kind crowds shed for heroes they've known at firsthand.

The production, directed by Lloyd Bacon from a Robert Buckner screen play based on information supplied by Mrs. Rockne and friends of her late husband, is in effect a documentary. It is not without the highlights and undertones of fiction, for the record is full of them, but there is no artificiality, no stretching of values or softening of connotations.

Of Pat O'Brien's performance in the title role showmen may say to their customers that the actor here portrays a character, modulating his delivery to duplicate Rockne's and submitting to makeup which obliterates the O'Brien lineaments. It is of exploitation moment, too, that Howard Jones, Glenn "Pop" Warner, Alonzo Stagg and William Spalding, coaches who shared Rockne's prominence in the years of his activity and have lived on to continue their work, play themselves in the picture.

They Knew What They Wanted

Passion in the Grape Country

This is that Sidney Howard play of the period of the speak-easy twenties and the oh-so-conscious, candid new familiarities of the flapper frankness about sex and things. It was about romance in the raw and love in the orchard, and such like. Grey haired men can remember Richard Bennett in the role of "Tony," reckless, joyous "Tony," cuckolded in love and enjoying it. It came along about the same time as "Desire under the Elms." Those were not actually main stem shows then, tending rather to the margins of the decidedly sophisticated areas.

Now Hollywood has done "What They Wanted" all over again, with variations, and with Charles Laughton in the celebrated "Tony" role, and liking it too, apparently as well as Mr. Bennett did.

It is, to state the matter at once, a picture just about passion, the passion of man for woman, woman for man, that surpasseth everything but understanding—if you understand.

Into the production and enactment have been poured the talents of Erich Pommer as producer, Garson Kanin as director, Charles Laughton, Carole Lombard and William Gargan, to name, on the performance side, only those portraying the corners of the triangle, and to omit Frank Fay as the padre who views it all with tolerance, understanding and what passes for patience and mayhap a hope for the best.

Scene of the yearning, yenning and sinning which gives the picture its point and preoccupies the lens is the Napa Valley of California, which is grape country and a place where things like this can happen and do. Germ of the story is the picture-bride idea, substitution of photographs, with urges that stem from setting, climate and hormones providing the complications. Mr. Laughton portrays the grower who signifies determination to marry the girl, etc.

An audience attracted to the Golden Gate theatre in San Francisco, which is not far from the scene of the story, seemed to find the picture okay.

Comedy of Situation

Story direction and cast are here blended into a comedy which maintains a smooth pace and is at the same time punctuated by individual sequences which evoked hearty and spontaneous preview night applause.

Seen as a New York career woman, the editor of a fashion magazine, is Myrna Loy, who has adopted the strategem of pretending to be married in order to hold her job and not be pestered by a bevy of suitors. Her eventual undoing comes through a chance meeting with a young artist portrayed by Melvyn Douglas, an artist very sure of himself and his ideas, as well as of the pleasure to be gained by living in his small home town in Ohio.

Falling in love, the young man is hurt and shocked when he learns the girl already has a husband; checks up on the situation, discovers it to be a ruse, and literally moves in on the girl and her family posing as her husband.

Yielding finally to her pleas and those of Lee Bowman, seen as an attorney also in love with the young lady, he consents to marry her quietly in order that she may then divorce him and straighten out the situation. But the two have really fallen in love, admit it to one another only on arriving at his home town, to which she has accompanied him while en route to Reno.

High points in the comedy include those oc-curing as a result of their trip to Niagara Falls, picked as a likely and unobtrusive spot in which to marry. There they meet, in addition to a lovesick Swedish couple, friends from his home town, giving her opportunity in plenty to repay him for the embarrassment she's been caused by his sudden appearance as her "husband." Ernest Whitman provides a scene adjudged equally funny by his performance as the colored porter turned into an obfuscating lawyer in order to draw out legal proceedings supposed to facilitate the impending divorce.

The cast includes such performers as Raymond Walburn, as the girl's father; Bonita Granville, as her sister, and Felix Bressart, Donald Meek, Ann Morriss, Sidney Blackmer and Halliewell Hobbes.

The Long Voyage Home

(UA-Wanger)

Story of the Sea

Fabricated of four Eugene O'Neill plays of the sea, this is a tale of seamen in the manner of director John Ford and screen playwright Dudley Nichols, a pair whose collaborations in the past have established a style of their own. Realism, mood, tension and suspense are essentials of the Ford-Nichols style, as they are also of the O'Neill product, a congeniality of techniques brought to flower in this offering.

Giving value to each of the plays merged in the picture, the script is so devised that most of the action takes place aboard a steamer carrying munitions to England. Highlight of the film is an attack upon the ship from a plane, which is not shown, resulting in the death of a principal. Another has died before this in a storm which is another highlight. Shanghaiing of another principal provides the ending. Development of character is, however, emphasized throughout the picture.

Portraying the sailors whose yearnings and adventurings compose the story are Thomas Mitchell, Ian Hunter, John Qualen, John Wayne, Barry Fitzgerald and Ward Bond among others. Wilfred Lawson is seen as captain. Life as lived aboard ship by men who want to go home but never do is pictured without conditioning in behalf of the juvenile or unsophisticated. Strength of plot, power to impress and force of narrative are, as in the case of other Ford-Nichols films, characteristics, to be underscored by exhibitors in their exploitation.

Mexican Spitfire Out West

(RKO)

Farce

Third in a series of farces featuring Lupe Velez and Leon Errol, "Mexican Spitfire Out West" was greeted with hilarity bordering on hysterics by the preview audience in Los Angeles. The picture is based on the fundamentals of comedy, from satire to slapstick, and has Errol again playing a dual role. He enacts the part of a henpecked husband and the part of a wealthy Englishman. The comedy, for the most part, arises from the henpecked husband's assaying the role of the Briton, for purposes of the plot.

Supporting the principals are Donald Woods, Elisabeth Risdon, Cecil Kellaway, Linda Hayes, Charles Coleman, all of whom appeared in "Mexican Spitfire," and Lydia Bilbrook, Charles Quigley, Eddie Dunn, Grant Withers and Tom Kennedy.

The screenplay by Charles E. Roberts and Jack Townley, who adapted the former's story, is filled with dialogue and situations from which is milked every possible laugh. Alacrity in developing the story is shown in Leslie Goodwins' direction.

Cliff Reid was the associate producer, acting under executive producer Lee Marcus.

"Carmelita," angered at her husband, goes to Reno for a divorce. "Dennis," busy with his wealthy English advertiser, sends "Uncle Mat" to his wife to influence her not to divorce him. "Uncle Mat," in trying to help "Dennis," impersonates "Lord Epping," in order to prevent a rival advertising agency from contacting him.

Too Many Girls

Rhythm on the Campus

An oddity among comedies having to do with college and football, a variant also from the norm of musical-comedies as fashioned for the screen, this is a transplantation of George Abbott's Broadway stage production from footlights to film without sacrifice of viewpoint, style, humor or score. Exploitation referring to the success of the Broadway run, and stating that the attraction is here to be seen and heard as was, appears indicated.

In common with the original, the film kids college and collegians, lampoons traditions, amuses itself and witnesses with dance numbers, songs, gags, all in the spirit of fun for fun's sake. The dances, staged by LeRoy Prinz, drew applause from a preview-audience also clapping approval of the Richard Rodgers-Lorenz Hart song numbers, audience behavior in whole indicating satisfaction in excess of that imparted by a musical-comedy in the environs of Hollywood for long and long.

Stand-outs in the cast are Eddie Bracken for humor, Ann Miller and Hal LeRoy for dancing, Frances Langford and Lucille Ball for singing. Any or all of these rate exploitation emphasis. Construction of the picture is such, however, that the burden of entertainment is spread with impartiality over the many members of the cast, ensembles accounting for the peaks in the stream of applause.

Production and direction are by Mr. Abbott, under authorization of executive producer Harry E. Edington, orchestral arrangements by George Bassman and Gene Rose, musical direction by George Bassman and the book by George Marion, Jr.

Comedy with Music

Squaring with all of today's demands for entertainment of a type to take the public's minds off on its troubles, this presentation of youngsters singing and dancing their way through such problems as confronted the WPA troupers when the government discontinued their financing, has freshness of manner, lightness of touch and wholesomeness in all departments as assets for showmen to underscore in its selling. for others to follow, is Grace McDonald, of Broadway and musical comedy, seen here in her first film and praised as few newcomers are by the crowd attending the preview.

Produced by A. M. Botsford and directed by Joseph Santley, with Leroy Prinz staging the dances, the production is a variant of the formula wherein the show can't open because funds have been withdrawn, this time by Washington, wherefore the performers fenagle new financing, this time by pledging counterfeit money for credit. It is not upon story, however, that accent is placed, but upon personality and humor, quip and tune, with Peter Hayes, Eddie Quillan, Frank Jenks and William Frawley supplying the comedy. Virginia Dale, Lillian Cornell and Carol Adams aid Miss McDonald in the feminine division.

Of the five songs, Frank Loesser sharing credit with Burton Lane for three and with Victor Young for two, at least a pair have hit parade qualities.

Wagon Train

(RKO)

Western

"Wagon Train" is the first of a new series of westerns being produced by RKO with Tim Holt in the starring role. Dyed in the wool western fans will find that the dialogue conforms to what may have been the style of the early west, the plot is marked by uncertainty and the acting featured by unsteadiness. The scenery compelled attention.

Holt is supported by Ray Whitley, Emmett Lynn, whose characterization resembles that created by George "Gabby" Hayes in another series of westerns, Martha O'Driscoll and others.

Edward Killy directed from a script by Morton Grant, who adapted the story by Bernard McConville. Bert Gilroy produced under the supervision of executive producer Lee Marcus.

Angels Over Broadway

Metropolitan Melodrama

Showmen who've found profits in exhibition of melodramas set in New York are justified in extolling this one as tops in that variety of entertainment. Exhibitors whose customers go in for character-studies are as warranted in ranking this one above the record-holder in that field. Still other approaches are by way of calling it Thomas Mitchell's performance of performances, or a film in which Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., breaks new ground, but the truth is that here, at last, is the Ben Hecht talent for narrative freed of supervision and thriving in the interests of entertainment for entertainment's sake.

The Hecht talent has something of a history in the world of exhibition. There are those still in business who will recall an earlier adventuring of Mr. Hecht more than script-deep into films. The record of that adventuring is not memorable for cash brought to till thereby. But this time Mr. Hecht not only wrote and directed and produced the picture but also confined himself to story-telling, at which art few have challenged his proficiency, and to the field of entertainment, beyond which he strayed with more purpose than success in those other tries.

The Hecht story told here—and it is a Hecht story, in subject, treatment and presentation—is of the doings of a night on and near Broadway. Principals are four characters, each a Broadway type, none glorified, none condemned, and the things they do stems from their wants, their circumstances, their concepts of ways and means to satisfy appetites and ambitions. At core of the tale is a frustrated suicide, out of which develops a scheme to plunder a supposed millionaire via the poker table, a counter-scheme to plunder the would-be plunderers, a staging of the affairs of living people by a playwright in the throes of alcoholc inspiration. It is by no sequence of commonplaces that the story winds its way to what is, by no design of any character, a happy conclusion for each and all.

Mr. Fairbanks, down as associate producer as well as star, excels past efforts. Mr. Mitchell, given the fat role of broken-down playwright, surpasses himself. Rita Hayworth and John Qualen rank close to these.

Before I Hang

(Columbia)

Doctor's Dilemma

Having already demonstrated in principle the Carrel-Lindbergh artificial heart in "The Man They Could Not Hang," and sundry other medical theories in previous films, Boris Karloff now takes the stand for rejuvenation by serum injection. All of the films referred to have one other thing in common—they are melodramas of the thrill type.

Supporting Karloff are Evelyn Keyes, portraying the doctor's daughter; Bruce Bennett, playing opposite Miss Keyes in the romantic spot; Edward Van Sloan, as the prison doctor, and Pedro de Cordoba, as an aged pianist.

Opening on a court room scene where "Dr. Garth" (Karloff), is receiving his death sentence for a "mercy killing," the story moves along to the prison. There under the patronage of the warden and the prison doctor, "Dr. Garth" is permitted to continue his experiments in rejuvenation. The night he is to be hanged "Dr. Garth" with the aid of the prison doctor injects the serum into his heart. Then comes a last minute reprieve.

The serum works and after a spell in the hospital the doctor finds his hair grey where it was white and his eyes strong where before they were weak. But the serum had been mixed before injection with the blood of a murderer and before the doctor cashes in he strangles four men.

The Girl in the News

(20th Century Pictures-Metro)

Murder Drama

Unlike the conventional "whodunnit" this quite competently devised and tidy murder drama resolves itself into the "howcansheget-awaywithit" category. There are two deaths—a suicide and a murder—but there is little mystery woven into it save the possible problem of how the sweet young charmer in the nurse's uniform will escape the gallows. There are already crowded ranks in this brand of entertainment, and it is doubtful whether either of the principals, Margaret Lockwood as the nurse or Barry K. Barnes as the barrister, have strong enough personalities to bring the film into the super category.

Miss Lockwood is involved in the death of a neurotic old woman and saved from conviction for murder by the skill of Barnes. Again she is caught in the net of suspicion which makes it look as if she has been plotting a murder on similar, coldblooded lines. And again Barnes, in spite of his doubts, chivalrously takes up the cudgels of the law and having bludgeoned crucial evidence from one of the murderers, saves his fair lady, this time for himself.

Technically the film is extremely competent, photography in particular being effective; the cutting, too, shows application.

Though there is nothing outstanding about the film neither in subject matter nor in treatment, it offers a steady hour or so of entertainment in a familiar genre. And it ignores the war which is a booking advantage this side.

Frontier Vengeance

(Republic)

Western

A stagecoach war leading up to a race for a mail contract serves Don "Red" Barry as a plot for this newest in the series. It's a rehashing of a rather time worn theme but the personable Barry and production values make for entertainment.

Others in the cast include Betty Moran, George Offerman, Jr., Ivan Miller, Obed "Dad" Pickard, Cindy Walker, Kenneth MacDonald and Yakima Canutt. George Sherman was associate producer and Nate Watt directed.

"Jim Sanders" (Barry) at the urgings of his friend "Clay Blackburn" comes to Crescent City to become a driver for the "Blackburn" stage line, operated by "Clay's" father. En route he meets "Ruth Hunter," whose father operates the rival stage line. After a spell as a driver for "Blackburn" "Jim" realizes that "Blackburn" by nefarious methods is forcing "Hunter" out of business.

"Jim" quits "Blackburn" and becomes a driver for "Hunter." The night before the race for the mail contract "Clay" is killed by one of his father's henchmen and "Jim" is accused of the crime. He escapes and in the big race "Jim" replaces "Ruth" as driver once the stage is passed the town. "Jim" wins after a brush with the rival line's gunmen and driver.

Drums of the Desert

(Monogram)

Love and the Legion

This Paul Malvern production strikes a topical note by introducing the use of parachute troops in the African desert on the part of the French Foreign Legion.

In addition to the desert warfare depicted, the interests of romance are served by Ralph Byrd, as leader of the parachutists, Lorna Gray and Boyd Irwin. The two latter are engaged, but Byrd finally gets the young lady, with whom he has fallen in love while both were en route to the Legion post.

Comedy relief is ably provided by Manton Moreland, who depicts the Senegalese sergeant of the parachute troops. Peter George Lynn and William Castello portray desert tribal leaders.

Directed by George Waggner, the screen play by Dorothy Reid and Joseph West was based on a story by John T. Neville.

Diamond Frontier

(Universal)

Romance and Melodrama

Laid in South Africa of the 1870's, "Diamond Frontier" tells of the crimes of a group of diamond miners, and their eventual downfall through the efforts of a man they have had wrongfully sentenced to 10 years of penal servitude.

Leader of the trio which by hook or crook gets control of the output of a diamond town is Victor McLaglen; the man he has convicted on a trumped-up charge is John Loder, who had returned to the town to become a doctor and marry his sweetheart, Anne Nagel. Escaping from the penal camp after years of service, with the help of a character portrayed by Siegfried Arno, and later with the aid of Cecil Kellaway, he returns to see justice done.

Action aplenty, involving both shooting and riding, and fights with natives and jungle animals, feature the film, which is the second turned out by associate producer Marshall Grant. The original screen play by Edmund Hartmann and Stanley Rubin treats the hero's exploits after his escape in the same manner as those of Edmund Dantes of Dumas "Count of Monte Cristo." The fact is noted to the extent of giving the protagonist the name of Dantes after his return, when he poses as a diamond buyer, and by having the resemblance commented upon by his friend.

Harold Schuster directed the picture, while the cast also includes Philip Dorn, Francis Ford Hugh Sothern and Ferris Taylor.

Here Is Ireland

(Irish-American Film Corp.)

Erin Excursion

Whether you or your mother came from Ireland, here is a picture book trip to the Old Sod. Under the guidance of Pat Stanton the spectator makes a complete circuit of the land of saints and scholars from the starting point in Cork. The stopoffs include innumerable places, lakes and lands of song and story fame, and spots not so romantically known but photographically picturesque. A litany of the itinerary is liltingly Irish.

The time allotment for each county and town visitation is short but Mr. Stanton has covered a lot of fond, familiar sights. The modern and progressive tone of Ireland's mode of living is shown as well. There are sequences depicting the latest developments in school building, housing construction, factory maintenance, road laying, electricity production and army servicing. Various church, and governmental figures are briefly seen. The religious life of the country is given reverent treatment.

The film is tinted and in certain instances the shadings are none too artistically fortunate. Another deficiency is the excessive length of the travelogue's but for all of its failings from the professional standpoint the film has nostalgic appeal for all the wandering sons and daughters of Eire. Strangely enough, there is not a single brogue in the whole sound track but Mr. Stanton has supplied a witty Irish line for the commentary.

Seen at an early evening performance at the Belmont Theatre in New York where a fine sized audience of evident extraction sat in a reminiscent mood.—JOSEPH F. COUGHLIN.

Presented by Pat Stanton. Distributed by Irish-American Film Corp. No P. C. A. Certificate No. Running time, when seen in New York, 80 minutes. Release date, October 3, 1940. General audience classification.

Whirlpool

(Mayer-Burstyn)

Marital Triangle

"Whirlpool" is a French made screen story of the lives of a husband and wife and how their marriage is frustrated when the husband is crippled in an automobile accident. Peggy Thompson, an American writer, wrote the original screen play in French.

The film was originally titled "Remous" when it was imported from France some four years ago. At that time the picture was banned by the New York State board of censors as being "immoral, indecent and tending to corrupt morals." Since then Mayer-Burstyn, who own the American distribution rights to the film, have revised the picture more than a few times and have received approval for public exhibition from the censor board. These revisions have made the picture, as it is now being shown, somewhat jumpy and scattered.

Jeanne Boitel and Jean Galland play the roles of wife and husband whose honeymoon is interrupted by an automobile accident which leaves him partly paralyzed. Maurice Maillot offers an impressive portrayal of the young athlete in whom the lonely wife finds solace, while Francoise Rosay, seen many times before in other imported French productions and remembered by French cinema fans for her portrayal of "Madame Burgomaster" in "Carnival in Flanders" returns in this as the gossiping beldame. Edmond T. Greville directed the picture subordinating the dialogue to action in many of the scenes. English subtitles and a musical background help hold the film together.

Previewed at a special screening for the daily and trade press at the new Art theatre in the heart of Greenwich Village in New York.—GEORGE SPIRES.

Produced by H. O. Film Productions in France and distributed in the United States by Mayer-Burstyn. Directed by Edmond T. Greville from an original screen play by Peggy Thompson. Music by A. Sendrey. Release date, October 7, 1940. Running time, 73 minutes. Adult audience classification.

SHORT PRODUCT

A Class in Swing
(Universal)
Youth in Song and Dance

The pattern previously formulated by the song and dance numbers for this category of musical moments is kept intact for the current entertainment round. Although the locale has been changed to a classroom, the bill of talent still offers one male and female vocalist, a bevy of girl harmony singers, an all female troupe of musicians and an assorted collection of specialty dancers. The cue for the vaudeville parade comes when the students, who face a postponement of a rehearsal period for their school show, decoy the absent minded professor out of the room on a false alarm call from the dean's office. With the absent minded professor out of the way, the boys and girls go to the front of the class to demonstrate their talent tricks. The result is a show that is light and youthful.—Running time, 16 minutes.

Color adds nicely to a depiction of the crazy house atmosphere and antics.—Running time, 7½ minutes.

The Spook Speaks

Buster Keaton

The zany comedy peculiar to Buster Keaton is prominent in this two reel comedy staged in a magician's house. Buster and Elsie Ames play a married couple who become caretakers of the house when the magician goes on tour. Mysterious things happen, naturally, but it is the Buster way, which, for the uninitiated, calls for much physical pummelling with Buster on the receiving end. He can take it. Other characters involved in the goings-on include a newly wedded couple, a rival magician, and a trained penguin. Running time, 18 minutes.

FILM LIBRARY NOW HAS CIRCUIT OF 325 UNITS

Modern Art Museum Division Ships Programs and Study Units Free for School Use

Indicating steadily increasing interest in the motion picture as an art industry, approximately 325 colleges, schools, universities, clubs, and other educational and cultural groups, are now renting films from New York's Museum of Modern Art Library circulating service. The films are contributed by film companies and individuals after playing regular theatres. Eight series of historic and indicative films are now available to library patrons.

Began Five Years Ago

The library began circulating films five years ago with only two series: "A Short Survey of the Film in America," comprising six programs of approximately two hours length each; and "Some Memorable American Films, 1896-1935," comprising five programs. Six additional series now available are: "The Swedish Film and Post-War American Films," of eight programs; "The Film in Germany and the Film in France," with seven programs; "The Work of D. W. Griffith, 1907-1924," with five programs; "Non Fiction Films," divided into a number of films merely illustrating this category, six fims illustrating the documentary and instructional film field, six films illustrating the American documentary film field; ten films illustrating British documentaries, three illustrating German documentary, and two Swedish documentary; and "The Russian Film."

The programs constituting each series roughly are of two hour length. The Museum prefers to rent by series or program and it will not allow patrons to book single films. This is because films are sent out in 1,600 foot 16 mm reels. Thus, several subjects of short length may be on one reel and the work of splicing and re-splicing for one-picture demands would be difficult and technically undesirable. Films are available in both 16 and 35 mm.

Requests for films come from throughout the United States, a majority from the northeastern states, and there have been requests from Hawaii and Canada.

Few Current Films Released

Excepting a few documentary films, none of the films released are up-to-date, their commercial life being ended before the library obtains them. Library officials say documentaries have a longer commercial life than entertainment films.

Physical distribution is done by American Railway Express, from the Museum. Films are sent collect to patrons who also receive from the library, gratis, program notes and piano scores for silent films. In some instances, such as "The Birth of a Nation," these piano scores are the original. However, in most cases, they are arranged by Arthur Kleiner, of the Museum.

The library receives many requests from operators of art theatres but is forced to refuse them because the films cannot be used for money-making purposes. It cannot even rent films for benefits.

Most requests come from the English, foreign language, sociology, and writing departments of educational institutions.

Columbia University's Fine Arts department is giving a course in motion pictures at three points per term and Iris Barry and John Abbott, directors of the library, are instructors of the course, Wednesday afternoons, at the Museum.

Among the institutions whose departments find the library's pictures valuable supplementary information are Harvard, Yale, Princeton, Cornell, the University of Michigan, the University of California, the University of North Carolina, Duke, Dartmouth, Amherst, Williams, Vassar, and Smith.

Allen Porter is in charge of film distribution.

Harriet Parsons Signed By Republic for Series

M. J. Siegel, head of Republic studio, has signed Harriet Parsons to produce, direct and write a series of 12 one reel subjects under the general title of "Hollywood High Lights." The subjects will be similar to "Screen Snapshots" of Columbia in that they will use Hollywood personalities. However, the subjects will have definite stories. It is the first deal of its kind made by Republic.

Berke Quits Republic

William Berke, associate producer at Republic Pictures for the past four years, has resigned. He will take a month's vacation before announcing his plans for the future. Cook has been put in charges of scenarios for both television and motion picture programs.

Change "Higgins" Cast

Republic has replaced James, Lucile and Russell Gleason; Maude Eburne and Harry Davenport, with Roscoe Karns, Ruth Donnelly, George Ernest, Polly Moran and Spencer Charters in the "Higgins Family" series. The only member of the original cast to stay is Lois Ransom.

New 20th-Fox Musical

Plans have been set by Twentieth Century-Fox for a high budget musical, "Yankee Doodle Goes to Plattsburg." The story, by Delmar Daves and Robert Hopkins, concerns life in an army training camp. Lou Edelman will produce from a screen play by Mr. Daves.

Early Admissions in New York Increased

The "morning matinee" admission scale at the Paramount, Roxy and Strand theatres in New York was increased this week from 25 cents (28 cents with the defense tax) to 35 cents, including the tax. The Capitol went to 35 cents some time ago for admission up to 1 P. M. The Rivoli and the Music Hall charge 40 cents from the time the doors open to noontime.

The increase, which has been considered for some time, while indicating that business is better, also answers complaints of subsequent run houses that the important downtown theatres were charging too low admissions in the morning. Operators in other key cities will watch the results of the admission increase in New York, it was reported.

Ashcraft Completes Tour

THIS, Ladies and Gentlemen of Show Business, IS A RAVE!

Hollywood Review

"Angels Over Broadway"
(Columbia)

HOLLYWOOD, Oct. 6.—This, Ladies and Gentlemen of Show Business, is one of those rare pictures you'll be wanting to recommend not only to the customers but to friends, family and favored relatives. For this is a picture apart from the crowd, an intelligent employment of incisive dialogue, veracious setting, plausible circumstances, credible incident and brilliant acting in the telling of a strong story which springs from and is animated by impulses inherent in the characters participating. It is a film of ideas and force, suspense and power, conceived and executed solely for entertainment purposes and entertaining mightily.

Author, producer and director of the picture is Ben Hecht. This is about the finest specimen of screen writing in some years.

Scene of Hecht's realistic imaginings is New York. His characters are a weakling defaulter on suicide bent, a would-be scout for crooked gamblers, a down-at-heel dancer seeking a break on any terms she can wangle, a spent playwright vocal and inventive in his cups, assorted night-figures, gangsters, citizens. Kernel of the story is a scheme for plundering the defaulter which succeeds, contrary to plannings, in saving him, but the power of it is in characterization, plot development and, finally, a series of taut situations seldom paralleled for sustained tension.

Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., starred as the would-be crook and also on the credit sheet as associate producer, turns in a sterling portrayal of an unheroic hero. Thomas Mitchell's enactment of the dissolute playwright is an all-time high in his long sequence of sparkling performances. Rita Hayworth as the girl and John Qualen as the colorless defaulter measure up to Fairbanks and Mitchell. Others adding importantly to the whole are George Watts, Ralph Theodore, Eddie Foster, Jack Roper and Constance Worth. Lee Garmes co-directed and photographed the production.

Running time, 79 minutes. "G."* ROSCOE WILLIAMS

*"G" denotes general classification.

OBITUARIES

George W. Dell, 65, Dies in Buffalo

One of Buffalo's first motion picture operators, George W. Dell, 65, 34 Knowlton Avenue, Kenmore, died October 3rd in Millard Fillmore Hospital after an illness of several weeks. Mr. Dell had been connected with the Little Hippodrome Theatre, in Lower Main Street, since 1906. He, Arthur P. Miller, Fred C. Taylor and Dewitt L. Martin opened the house, one of the first in Buffalo. They were the only four operators at one time.

In 1901, Mr. Dell started out as an illustrated song projectionist. He quickly saw the possibility of movies and two years later acquired an Edison "gooseneck" machine which used limelight for illumination. Prior to opening of the Little Hippodrome, Mr. Dell and his associates nightly would pack up their primitive equipment and dash from one amusement spot to another to show their films. Mr. Dell was a partner in the first film exchange in Buffalo and brought Pathe's famous "Life of Christ" from France to screen it in almost every church in the city.

An old-time member of the operators' union, No. 233, Mr. Dell is survived by a sister, Mrs. Lottie Schrader. Funeral services were held in Kenmore.

Mrs. Little Jack Little

Tea Hellman Little (Mrs. Little Jack Little), daughter of Harry Hellman and sister of Neal Hellman, who operates the Royal and Paramount theatres, Albany, and Palace, Troy, N. Y., died October 2nd. Mrs. Little was the wife of the radio singer, Little Jack Little.

Edward O'Toole, 74, secretary and treasurer of Colonnade Pictures Corporation, died in Miami October 2nd.

When he turned to production he became a leading figure in the formation of the present British International company, one of the two largest studios in the United Kingdom, which he welded with Wardour Films and Associated British Cinemas circuit into a producer-renter-exhibitor group.

In 1934 Mr. Maxwell was president of Kinematograph Renters Society of Great Britain.

The suit also seeks appointment of a receiver, asks that Settos make an accounting of the company's funds and that proceeds or property be distributed among the partners.

IN COURTS

"Ramparts" Appeal Against Pennsylvania Ban Filed

RKO and the March of Time took their appeal against the Pennsylvania Censor Board's banning of their film, "The Ramparts We Watch", to a higher court last Saturday, after the state's Court of Common Pleas had upheld the censors' action. They took their case to the state Superior Court. Attorneys for the two companies are maneuvering to have their plea heard as early as possible.

Showing of the film in Reading and Harrisburg was halted several weeks ago by censors, who claimed that the inclusion of two reels from the German film "Baptism of Fire" made it unfit to be shown, and propaganda. Louis de Rochement, of the March of Time, producer has indicated he will take the action to the highest courts.

Court Halts Theatre Project

Judge Rowland K. Adams of the Baltimore city court has reversed a decision of the Zoning Board granting permission for the erection of a new theatre in the Park Heights section of Baltimore. The Buildings Engineer had denied a permit for the project. An ordinance authorizing the Park Heights Amusement Company to construct the theatre had been passed by the City Council early in the summer, but it specified that the construction be under the supervision of the Buildings Bureau and in accord with existing building laws. Opposition to the theatre project included a nearby church and local merchants.

Motion Picture Operators Local 306, New York, this week was restrained by Aron Steuer, New York supreme court justice from pressing its suit against the People's Cinema, Inc., owner of the People's Cinema, Brooklyn, to enforce a union contract unless the union consents to arbitrate its dispute. The court refused an injunction to restrain picketing, because of insufficiency of the pleading.

Authorizes New Theatre

The Pennsylvania supreme court in Philadelphia last week ruled that a new motion picture theatre, to be included in a project along with five modern stores, may be erected in the Stenton section of Mt. Airy, new Philadelphia residential section. The opinion, filed by Justice H. Edgar Barnes came as a climax of an 18 month fight by Frank B. Todd, Jr., who lives opposite the proposed development, and other neighbors. Plans for the new theatre were originated by Abe Sablosky, who operates an independent circuit in Philadelphia.

Sues Union Officials

Darwood Shelton, former operator at the Overland theatre, St. Louis, has filed suit in circuit court there for $5,794 from Robert Tomsen, business agent of the Motion Picture Operators Union, Local 143, and Frank B. Gralike, assistant business agent of the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, claiming loss of his job, because of the defendants.

FLORIAN: Robert Young, Helen Gilbert—Fair picture. Poor business. Just something wrong. Played September 11-12.—Earl J. Logan, State Theatre, Clarence, Iowa. Rural patronage.

FORTY LITTLE MOTHERS: Eddie Cantor, Rita Johnson, Bonita Granville, Judith Anderson—First time I've liked Cantor. Crowd liked it. Excellent business. Warm weather. Running time, 87 minutes. Played September 21-22.—Earl J. Logan, State Theatre, Clarence, Iowa. Rural patronage.

GOLD RUSH MAISIE: Ann Sothern, Lee Bowman, Virginia Weidler—Good picture; good business. Pleased all. Running time, 82 minutes. Played September 24.—E. M. Freiburger, Paramount Theatre, Dewey, Okla. Small town patronage.

GOLD RUSH MAISIE: Ann Sothern, Lee Bowman, Virginia Weidler—Swell picture. Best one of the "Maisie" series yet. Wish I had played it on Sunday. Pleased everyone. Played September 21.—R. D. Melton, Thompson Theatre, Wilson, Okla. Small town patronage.

I LOVE YOU AGAIN: William Powell, Myrna Loy, Frank McHugh, Edmund Lowe—Nice draw and a very good comedy that you could go to town on. Feature pleased and sent everyone out laughing. Running time, 99 minutes.—A. E. Eliasen, Rialto Theatre, Paynesville, Minn. Rural and small town patronage.

MORTAL STORM, THE: Margaret Sullavan, James Stewart, Robert Young, Frank Morgan—A good picture showing the change in Germany after Hitler was made chancellor. Good business. Running time, 100 minutes. Played September 8-9.—Joe Schindele, Granite Theatre, Granite Falls, Minn. Small town patronage.

PRIDE AND PREJUDICE: Greer Garson, Laurence Olivier, Mary Boland, Maureen O'Sullivan—Good story, good acting, good show for women, but definitely N. G. for small town box office. Running time, 118 minutes. Played September 1-2.—Joe Schindele, Granite Theatre, Granite Falls, Minn. Small town patronage.

TWENTY MULE TEAM: Wallace Beery, Leo Carrillo, Anne Baxter, Marjorie Rambeau—Good cast and picture kept crowd excited and interested to the very end. Beery's performance could not be equalled. Business exceptionally good and I feel it would do well anywhere played. Running time, 83 minutes. Played September 24-25.—George O. Wiggin, Maplewood Theatre, Malden, Mass. Neighborhood and transient patronage.

YOUNG TOM EDISON: Mickey Rooney, Fay Bainter, Virginia Weidler—EDISON THE MAN: Spencer Tracy, Rita Johnson—I am listing these together because that is the way I played them. I have never heard so many raves about a show here before. Everyone at the show was completely satisfied and said so. You would be surprised at how well these two films hooked together. MGM should re-issue these together at a later date. I ran only one performance each evening and played to the same number of folks each night. Business was good enough so that there was overage to pay. That is a fairly rare occurrence in this spot. In other words, I was well satisfied with the receipts. Even if I had lost money, I would still consider the show worth playing because of the good-will it created here. You may be interested in how I ran it. I started off by running both main titles and credit titles first, so that there would be no break between the films. Then I started "EDISON THE MAN" up until the point where he goes to sleep at the banquet, then instead of letting him dream his Spencer Tracy life, I inserted "YOUNG TOM EDISON" at this point. Then when "YOUNG TOM" finished, I shifted right over into the beginning of the story of "EDISON THE MAN." Anyway, I'm glad I did it and I thought some of you might be able to try the same thing. Naturally, both of the films are excellent as might be expected. I had better stop so Motion Picture Herald won't have to add a couple of pages to this issue. Running time, 191 minutes. Played September 26-27.—W. Varick Nevins III, Alfred Co-Op Theatre, Alfred, N. Y. Small college town and rural patronage.

Paramount

CAT AND THE CANARY, THE: Bob Hope, Paulette Goddard, Gale Sondergaard—Quite spooky. Kept the crowd on edge. Hope is quite popular with everyone. Goddard is O.K. Sondergaard is perfect in her role. Running time, 78 minutes. Played September 20-21.—John Stafford, Royal Theatre, Leonardville, Kansas. Rural patronage.

COMIN' ROUND THE MOUNTAIN: Bob Burns, Una Merkel, Jerry Colonna—This is a turkey if you ever saw one. It is cheap, crude, in both direction, action and scenario. Why Bob Burns accepts such inane vehicles I wouldn't know. They had a supposed screw ball comedian, this Colonna. If he is not the worst excuse for a comedian, I'll eat my hat, and the audience will, too. Not often do we have an unruly house, but they gave this chap the bird, plenty. Burns is on his way out, if they don't give him better than his last two.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

COMIN' ROUND THE MOUNTAIN: Bob Burns, Una Merkel, Jerry Colonna—Too much hill billy to this. While I did a good business, people said it wasn't what they thought it was. Would advise a mid-week date on this.—Played September 14-16. —R. D. Melton, Thompson Theatre, Wilson, Okla. Small town patronage.

GHOST BREAKERS, THE: Bob Hope, Paulette Goddard—Thought this picture was very good. Bob Hope, of course, stole the picture and Goddard did her part well. Business swell first day but fell off slightly on second night, even though it was "Bank Night." Running time, 85 minutes. Played September 29-30.—George O. Wiggin, Maplewood Theatre, Malden, Mass. Neighborhood and transient patronage.

GOLDEN GLOVES: Richard Denning, Jean Cagney, William Frawley—Well enjoyed by all who saw it. Running time, 70 minutes. Played September 13-14.—Guy G. Black, Plaza Theatre, Lyons, Neb. General patronage.

MYSTERY SEA RAIDER: Henry Wilcoxon, Carole Landis—Played on Jack Pot night. Average business for the occasion. Picture seemed to please. Played September 20.—E. B. Bowman, Maxton Theatre, Maxton, N. C. Small town patronage.

$1,000 A TOUCHDOWN: Joe E. Brown, Martha Raye—Joe Brown always draws well here. This was no exception. Martha Raye did better in this. Running time. 74 minutes. Played September 27-28.—John Stafford, Royal Theatre, Leonardville, Kansas. Rural patronage.

QUEEN OF THE MOB: Ralph Bellamy—Don't see why they keep making these. The public is tired of these. Same old thing over and over. Business way below average. Running time. 60 minutes. Played September 24-25.—R. D. Melton, Thompson Theatre, Wilson, Okla. Small town patronage.

RHYTHM ON THE RIVER: Bing Crosby, Mary Martin, Basil Rathbone, Oscar Levant—First Paramount picture for some time and it was a good one. Had a nice draw and no kicks so everyone must have enjoyed it. Not the best picture Bing has made but the next one to it. Running time, 94 minutes.—A. E. Eliasen, Rialto Theatre, Paynesville, Minn. Rural and small town patronage.

RHYTHM ON THE RIVER: Bing Crosby, Mary Martin, Basil Rathbone, Oscar Levant—Same old Bing; not much change. Fairly good show though. Average business. Pleased all. Running time, 90 minutes. Played September 21-23.—R. D. Melton, Thompson Theatre, Wilson, Okla. Small town patronage

Good color and well produced. Lynne Overman was the real attraction and held interest throughout the picture. Running time, 71 minutes. Played September 15-17.—Guy G. Black, Plaza Theatre, Lyons, Neb. General patronage.

WAY OF ALL FLESH, THE: Akim Tamiroff, Gladys George—Well, we have had a new experience. Better than forty per cent of the small audience walked out on this one before it was half through. The longer I am in this business, the more I wonder at the stupidity of the producers in an industry that seems to know so little of what the people want. When does business approach somewhere near normal? When you have a fairly good picture, they don't need to be super specials, just good program pictures that had had some care in selecting stories, fitting the cast, and good direction.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

Republic

RIDE, TENDERFOOT, RIDE: Gene Autry, Smiley Burnette—Good picture and good business. Running time, 61 minutes. Played September 27-28.—E. M. Freiburger, Paramount Theatre, Dewey, Okla. Small town patronage.

RKO Radio

LUCKY PARTNERS: Ronald Colman, Ginger Rogers—I bet my last dollar that this was a low budget picture, but it had clever direction, lines and acting. But you could see that some effort had been made to develop the plot and make a smooth picture that had audience value. Which bears out my contention that high budgets mean nothing if thought and savy of what the public wants is lacking. Business is not normal on anything, but common sense will tell you that if we ever hope to recoup and gain back the patrons that have been alienated by poor pictures, more of what it takes will have to come thru this season. The business is here, always has been, but if you get gypped on merchandise, you don't go back and get gypped twice. Is there any difference? —A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

MY FAVORITE WIFE: Irene Dunne, Cary Grant, Randolph Scott, Gail Patrick—Here is a very good picture suitable for all types of patronage. Should please all for it did here. Business excellent both days and second run house. Running time, 88 minutes. Played September 22-23.—George O. Wiggin, Maplewood Theatre, Malden, Mass. Neighborhood and transient patronage.

PRIMROSE PATH: Ginger Rogers, Joel McCrea—Didn't do a terrific business but seemed everyone liked it. Played September 22-23.—Rudolph Covi, Covi Theatre, Herminie, Pa. Small town patronage.

RAMPARTS WE WATCH, THE: Documentary —I have seen hundreds of motion pictures but never in my life have I seen one so dynamic as this one. Every man, woman and child should see it, then take a few minutes off to themselves and think over a few things that have been troubling their minds. This picture should be sealed in the vaults for future showings. If you don't run RKO, I suggest you buy and run it. It's worth your time and money. Running time, 87 minutes. Played September 22-24.—Guy G. Black, Plaza Theatre, Lyons, Neb. General patronage.

Twentieth Century-Fox

I WAS AN ADVENTURESS: Zorina, Richard Greene, Erich Von Stroheim—Another flop. No business here. People will only come to see pictures that are big, have drama, action, story and punch and cast. Played September 18.—Rudolph Covi, Covi Theatre, Herminie, Pa. Small town patronage.

LITTLE OLD NEW YORK: Alice Faye, Fred MacMurray, Richard Greene, Brenda Joyce—A swell picture. Print a little bad and very dark but acting overcame defects. Running time, 100 minutes. Played September 13-14.—John Stafford, Royal Theatre, Leonardville, Kansas. Rural patronage.

LUCKY CISCO KID: Cesar Romero, Mary Beth Hughes, Evelyn Venable—Pleased my western fans and others who came to this. Enough comedy to please all and this Hughes girl gave the old boys in the back rows something to think about. Running time, 65 minutes.—A. E. Eliasen, Rialto Theatre, Paynesville, Minn. Rural and small town patronage.

MAN I MARRIED, THE: Joan Bennett, Francis Lederer, Anna Sten—Good picture. Extremely poor business. Played September 18-19.—E. B. Bowman, Maxton Theatre, Maxton, N. C. Small town patronage.

MARYLAND: Brenda Joyce, John Payne, Walter Brennan, Fay Bainter—Just another horse picture with no box office punch whatever. Played September 27-28.—Rudolph J. Covi, Covi Theatre, Herminie, Pa. Small town and rural patronage.

RETURN OF FRANK JAMES, THE: Henry Fonda, Jackie Cooper, Henry Hull—Good picture and capacity business. No complaints. Seems to be a natural for the small town. Running time, 92 minutes. Played September 25-26.—E. M. Freiburger, Paramount Theatre, Dewey, Okla. Small town patronage.

TWO CONTRIBUTORS JOIN DEPARTMENT

Two new contributors this week sent in opinions on pictures they have played in recent weeks. They are:

Earl J. Logan, State Theatre, Clarence, Iowa.

H. B. Narfason, Foam Lake Theatre, Foam Lake, Saskatchewan, Can.

Read the reports of these and other contributors in the adjoining columns.

SHOOTING HIGH: Jane Withers, Gene Autry—A nice picture with both Jane Withers and Gene Autry going over good. Running time, 65 minutes. Played August 30-31.—John Stafford, Royal Theatre, Leonardville, Kansas. Rural patronage.

United Artists

MY SON, MY SON: Brian Aherne, Madeleine Carroll, Louis Hayward, Laraine Day—No draw and no money. Didn't please any too well, either. Running time, 115 minutes.—A. E. Eliasen, Rialto Theatre, Paynesville, Minn. Rural and small town patronage.

OUR TOWN: William Holden, Martha Scott, Frank Craven, Thomas Mitchell, Fay Bainter, Beulah Bondi, Guy Kibbee, Stuart Erwin—Didn't do a bit of business on this after the first night and many said it was the poorest picture they'd seen in my place for some time but my personal opinion was that it was an exceptional good feature and I enjoyed it very much but then I don't have to pay to see shows. Running time, 90 minutes.—A. E. Eliasen, Rialto Theatre, Paynesville, Minn. Rural and small town patronage.

TURNABOUT: Carole Landis, John Hubbard, Adolphe Menjou, Mary Astor—Went out on the limb on this one and did I ever get it on the neck. Had a good draw but they just sat there and seemed to dare the picture to make them laugh so they didn't. Don't know whether they didn't understand what it was all about or whether they just didn't care for it but no more limbs for me for some time. Running time, 83 minutes.—A. E. Eliasen, Rialto Theatre, Paynesville, Minn. Rural patronage.

Universal

BOYS FROM SYRACUSE, THE: Allan Jones, Martha Raye, Joe Penner, Rosemary Lane, Irene Hervey, Charles Butterworth—The original of this picture was a stage production called "The Comedy of Errors" and we saw it in Stratford-on-Avon 40 years ago but the picture is very funny throughout and quite similar to the original production in Shakespeare's own theatre. This producton, funny throughout, should please all audiences seeing it. Running time, 73 minutes. Played September 27-October 3.—William Noble, Criterion Theatre, Oklahoma City, Okla. General patronage.

Warner Brothers

FLOWING GOLD: John Garfield, Frances Farmer, Pat O'Brien—Just the show for my audience. A very good story and plenty of action and some comedy. Can recommend this one which will do good business in a situation such as ours. Plenty of excitement in the tower fire scene. Play it. Running time, 82 minutes. Played September 26.—A. L. Dove, Bengough Theatre, Bengough, Saskatchewan, Can. Small town and rural patronage.

GRANNY GET YOUR GUN: May Robson, Harry Davenport—The crowd liked this one but it failed to draw. May Robson is a fine old trouper and will be missed when she drops out of pictures. Running time, 62 minutes. Played August 23-24.—John Stafford, Royal Theatre, Leonardville, Kansas. Rural patronage.

IT ALL CAME TRUE: Ann Sheridan, Jeffrey Lynn, Humphrey Bogart, Zasu Pitts—This was a dandy. Pleased 95 per cent of the crowd and the people came out the second night to see it. Running time, 95 minutes. Played August 16-17.—John Stafford, Royal Theatre, Leonardville, Kansas. Rural patronage.

KING OF THE LUMBERJACKS: John Payne, Gloria Dickson, Stanley Fields—A good picture and story but the last scenes were cut from the "Valley of the Giants." Running time, 58 minutes. Played September 20-21.—Guy G. Black, Plaza Theatre, Lyons, Neb. General patronage.

MY LOVE CAME BACK: Olivia de Havilland, Jeffrey Lynn, Charles Winninger, Eddie Albert, Jane Wyman—They didn't go for this here but it is a very good feature. If your patrons like good music, then by all means sell this as an exceptional fine picture. If they don't care for music, then you will have the trouble I had. No money. Running time, 81 minutes.—A. E. Eliasen, Rialto Theatre, Paynesville, Minn. Rural and small town patronage.

NO TIME FOR COMEDY: James Stewart, Rosalind Russell—Good picture; fair business. The dialogue is too high hat for a small town. Also, there is not enough action for small town audiences. But, nevertheless, a fine picture. Running time, 93 minutes. Played September 29-30.—E. M. Freiburger, Paramount Theatre, Dewey, Okla. Small town patronage.

RIVER'S END: Dennis Morgan, George Tobias, Elizabeth Earl—Pleased action fans and they said so. Had fair draw only. Running time, 70 minutes.—A. E. Eliasen, Rialto Theatre, Paynesville, Minn. Rural and small town patronage.

VIRGINIA CITY: Errol Flynn, Miriam Hopkins, Randolp Scott, Humphrey Bogart, Alan Hale—This is a very wonderful picture but did not have the draw of "Dodge City." Perhaps, because Dodge City is in Kansas and was nearer home. Running time, 120 minutes. Played September 6-7.—John Stafford, Royal Theatre, Leonardville, Kansas. Rural patronage.

SOCIAL SEA LIONS: Pete Smith Specialties—Pete Smith's comments and the actions of a threesome of seals loose at a house party brought forth plenty of good laughs here. Count it as a comedy when booking it. Running time, 10 minutes.—W. Varick Nevins, III, Alfred Co-Op Theatre, Alfred, N. Y. Small college town and rural patronage.

WOMEN IN HIDING: Crime Doesn't Pay Series—Another fairly good one of this series. However, it was very much like Columbia's feature "Babies for Sale." Running time, 22 minutes.—Joe Schindele, Granite Theatre, Granite Falls, Minn. Small town patronage.

Paramount

MOMENTS OF CHARM OF 1940: Headliners—A honey of a picture but the film was rotten. Operator had to splice ten places before we could use it. Running time, 19 minutes.—John Stafford, Royal Theatre, Leonardville, Kansas. Rural patronage.

NEVER SOCK A BABY: Popeye the Sailor—An average Popeye. Don't seem to hit the spot like they did a year or two ago. Running time, eight minutes.—John Stafford, Royal Theatre, Leonardville, Kansas. Rural patronage.

PARAMOUNT NEWS: No. 7—National AAU diving meet, Walker new postmaster general, Baltimore cork factory fire, Roosevelt explains Conscription Bill, American rearming. A very interesting and instructive program. Running time, eight minutes.—William Noble, Criterion Theatre, Oklahoma City, Okla. General patronage.

PUTTIN' ON THE ACT: Popeye the Sailor—Popeye and Olive Oyl think vaudeville is coming back, so they rehearse some of their bag of tricks. RKO Radio ARROW POINTS: RKO Pathe Sportoscope—Andre Vail shows us how talented he is in archery by shooting many trick and remarkable shots. It is good of its kind.—W. Varick Nevins, III, Alfred Co-Op Theatre, Alfred, N. Y. Small college town and rural patronage.

BESTED BY A BEARD: Leon Errol Comedies—They still can't make comedies in sound.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

MARCH OF TIME NO. 1: On Foreign Newsfronts—This is a good presentation showing how the news is gathered from Europe at present. A fine summary of the War thus far is included. Play it soon to get the greatest benefit from it. Running time, 20 minutes.—W. Varick Nevins, III, Alfred Co-Op Theatre, Alfred, N. Y. Small college town and rural patronage.

MARCH OF TIME NO. 11: U. S. Navy—1940—The very best to bring the general public to realize

MARCH OF TIME NO. 12: Spoils of Conquest: Dutch East Indies—This is an exceptionally good reel on the situation at present in the Dutch East Indies with a good discussion on the possibilities of future action there. Running time, 18 minutes.—W. Varick Nevins, III, Alfred Co-Op Theatre, Alfred, N. Y. Small college town and rural patronage.

MARCH OF TIME NO. 12: Spoils of Conquest: Dutch East Indies—Another good one of this series depicting Japan's threat to the Dutch East Indies. Running time, 17 minutes.—Joe Schindele, Granite Theatre, Granite Falls, Minn. Small town patronage.

Twentieth Century-Fox

CLUB LIFE IN THE STONE AGE: Terry-Toons—Just an ordinary cartoon. Running time, 7 minutes.—E. M. Freiburger, Paramount Theatre, Dewey, Okla. Small town patronage.

DOG IN A MANSION: Terry-Toons—A good cartoon. Running time, eight minutes.—John Stafford, Royal Theatre, Leonardville, Kansas. Rural patronage.

EDGAR RUNS AGAIN: Terry-Toons—A good cartoon. Very amusing. Running time, eight minutes.—John Stafford, Royal Theatre, Leonardville, Kansas. Rural patronage.

ISLE OF MYSTERY: Father Hubbard's Alaskan Adventures—Just a filler. Running time, 10 minutes.—E. M. Freiburger, Paramount Theatre, Dewey, Okla. Small town patronage.

EGG COLLECTOR, THE: Merrie Melodies—A very, very cute color cartoon that will be especially enjoyed by adults in the audience. Like Disney cartoons, it depends a great deal on facial expressions for the humor. Running time, 8 minutes.—W. Varick Nevins, III, Alfred Co-Op Theatre, Alfred, N. Y. Small college town and rural patronage.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE

An international association of showmen meeting weekly in MOTION PICTURE HERALD for mutual aid and progress

A-MIKE VOGEL, Chairman and Editor GERTRUDE MERRIAM, Associate Editor

INSPIRATIONAL

If the Quigley Awards have made any lasting success—and of course they have—then an important reason must be they constitute a competition which allows each entrant to compete against himself.

In so saying, we do not lose sight of the many promotions, salary rises, and bonuses accruing to winners, a goodly percentage, incidentally, of the total entries. The Awards have as great a value, however, for those winners who have yet to be showered with any kind of gold.

Successful management requires a high consistency of week-after-week endeavor. The conscientious theatreman aims to keep way up on his toes at all times. To do so without undue strain, he must be able to call upon some inspiration from deep down inside him.

Such inspiration to many is to be had from the Awards, according to what the boys say about it to this corner. The general tenor of their opinions is that here is an entirely neutral background for showmanship against which the theatreman may measure his accomplishments.

Thus, a man who scores in one "Quarter-Master" establishes a mark to shoot at in the next. Outside judges have found his work of sufficient merit to be selected for honors. He digs in deeper to retain that standing, or better it, by a continuous personal competition that eventually must bring its own reward.

TO BE ENCOURAGED

Rodney Bush attended a recent managers' advertising conclave called by Harry Shaw, of Loew's Poli, in New Haven, and presided over by Oscar A. Doob, circuit ad head. Bush, Twentieth Century-Fox exploitation manager, was invited to suggest boxoffice aids on behalf of his company's "Down Argentine Way", spot-booked in the division's houses before national release date. According to Lou Brown, enthusiasm was rife and indicated in the minutes of the meeting, containing a raft of selling ideas developed by the conference.

The bringing together of distributor admen and theatremen for these purposes is something the industry can stand much more of. Surely, the home office boys "in" on a campaign from the time a picture is in production can be a power of aid to the grosses through such contacts. Living with the picture for weeks ahead of release, they are in a sound position to add strength to press book suggestions by these across-the-table discussions.

Bush is nice enough to say he got more out of the meeting than he gave. That may be so. The fact remains that his being on hand stimulated a lot of ticket-selling exploitation outpourings.

The traditional Hallowe'en celebration this October 31, becomes something more than just that. According to theatremen who realize it, the occasion is to be outstanding in "screwballery." Strong medicine is indicated to alleviate encroaching war jitters. Thus, managers who make it their business to satisfy the wide hunger for bellylaffs may expect to be thrice blessed at the boxoffice and in the esteem of their communities.

A TWO-DOLLAR CAMPAIGN

Without any budget for special exploitation, Manager Bud Borns, of the Capitol, Whiting, Indiana—a "B" house—recently played "Women In War" to capacity business. The campaign that made it possible was put on at a cost of two dollars and five cents.

The front was promoted from another house. Bakery bags stuffed with paper served as "sandbags" for added atmosphere. An old flat was cut down to make an "A" board covered with six-sheets. For passes, two girls in borrowed trench coats and steel helmets paraded the town with title cards, worked the lobby.

This department gets its share of doleful letters explaining how budgetary restrictions hobble the writers in putting over their shows. We also receive quite a few campaigns where explanations are confined to what has been accomplished with a handful of fingernails, a few dimes in cash and some old-fashioned sweat.

Special animated set-piece was rigged up in the lobby of Fabian's St. George, St. George, S. I., N. Y., by Art Lane for "Rhythm on the River". Cutout Crosby strummed guitar, while concealed phonograph played hit tunes.

Effective was the 7 foot standee of Edward G. Robinson planted in the lobby of the Suipacha Theatre, in Buenos Aires by the Warner publicity director, Elias Zagalsky in advance of the opening of "Brother Orchid" at that spot.

Believing that his theatre should do everything possible to promote patriotism, Manager Ralph G. Pollock at the Million Dollar Theatre, in Chicago, displays the National Screen Accessories' "God Bless America" banner atop his marquee. Size is 18 feet by 20.

Optimism is the watchword of the Chakeres Theatres managers who met recently at the Shawnee Hotel, in Springfield, Ohio. Meeting, which was presided over by Phil Chakeres, president, covered discussions on bookings, selling of the new movie season product and remodeling theatres.

Police and Health Bureaus Cooperate For 'Baby Parade'

With a special grandstand for the judges, cooperation of the Philadelphia police department and highway bureau in clearing and cleaning the route, the sixth annual Baby Parade recently conducted by Warners Benn, under the supervision of Manager Bob Kessler, repeated the success of previous occasion in gaining public and boxoffice attentions. Sufficient prizes offered in different divisions, encouraged a record-breaking number of entries, with three awards made in each class for prettiest, fattest, most comical babies, for nicest set of twins and best float.

Formation of the procession was arranged by Kessler in back of the theatre with the assistance of a group of high school girls acting as parade hostesses and distributing free gifts to mothers of the contestants. The entire line of mothers and babies then marched twice around the theatre block, passing the judges stand and the theatre. Newsreel cameras photographed the proceedings, picture shown at the Benn later.

Newspaper Coverage Stressed

Kessler's advance started a month ahead with stage announcements and trailer copy carrying date and instructions to mothers regarding entries. This was followed with lobby posters detailing arrangements and prizes, the posters embellished with photos of representative neighborhood babies. Newspaper copy was planted in the downtown columns and the occasion was featured regularly in advance by the three neighborhood weeklies. Heralds also stressed the event.

On a tieup with three leading dairies, drivers left special heralds with all milk deliveries. The better neighborhood stores were also promoted to cooperate by displaying the prizes and instruction posters. Distribution of imprinted eye-shades to children at advance Saturday kid matinees also aided in spreading the word.

In keeping with the importance of the event, Kessler was able to effect an arrangement with the Bureau of Public Health wherein all entrants were examined at the local station. The officials cooperated further with window and bulletin announcements.

As added attractors in addition to the main prizes, the Warnerman promoted such "baby" companies as Gerber and Nestle for samples distributed to attending parents. Local kiddie shops contributed cartoon books, the theatre also coming in with souvenir American flags.

Martin's Dictionary Gag

To publicize "I Married Adventure" at the Fox Granda in Inglewood, Cal. Dave Martin purchased a half dozen inexpensive dictionaries and imprinted copy in vivid red "words can't begin to describe," etc., on each sheet torn from the books and distributed them to outgoing patrons in advance of opening. Additional copy included playdates and Osa Johnson tieup. Assistant Russ Mortenson aided on the gag.

Ferrara Invites Prominent Women To Sponsor Dates on New Product

To the many different boxoffice purposes for which theatremen have promoted cooperation of local clubwomen, Manager M. E. Ferrara adds another twist in persuading the top socialites of Abbeville, La., to act as individual sponsors for dates on his October attractions. Including the wife of the Mayor, each of the women was asked to honor one program, the picture and name of sponsor coupled in the advertising and publicity.

The idea was good enough for front page treatment in the local dailies, the stories also stressing the high grade of the product so honored, which, of course, was the snapper behind the entire idea. There was plenty of buzzing as a result, and the Round Tabler gave the plant another nudge by inviting each sponsor to give a theatre party for four to "her" picture. In advance, the women were supplied with material about the pictures for discussion at club meetings, card parties, etc.

As a follow-up at the theatre to stress the October releases, Ferrara made up an elaborate setpiece in the form of a Christmas tree heaped underneath with simulated gift boxes imprinted with titles and dates. Copy at top was to the effect that since, by Presidential proclamation, Thanksgiving Day had been moved up, the theatre felt encouraged to do likewise with Christmas by advertising Santa Claus in advance. Tree was decorated in holiday lights and trimmings, with cartoon drawings of the President and Kris Kringle for atmosphere.

Local Committee Builds "Ramparts" for LaBarr

Francis LaBarr of the Imperial, Asheville, N. C., highlighted his campaign on "The Ramparts We Watch" by having the local committee for the Defense of America by Helping Britain sponsor the date. With an active membership of 2,300, consisting of town's most prominent citizens, cards were mailed urging them to boost the picture and buy tickets. Booths were set up in department stores and specially printed tickets sold. Every type of audience was reached.

Advertising campaign was extensive with teasers used effectively, opening date copy stressing the new ending, and many breaks were obtained via broadcasts. Direct mail played a part in the program, with letters sent to clubs, clergy, civic and educational leaders, the preview being attended by publishers and managers of local newspapers, heads of radio station and others. LaBarr constructed a special front for his house, using the Life one-sheets to good effect.

Burke Plays to Kids On "Boom Town" Date

To attract his kid patronage on "Boom Town" at the Schine State, in Fostoria, Ohio, Round Tabler Bill Burke ran a four-day coloring contest in newspaper whereby each day outlines of two large title letters were run, centers of which featured members of the cast. Starting off with the letters "B" and "O," succeeding days carried balance of letters until entire title was spelled out. Guest tickets went to those kids submitting best coloring jobs.

For "Great McGinty" a five day teaser contest was planted, paper running conversational balloon photos of members of cast, tickets going to entrants sending in smartest lines. Imprinted bags were promoted from cooperating merchant and special voting heralds were distributed, each carrying different scene stills from the picture.

Caldwell Ties "Correspondent" To Lobby News Broadcasts

Before leaving Loew's Valentine, in Toledo for his post at the Stillman, in Cleveland, Round Tabler Wally Caldwell on "Foreign Correspondent" planted a radio in his lobby broadcasting war news each hour on the hour. One sheet cards in front and over radio invited public to step in and listen. Opening day giant compo passes were handed out on downtown shopping corners to men and women who agreed to carry them to the theatre. Copy on cards read: "I am on my way to see," etc. Stunt attracted wide attention with plenty of willing toters anxious to be guests of Wally.

Through tieup with local automobile agency, new style cars toured all sections of the city appropriately bannered three days ahead, travelling billboard mounted on new truck also covered streets, bookmarks were distributed throughout library system, imprinted napkins planted with restaurants and gummed red and white disc stickers were attached to evening newspapers by downtown newsboys day ahead.

Guessing Contest Aids May on "Mule Team"

To arouse interest in "20 Mule Team" at the Paris, in Paris, Kentucky, Ed May, manager, secured a transparent piece of borax which was planted in a glassine case and patrons were invited to guess the weight of the display for promoted merchandise prizes and passes. At no cost to the theatre, May landed a serialization in local newspaper, merchants on main street devoted windows to appropriate displays, heralds were promoted from leading store and radio plugs were landed over WLAP.

For "Doctor Takes a Wife," May promoted a "just married" street bally, car and couple supplied by cooperating automobile agency. Machine was decorated with banners, streamers, tin cans and one sheet giving title, cast and playdates.

PLAN LAUGH PROGRAMS AS HALLOWE'EN NEARS

"Screwball" Stage Games and Spook Stuff To Be Stressed in Offsetting War Jitters

With the traditional October 31 holiday just a step away, theatremen everywhere are up to their elbows in Halloween plans. As usual, spook shows and stage games will be given the spotlight, but obviously more so this year on account of war conditions and the public's desire for "escape." Brushed up for current usage, too, will be the safe-and-sane projects to discourage local youth from damaging property, a special "honor party" or similar affair being given wherein the kids are guests at the theatre or allowed in for a special price in exchange for keeping the peace.

The "spook" angle takes different forms, in conjunction with feature pictures fitting the occasion or with special stage accessories to build up the holiday atmosphere. Last year, Harold Grott tied in a "horror" date with animations such as jagged lightning, flying bats, weeping willows moaning in the wind, black cat with raised tail and fur on end, etc. Les Pollock has made his annual show a standout with such devices as "dancing spooks," swaying to spooky organ music, dangling skeletons at end of a long pole swinging out over the audience.

Lobby Decoration in Keeping

Lobby decorations are in keeping, with black cat cutouts, goblins, witches on broomsticks, among the most popular. To be again emphasized is the avoidance of cornstalks and similar stuff found to be fire hazards. Pumpkins have been employed to advantage by Dave Dallas with an offer of prizes for largest pumpkins brought to the theatre. These were used for advance display to advertise the Halloween party.

Different times have been selected for the special show, in some situations beginning at eight o'clock, in others at the usual midnight. Paul Binstock switched his last year's celebration to the Saturday matinee ahead aimed at the youngsters under the heading of an old-fashioned picnic and costume party. Prizes and other gifts were promoted, each child attending receiving bag of cakes, books, etc. In addition, the major prizes went to those voted by audience applause for best costumes, judging held on stage. The regular contests followed. Show was heavily advertised in schools and playgrounds, via trailers and stage announcements, etc. Binstock acted as his own master-of-ceremonies.

Many Games Available

Since laughs are uppermost in this year's proceedings, highlights of contest slants expected to produce the chuckles are set down. These include many of the reliables as well as variations and added gags—with the accent upon "screwballery."

"Apple" ideas stress, first, the ducking party wherein stemless apples are placed in water in large washtub, contestants on knees facing audience, apples to be removed with teeth without aid of hands. This can also be done with small washtubs, one for each contestant. A variation is to have apples on strings held over contestants' heads, the first to bite apple tagged the winner. Another variation is to suspend a three-foot stick, with apple on one end and small weighted bag on the other. Stick is whirled and an attempt made to bite into the apple as it passes.

For balloons, entrants line up with balloons in mouth. Winner is the one first bursting balloon in blowing it up. And quite "screwy" is the stunt of having needle threaded by contestant while sitting on top of a milk or other wide-lipped bottle.

Play Football With Bubbles

Football is played by teams of two's, one of each team given a bubble pipe and bowl of soap suds to blow bubbles. As these are formed, the other team-mate endeavors to blow them over a goal post placed center stage and above heads of the contestants. First team to make a goal is declared winner.

Also suggested is the peanut game wherein piles of goobers on one side of stage, contestants supplied with ordinary table knives with which to carry the peanuts to opposite exit using the blade as carrier. Winner is the one transporting greatest number in space of three minutes.

For those who enjoy feats of gastronomy, four sticks, each containing one dozen doughnuts, are set up on two tables. Four good eaters, one to a stick, then compete for the honor of disposing quickest of the sinkers, plus a bottle of soda pop, within a time limit of five minutes.

Shoe Contest Amusing

Other contests to be mentioned are, pie-eating without aid of hands; milk drinking from nursing bottle via regulation nipples; cracker-eating, starting with unopened box to each contestant with winner the one who first opens box, consumes crackers and whistles "Turkey in the Straw." Also good for merriment is the shoe contest for two classes, boys and girls. Contestants line up, remove shoes which are placed in barrel and thoroughly mixed, then dumped on stage. Winner is first one finding and putting on and lacing one shoe or both of correct pair.

Autographed 'Tom Brown' Book Given to School by Kidwell

Individually autographed by all members of the cast, was the copy of "Tom Brown's Schooldays" presented with due ceremony to the Superintendent of Schools as a goodwill gesture of Ed Kidwell's for that picture's opening at the Schine Kent Theatre, in Kent, Ohio. Newspapers covered the presentation with stories and appropriate plugs for the theatreman and picture.

Additional publicity was landed by Ed on "Pride and Prejudice" when local columnist took a jovial poke at his teaser ad "We want a husband, five charming sisters," etc.

Cohn Ties Council To Date on 'Road'

The possibilities of "Girls of the Road" for civic tieins were recognized by Manager Artie Cohn, at Warners Roosevelt, Philadelphia, in securing cooperation of welfare and other social-minded organizations on his subsequent-run engagement on the picture. This was brought about, first, in a private screening for the heads of these important local associations, Cohn addressing the guests on the significance of the picture as well as its entertainment values. Written endorsements obtained as a result were used advantageously in the advertising.

Prominent in the campaign was the local Youth Council with representatives on hand to distribute organizational literature hooking in with the attraction and to urge attendance among the membership. Officials of the Council spread the word further at meetings, also calling attention to the day-and-date runs of the picture at the Nixon and 69th Street, other of the circuit's houses in the same district.

Since the feature ran 60 minutes, the Round Tabler emphasized the supporting shorts in a "whole show" buildup of five units through special two-color heralds showing a number of picture reels stacked above each other. Titles of the individual units were lettered on the sides. Reverse panel below read "Yes, it's all one show," other side of herald, referred to by arrow, carrying smash copy on the feature. Giant action lobby display of scenes from the picture and nine-foot lobby easel listing the program units aided in stopping "sidewalk traffic."

Newspaper Coverage Landed By DiPesa on "Boom Town"

Two different contests ran concurrently in leading Boston newspapers as part of the "Boom Town" campaign put over by Joe Di Pesa, Loew's publicity man, for the film's day-and-date State and Orpheum showings in that city. "How Would You Make Boston a Boom Town?" was the question asked of Traveler readers in a four-day contest which required replies in the form of letters not to exceed 100 words. The Daily Record carried a four-day identity contest requiring correct names of pictures and players involved in selected photos published in the paper. In both instances forty prizes were offered, with winners receiving cash and tickets.

Di Pesa also planted a Spencer Tracy-Claudette Colbert still in the rotogravure section of the Sunday Herald, and the same edition of the paper carried a large-sized co-op beauty ad.

RKO Newsette Contest

Readers who thought they would like to compete in a novelty drawing contest arranged for advance exploitation on "Lucky Partners" were invited so to do through the pages of the RKO Newsette. A series of numbers starting with one were outlined and when traced successfully formed the heads of the co-stars. The decision of the judges was based on correctness and neatness of the contestants, with guest tickets going to winners, according to Blanche Livingston, Newsette Editor.

Saunders Promotes 'Names' for Bows

Names make news, agrees Matt Saunders, in rounding up celebrities for appearances on his campaigns at Loew's Poli, Bridgeport, Conn. As his most recent guest, Matt had Dr. Levi Young, grand nephew of Brigham Young, and head of the Mormon Church in New England, as a buildup for the Twentieth Century-Fox attraction. And recently, Frazier Hunt, famous war correspondent, did the honors for the Loewman on "Foreign Correspondent."

Discovering that Dr. Young was en route to his home in Cambridge, Mass., Saunders induced the church head to stop off for a screening of the picture. The visit was applauded by the papers in photos and stories. Matt secured further publicity on the Mormon angle by inviting the heads of the local church and congregation to the show.

In keeping with current military activities, the Round Tabler established his opening night in honor of the local militia, the National Guardsmen marching to the theatre in full uniform, headed by their band. Special stage presentation featured the event in which the guardsmen and prominent stage stars participated.

Publicity on "Foreign Correspondent" stressed the cooperation of Frazier Hunt, who lives nearby. After seeing the picture, the famed war reporter, interviewed by the press, spoke highly of the feature as entertainment and also credited the attraction for calling attention to the need of strong American defense measures in keeping out of war. Here again, photos and feature-length stories resulted, all of which included sizeable plugs for the theatre and dates.

Girl in Window Exploits "Hired Wife" for Unterfort

Tying up the stenographer angle of the picture, Harry Unterfort at Keith's in Syracuse for date on "Hired Wife," planted girl in window of leading furniture store taking dictation gratis from anyone who wished to avail themselves of her services. Large sign in window plugged the picture, theatre, stars and playdates. Post Standard announced a telephone contest whereby 25 folks were called daily and asked what the picture was at Keith's. Those answering correctly were awarded guest tickets.

For novelty, paper plates were distributed with imprinted copy reading: "Don't wash your dishes. Use these paper plates so you can rush down to see," etc. Plugs were landed over Stations WSYR and WFBL, numerous windows were secured and department store used a co-operative ad tying up Kelvinator refrigerators with stills of Brian Aherne and Rosalind Russell.

Street's "Phoolish" Contest

A "phoolish photo" contest, with local newspaper readers asked to submit humorous snapshots from the old family album, was one of the highlights of the "I Love You Again" campaign put over by Eugene Street, Tennessee, Knoxville. Guest tickets were awarded the winning entries.

Limited to singers, over 750 aspirants were rounded up by Manager Bob Corbin and, after eliminations, the best were retained for the finals. Special platform constructed on mezzanine was used by the band and singers.

THE CHART

Productions are listed under distributors. Features in work or completed for release later than the date of this issue are listed as "Coming Attractions." Parenthesis after title denotes audience classification: (A) Adult, (G) General. Numerals following classification are production numbers. Dagger (†) indicates the 1940-41 season. Asterisk (*) after title denotes first appearance.

NOTE: The totals for running time are the official figures.

When a production is reviewed the running time is as given by the studio and this is denoted by an asterisk (*) preceding the number. When the home office has established the running time for national release, the studio figure is changed. Running times are subject to change according to local conditions. State or city censorship deletions or repairs to the film may cause variations.

CHAPLIN'S MESSAGE

MR. CHARLES CHAPLIN'S "The Great Dictator," is revealed as the most personal expression that the art of the motion picture has achieved. It has but one ideological antecedent, Mr. D. W. Griffith's "Intolerance" of a full quarter of a century ago.

There are many aspects in common between those two productions. Had Mr. Griffith had sound to give him voice for a curtain speech in "Intolerance," the patterns, for all of their wide divergences of external action, would have almost matched.

To the critic and scholar "The Great Dictator" will long be a manifestation of special and curious interest. To those familiar with the life story and screen career of Mr. Chaplin it will be discovered to be an allegorical diary of his evolving social consciousness. It is also rather an epitome of his picture work through the years since he began in 1913, with deep impress from the mad, mad technique of Keystone.

This amazing vehicle takes those evolutionary phases of the art of Chaplin for a series of comic, sardonic and dramatic stepping stones to project him at the climactic end clear out of the picture on to a rostrum of public address, with his personal message, evolved through many substantially recluse and meditative years, even though they have been years of Hollywood.

SUCCESS "IN THE STICKS"

THERE'S a cheering note of optimism in a report on success attained by nothing more remarkable than tending to the business, in a piece by Mr. George Schutz in the issue of Better Theatres accompanying this week's Herald. It is the tale of the rise and progress of the St. Cloud circuit, in the decidedly rural zone right out beyond the metropolitan rim of the New York area, ending with Jersey City and Newark. From there into the hills of Pennsylvania is a farmland area which has been made into a little motion picture entertainment dominion by Mr. Alvin Sloan, one time projectionist. He has a dozen theatres in nine villages. His selling points are good housekeeping and perfect projection and sound. He depends on pictures for drawing power and entertainment.

THE PERFECT POLL

HOLD on to your seat, we are about to arrive with the totals on the most amazing poll of all this poll season. Here is scientific, technologically controlled research by none other than E. I. DuPont de Nemours itself making findings for the motion picture positively without parallel in the history of either the poll industry or picture industry.

Mr. Paul W. Sampson, manager of the DuPont exhibit at the New York World's Fair, has just totaled the answers of eighteen thousand persons interrogated about what most important service science might next render toward the welfare of mankind. Twenty-five per cent bespoke miracle medicines, eighteen per cent were interested in clothes, ten per cent in food. Twelve smarties wisecracked their answers, every stupid one of them about old razor blades.

Not one in the eighteen thousand wanted anything done about airplanes, radio—or motion pictures.

IF HE REMEMBERS

OFT times these days a certain old man residing on his La Cuesta Encantada at San Simeon, the capital of his shrinking barony, rides out a-horse to a promontory and stands a spell looking at the broad Pacific.

He is that Mr. William Randolph Hearst, publisher extraordinary, erstwhile and occasional patron and producer of pictures, who for these thirty-odd years has proclaimed, mostly alone, "the yellow peril" and the menace of Japan.

Through most of these years Mr. Hearst's apprehensions for the Pacific have been either derided, or ignored. He has been credited with seeing little brown ghosts and with manufacturing the stuff of headlines for sheer journalistic excitement.

Once, in First World War days, Mr. Hearst caused to be made a serial picture, "Patria," in which there was war with the little brown men of Japan. There were no laws or rules to apply, but Mr. Woodrow Wilson, president of the United States, wrote a White House letter and then "Patria" was recalled and recut.

Today Americans are fleeing the Orient, sailing out of Japan to the capacity of American ships, leaving behind them in many instances home and fortunes, on the advice and instruction of a State Department at Washington, which it would seem has at long last discovered a "yellow peril."

So now, Mr. Hearst, with his life so full of years, can, if he will, enjoy many a grim smile in retrospect. And, incidentally, his whimsical, adventurous recollections can include, too, those merrily vigorous days when he had his own private war with what used to be France.

CONSIDERING KANSAS

IN the course of that interesting process by which the screen has been discovering America, as trouble has spread over the rest of the world, it has now got as far as Kansas, midway between the oceans. Biographically and dramatically we have had on the screen reminiscences of the James boys, from just across the river in Missouri, Mr. Quantrell, the raider, and the Daltons, who rode into history at Coffeyville. Also we've had the shoot-'em-up epic of "Dodge City".

Now that the picaresque matters have been covered, we come to a chapter of romantic respectability with a project announced by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer for the making of a screen biography of Mr. William Allen White, the editor who has brought world fame to himself and his little city of Emporia by "plain-boiled" Americanism expressed in his Gazette.

Mr. White, we can be very sure, never headed for the movies. They had to find him.

This Week in the News

Showdown on Duals

THE St. Louis public, acting through the Better Films Council of Greater St. Louis, one of the strongest organizations of its type in the country, has demanded a showdown from local exhibitors on double bills. All owners in the territory have been asked to state their policy on both doubles and triples.

The petition pointed out that the Council has been sympathetic to the many problems facing showmen but voiced its opposition to double bills, which the Council, from the beginning, has been in favor of discontinuing. "Long programs are a strain on children and young people, and many family programs are marred by the presentation of an adult film with one rated for the family," the report of the Council commented.

Each exhibitor has been asked to state whether he would join a movement to return to singles, whether he is going to continue double features and whether he intends showing triples.

Fred Wehrenberg, head of the St. Louis Motion Picture Theatre Owners organization, has led a movement opposing the triple feature program which is being used in one of the Fanchon and Marco-St. Louis Amusement Company houses.

In Chicago the Balaban and Katz Baltimore and Crystal theatres continue the policy of showing triple bills weekends. Jack Kirsch, president of Allied Theatres of Illinois, said he informed Balaban and Katz several months ago that if the circuit would discontinue triples in outlying theatres members of his Allied group in the same zone would follow suit.

'Artistic' Labor

THE Labor Department's wage-hour division has re-defined the terms "executive," "administrative" and "professional," as used in the U. S. Fair Labor Standards Act, the latter term in order "to allow the exemption of employees in the artistic professions, in the broad sense of the word," according to Philip B. Fleming, Wage-Hour Administrator, at Washington.

A professional worker is now an employee receiving $200 or more monthly, and engaged in work "predominantly original and creative in character, in a recognized field of artistic endeavor. . . ."

Mr. Fleming added that this definition, based upon a report by Harold Stein, assistant director of the hearings branch, "is meant to include certain employees who are writers, photographers, motion picture actors, musicians, painters and the like."

Mr. Stein conducted hearings at Washington during the Summer, at which representatives of the film and other industries submitted their viewpoints anent reclassification. The film industry representatives were concerned with the overtime provisions of the Wage-Hour Act.

Professional and administrative workers are exempt from the Act's overtime provisions.

The new definitions go into effect next Thursday.

'Living Newspapers'

PRESENTATION of a "living newspaper" based on headlines of the day in this day of headlines is the plan of A. J. Balaban, cofounder and former member of the Balaban & Katz Chicago theatre circuit family, for future stage shows on combination film-stage policies.

Mr. Balaban's idea is to open the production with a "traveltalk" type of film. Raising of a scrim curtain at the end of the picture will show actors dressed to correspond to the locale of the "traveltalk," skits for the act being a discussion of the paramount topic in that country. Incidental music in the background would be native to the country in the "headline."

Again, actors in the native costumes would perform native dances. Newsreels would also be used for the background.

Old Army Game

WITH interest in defense reaching a high point on Wednesday, "Draft Day," theatres in many parts of the country were arranging special promotions with the U. S. Army Recruiting Service.

The Army has offered the use of trucks for exploitation purposes to theatres showing recruiting shorts and, in several cases, arranged to swear in volunteers on the stage of the local theatre.

During the run of the Warner short, "Service With the Colors," at the Fox theatre in San Francisco an Army recruiting truck and staff were stationed at the entrance to the theatre. The Army theatre at nearby Presidio ran a trailer each night advertising the tieup.

The son of Nikitas Dipson, head of the Dipson circuit, and other recruits were sworn into the army on the stage of the circuit's theatre in Batavia, N. Y. In Buffalo and other cities similar ceremonies were arranged.

In New York and the surrounding Metropolitan sector where Wednesday's draft day brought a school holiday—the schools being used by the city's 1,107,000 registrants—theatres benefited by an approximate 20 per cent increase in business at matinee performances.

Viewpoint

DOWN through the years, this country's exhibitors have been trying to inject the "exhibitor viewpoint," first hand, into production. This week, it appeared that one major film company would allow exhibitors to actually participate, as a general policy.

Paramount's theatre partners, it was reported in New York, will be consulted at executive conferences on production, to be held at the studio.

Paramount theatre and film company executives Barney Balaban, Stanton Griffis, Neil Agnew, Leonard Goldenson, and Sam Dembow will comprise the conferees from the New York home office. Mr. Goldenson and Mr. Dembow, of the theatre department, are scheduled to meet with Paramount theatre partners in Chicago, in November, en route to the Coast.

Mexican Intrusion

TROUBLES of Mexican producers have been increased with the booking in Mexico of 34 Argentine features, 22 of which will be released there by the end of the year, with the others following early in 1941. Mexican producers see in this "intrusion" a further limiting of their bookings.

Argentine films are fast gaining in popularity in Mexico, and it appears now that Mexico is doomed to a deep low in picture production with the output expected to barely reach 30 features this year. This slump started from a lack of money and deficient technical and acting services.

The industry does expect a lift in 1941, banking heavily upon the assurance of proper government aid as given by President-elect General Manuel Avila Camacho, who is expected to assume office December 1.

Hollywood Newsreel

"THE first newsreel devoted exclusively to Hollywood happenings," is claimed by Erman Pessis, former press agent in that city. He is seeking national distribution, hopes to make 25 others this season.

The reels will be approximately 10 minutes long. The first covered Hollywood events for nine days, reels will be issued every two weeks. The first was photographed silently, and has a narration by Sam Hayes, Coast radio announcer. The coming reels will be in sound, Mr. Pessis said.

Among items in the first reel are activities in British war relief; Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., on American defense; Jack La Rue explaining his recent holdup; Luli Desti, only woman designer of automobiles, in Hollywood, and others.

Paramount to Warner

ENDING differences which threatened for a time to end in Paramount's selling away from Warners, a deal by which Paramount's 1940-41 product will play Warner theatres in Philadelphia and adjacent cities, was negotiated in New York, on Tuesday.

The contract was closed by Neil F. Agnew, Paramount vice-president and distribution head; J. J. Unger, Paramount eastern sales manager; Joseph Bernhard, Warner theatre head and Clayton Bond, film buyer for the circuit.

Negotiations had apparently reached an impasse in Philadelphia last week and the Paramount branch there began lining up key neighborhood houses among independents in Philadelphia, Camden, Wilmington and elsewhere. At this stage, the deal was reportedly referred to Barney Balaban, Paramount president, and to Harry M. Warner, after which came the resumption of negotiations in New York.

The World's Fairs

THE New York and San Francisco World's Fairs, both of some interest to theatre owners whose business in adjacent areas was influenced variously during the past two summers, have reached the end of their runs.

San Francisco's World's Fair, on Treasure Island, closed September 30th with a total paid attendance of 6,545,776 during the 127 days of 1940. Attendance, for the same number of days, was nearly one-third better than last year, when 10,500,000 persons saw the Fair during its 254 days.

In New York the World's Fair had a total of 16,589,984 paid admissions as of Tuesday night, and it was estimated that the figure would be over 18,000,000 when the Fair finishes on October 27th. Last year the New York Fair had a 26,384,000 attendance.

Theatre receipts in the San Francisco area have shown a marked increase in the two weeks since the 1940 exposition closed.

New York first run houses report that the Fair in the East helped theatre attendance this year. Last weekend, particularly, both the Fair and first run theatres did very good business.

U.A. Sales to Kelly

APPOINTMENT of Arthur W. Kelly as vice-president in charge of domestic distribution of United Artists, was announced in New York, Tuesday, by Murray Silverstone, chief of operations. Mr. Kelly was formerly vice president in charge of foreign distribution. Walter Gould, assistant to Mr. Kelly, will succeed him. Vice-presidents Harry L. Gold and L. J. Schlaifer, will continue as heretofore, under Mr. Kelly's direction, in charge of the East and West, respectively.

Mr. Silverstone said that there would be no change in the status of Harry D. Buckley, vice-president.

Filling of the vacant general sales post has been under consideration at UA for same time.

The new United Artists distribution chief has been associated with the company for 20 years, and has headed its foreign distribution for the past 14 years. Twice in the past, he has been chief of the UA distribution, both domestic and foreign.

'London Can Take It'

PREVIEW of "London Can Take It," a British Ministry of Information short subject that shows how Londoners are withstanding the air raids, was described in a copyrighted article in the New York Herald-Tribune, on Tuesday, by Whitelaw Reid writing from London.

In New York, it was said that Warners had acquired the subject for distribution in the United States, Canada and Latin America. Quentin Reynolds of Collier's, furnished the narrative.

Mr. Reid's dispatch said: "Although Reynolds provides the feeling of the drama inherent in the nightly raids, the pictures themselves are gems of understatement. . . ."

With American newspaper headlines featuring stories of the worst bombing London has suffered since the Battle of Britain began, the London office of Quigley Publishing Company cabled Wednesday that despite everything the provincial motion picture theatres were doing "immense" business.

After a conference with representatives of motion picture theatre owners the Home Security Minister announced Wednesday in London that regulations would be issued next week abolishing the curfew except in the defense areas. The Warner and Ritz theatres were still operating but the Odeon, Leicester Square and Empire theatres had closed. The Cinematograph Exhibitors' Association was forced to move its headquarters to Wardour street. Through the heroic work of Arthur Taylor, secretary of the London branch of the CEA, all the records were salvaged.

U.S. Eyes Imports

STRENGTHENING the bars against the entry of subversive and other undesirable pictures, the Treasury Department at Washington recently cautioned Collectors of the Port and other customs officials to watch closely all films offered for importation from foreign countries.

The Department's instructions were given in connection with a notice to the customs service of the lifting of the bar against the importation of fight films, as a result of the enactment of the Barbour bill last June.

While collectors were instructed to permit the entry of such pictures, they were ordered to require from the importers of all foreign films an affidavit "that the imported film contains no obscene or immoral matter, or any matter advocating or urging treason or insurrection against the United States, or forcible resistance to any law of the United States, or containing any threat to take the life of or inflict bodily harm upon any person in the United States."

CONSENT CONFEREES KEEP TALKING WHILE THEY WAIT FOR ELECTION

Adjournment to October 22nd Seen Step to Further Delay; Lawyers Discuss Arbitration; Allied Challenges Opponents

The formality of Judge Henry W. Goddard's postponement of the Government's anti-trust suit against the eight major motion picture companies in New York Tuesday for one week, to October 22nd, was accepted in Broadway film-legal quarters, and in the field, as further verification of the strong and wide expectation that there will be no court action on the proposed consent decree until after the election, November 5th.

During the week meetings were held by industry defense lawyers and members of the Department of Justice on the arbitration clause of the decree and the arbitration machinery, including rules and regulations.

Allied Challenges Opposition

Allied States Association of Motion Picture Exhibitors issued last weekend a statement calling upon opponents of the decree in general and Edward L. Kuykendall, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, and Harry Brandt, head of the Independent Theatre Owners, in particular, to express in precise terms the reasons for their opposition. Mr. Kuykendall answered that his views had been expressed in writing in more detail than had those of Abram F. Myers, chairman of the board and general counsel of Allied. Mr. Brandt said he would answer after studying the charges.

A number of regional exhibitor organizations throughout the country were making plans to oppose the blocks-of-five clause in the consent decree. No definite decision has been reached on what action should be taken. Direct appeals to Judge Goddard, as in the case of the one made by Pete J. Wood, secretary of the ITO of Ohio, would be referred to the Department of Justice, it was thought. Story of exhibitor organizations' activities is on page 41.

"Satisfactory Progress" Reported

On Tuesday J. Stephen Doyle, assistant U. S. attorney general, speaking for the Department of Justice, in his request for a one week postponement of the trial said that satisfactory progress was being made in preparing the consent decree but a few collateral matters still were under discussion.

Observers for exhibitors, including Jacob Schechter, attorney for Allied of New York, an MPTO affiliate, were present but asked no questions when Mr. Doyle addressed Judge Goddard.

It was reported that sections of the decree were submitted to Robert H. Jackson, attorney general, and Thurman W. Arnold, assistant attorney general, for study. Neither, however, will make any final decision in the matter until the document is presented complete and in its final form.

In addition to the arbitration problems attorneys continued work this week on the disposition to be made of Government anti-trust suits pending in the field and the Balaban and Katz and Fox West Coast consent decrees. It has been asserted that the two consent decrees should be dismissed so that there could be no conflict with provisions in the proposed New York decree. The five defendants agreeing to the decree also want dismissed all trust actions throughout the country which affect them.

A few changes suggested by the defendants a week ago Thursday at what was supposed to be the last meeting for receiving proposed alterations are being considered. James Hayes and Robert Wright, assistant attorneys general, discussed the new suggestions over last weekend in Washington with officials of the anti-trust division of the Department of Justice.

Wilby in New York

Robert Wilby of the Wilby-Kincey circuit and chairman of the Paramount theatre associates' committee observing the consent decree negotiations, and Fred Kent, attorney for the Sparks All Florida Circuit, were in New York last week for conferences but no decision was made because the decree was not in final form.

The Allied statement addressed to leaders of other exhibitor organizations said in part, "If they will state that it (opposition to the decree) is based wholly upon the five-picture plan, then all exhibitor groups and public groups will stand on common ground." Mr. Kuykendall and Mr. Brandt were asked about their position on clauses of the decree which are to curb chain buying power, prohibit forcing of shorts and newsreels, availability on some runs, arbitration of clearance disputes, limitation on the acquisition of theatres and the escape clause.

The exhibitor leaders and other groups to which the Allied statement was directed were asked if they wanted "to eliminate or revise the provisions against the oppressive use of buying power, or do they hope by muddying the water to prevent any relief against chain depredations.

"The proposed remedy for discrimination contains conditions and limitations that hamper its effectiveness. . . . The provision to limit the acquisition of theatres by the producer-distributors contains serious loopholes," the statement continued.

Mr. Myers this week sent out a call to members of the executive committee of Allied to meet in Pittsburgh October 21st, Monday, during the convention of Allied Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Western Pennsylvania, to determine what further steps shall be taken in opposing the five-picture provisions of the proposed consent decree.

Announcing the call, Mr. Myers explained that a number of the members of the board were expected to be in the city for the State meeting, because of the proposed testimonial dinner to M. A. Rosenberg, president, so that the conference would cause a minimum of travel to the board as a whole.

He said that while the consent decree might be perfected before the date of the conference, it was expected the Department of Justice would keep its promise that exhibitors would be given an opportunity to present their opposition, and would ask Judge Goddard not to rule on the decree immediately upon its submission but to delay action so that the views of the theatre owners might be presented.

WARNERS IN ARMY RADIO TIEUP

Warner Brothers will cooperate with the War Department Saturday on a national trans-oceanic radio program. It is reported that this will be the first tieup of this kind between a major motion picture studio and the government.

The Army broadcast will open in Washington, shift to Honolulu and then to the Hollywood where a 15 minute radio version of "Service With the Colors", preparedness short will be presented. Edward G. Robinson will be guest speaker. The program will be carried by the NBC Blue network.

New Trust Suit Is Filed Against Majors

The eight majors were again named in an anti-trust suit, last week, in Newark. The latest suit asks triple damages and attorneys' fees totalling $450,000 and is filed in that city's Federal Court by the Orange Theatre Corporation.

Named in addition to the majors, as defendants, are the Rayherstz Amusement Corporation, of 966 Broad Street, Newark, and Harry Brandt, of New York, its booking agent. The Orange Theatre Corporation operates the Treat Theatre, in Newark. It charges it is being forced from business by a conspiracy between the distributors and the Brandt circuit.

Columbia Asks Dismissal In Schine Trust Suit

Answering the Government's bill of particulars, in Buffalo Federal Court Monday, Columbia asked dismissal of the anti-trust suit against it, the Schine circuit, and other majors. In addition, the company entered general denials to Government allegations. Columbia is the last defendant to answer the Federal charges. It had won a separate bill of particulars.

Middlesex "Conspiracy" Suit On in Middletown

Hearings began last Tuesday in Middlesex County Superior Court, Middletown, Connecticut, on the $175,000 damage suits by the Middlesex Theatre, Inc., and the S. & S. Theatre Corporation, against Salvatore and Maria Adorno. New Haven branch managers, several exhibitors, and some bookers took the stand during the first several days, and the case was scheduled to resume on Tuesday. The hearing probably will last five weeks. The suits ask the damages mentioned, and an injunction to prohibit the Adornos from operating theatres in Middletown.

Delay Seen in LaCrosse Trust Case

Time required for taking of depositions in the East may delay beyond October 28th the scheduled trial of the LaCrosse Theatre Company's $1,050,000 conspiracy suit against the Welworth and Minnesota Amusement Company circuits, Twentieth Century-Fox, United Artists, and Paramount, in United States District Court, Madison, Wisconsin.

November 7th Admiral Philadelphia Hearing

David and Ruben Shapiro's anti-trust suit against the Warner Brothers circuit and the majors in Philadelphia will begin trial November 7th in that city's Federal Court.

The plaintiffs operate the Admiral, in that city. They ask triple damages of $225,000, charging their product supply was slashed when they attempted to reduce admissions so that they could compete with circuit theatres.

CHAPLIN LAUNCHES HIS 'DICTATOR'; SUBSEQUENT RUN TERMS FOR 'WIND'

"GWTW" General Release in January, with Admission Scales Down One-half but No Cut in Film's Length

Charlie Chaplin's first motion picture in nearly five years, "The Great Dictator," opened Tuesday evening at the Astor and Capitol theatres in New York. Other key city engagements are scheduled to begin later this month. [Reviewed on page 34.]

"The Great Dictator," like "Gone With the Wind" is being sold at terms of 70 and 30 percent with increased admissions. Production cost was estimated at $2,200,000.

Premiere Broadcast

For the second time in his life Mr. Chaplin spoke over the radio on Tuesday night over WHN, the Loew's, Inc., New York station, in connection with the premiere. Others on the program included Jack Oakie, Joan Crawford, Joan Bennett, Major Bowes and H. G. Wells. Mr. Chaplin's first radio appearance was in 1928.

The premiere of "The Great Dictator" at the Astor and Capitol theatres gave Broadway one of its biggest theatrical nights. Long before the opening hour the streets and sidewalks surrounding the two theatres were jammed. By 8:30 the area had a New Year's eve night appearance. When Chaplin and Paulette Goddard arrived, first at the Astor, the police lines broke and the stars were rescued by a flying wedge of patrolmen and mounted police.

At the Capitol the guests also had to virtually fight their way into the theatre. Ex-Governor Alfred E. Smith, like Mr. Chaplin at the Astor, was swept to his knees by the crowds. At 9:05, the police lines were again broken when Jack Oakie, co-star appeared.

Advance and subsequent press attention was considerable, accentuated by the international situation.

Before "The Great Dictator" opened the advance ticket sale at the Astor theatre rose to $45,000; $19,000 on Tuesday, alone. The theatre was sold out for two weeks by Tuesday afternoon, it was reported.

Warners Sign for Film

Warner theatres signed a contract last Friday for the exhibition of "The Great Dictator." Clayton E. Bond, circuit buyer, signed for Warners and Harry L. Gold, vice-president and Eastern general sales manager for United Artists.

On Monday the Fox West Coast theatres concluded a deal to play the Chaplin picture.

Other pending deals were discussed Tuesday at a home office conference of district managers, presided over by Mr. Gold and J. L. Schlaifer, vice-president and Western general sales manager.

"The Great Dictator" will open in Philadelphia on October 24th, next Thursday, at the Aldine theatre, United Artists house operated by the Warner theatre circuit. Prices will be advanced to $1.10 in the evenings and 75 cents in the afternoon. No seats will be reserved, however, and the showings will be continuous.

Also later this month the "Dictator" film will open in Buffalo.

In Chicago the picture is scheduled to play at the Apollo theatre on a reserved seat, two-a-day basis with prices of $1.65 and $1.10 and at the Roosevelt on a continuous run basis with admission charges of $1.10 evenings and 75 cents for matinees.

"Comedy, Not Propaganda"

Last Sunday Mr. Chaplin, after arriving in New York for his first visit in 10 years, held a press conference at the Waldorf-Astoria, saying that "The Great Dictator" was a comedy and not a propaganda film. He said nothing which had happened in the past two years, while the film was in production, had necessitated any change in the script, adding that "the picture deals in fundamentals—after all, insanity is insanity and brutality is brutality."

Production of "The Great Dictator" was shrouded in secrecy, Mr. Chaplin said, for the simple reason that he didn't want anyone to come out with his stuff before he did. "That's happened before," and with a grin "even in Hollywood." The secrecy had nothing to do with threats, he said, although a few crank letters have appeared, all from this country. Neither Italy or Germany has made diplomatic protest, so far, he added.

Mr. Chaplin said he never once was hesitant about releasing the picture and that there was no doubt in his mind about the propriety of presenting the film under current world conditions. "There is pathos and great comedy in all human suffering and tragedy. The secret lies in how you approach it. It must be done with discretion and good taste."

Asked about the picture's chances in the world market, Mr. Chaplin laughed and said: "What world market?" However he did seem concerned that some South American countries have already indicated that the film will be banned by them. "That," he said, "is very significant."

This is the first picture in which Mr. Chaplin talks and he was happily amazed, he said, when he found out that it wasn't so difficult after all. He had always been "terrified of a microphone." Another reason, he said, was that he had built his career on pantomime. In "The Great Dictator" he makes a climactic speech that lasts six minutes and "that is a long time."

Mr. Chaplin has two stories he is considering for future production, one of which is about White Russians in Shanghai, but he advised the newspapermen present not to look for them too soon. "Right now I'm interested in getting acquainted with New York all over again and after that, well we'll see. I'll never retire though."

The comedian spoke nostalgically about some of his old comedies: "Do you remember 'Shoulder Arms?' There's a sequence in 'The Great Dictator' very much like that. I saw 'The Gold Rush' recently and it gave me quite a laugh. I really think I'll revive it." Mr. Chaplin said that he never did care for those old comedies when he made them and it wasn't until about 10 years later that he could enjoy them. Another comedy he is thinking of reviving is "The Circus."

MGM Sets "Wind" Terms For Subsequent Runs

"Gone With the Wind," which this week concluded all its pre-release runs in the United States, will be generally released to subsequents early in January at admission prices of approximately one-half the stipulated pre-release 75 cents and $1.10 scale, and will be shown everywhere in its full length of three hours and 45 minutes, William F. Rodgers, MGM sales manager, said Monday.

Mr. Rodgers said, "We're not going to cut anything but the price," adding, "We plan to get behind the general release of 'Gone With the Wind' with advertising and publicity campaigns just as we would any other big picture coming out of road show engagements. "It's still brand new to the mass audience of theatre-goers and it will be exploited and handled accordingly." (MGM says 20,000,000 have seen 'Wind.').

Discussions are being held by MGM officials to determine the exact admission terms for the general release.

The length of the film would make it practically impossible to show "Wind" on a double bill.

"Gone With the Wind" concluded Sunday night its 44-week run at the Astor theatre in New York during which it was shown 602 times. Only "The Big Parade" remained at the theatre for a longer period.

At the Woods theatre in Chicago "Wind" has been running on a day-to-day basis but the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer home office expected that the engagement would be over by the end of the week. The Selznick-International picture will not be shown again until test runs late in the year for general release after January 1, 1941. Up to now the film has played 5,000 engagements, it was said.

The final week's engagement of "Wind" at the Astor theatre brought the biggest demand for tickets since the opening in December and attendance was absolute capacity at every performance, Lee Cameron, manager, reported. It was said that more people were turned away last Saturday and Sunday than for the opening days. MGM announced that the run of "Wind" at the Astor was terminated only because of previous contractual obligations for the house.

The New York policy will be set after the Music Hall makes its decision. The Korda picture, however, may be roadshown in other cities no matter what policy is adopted in New York.

Ready for "North West"

Cecil B. DeMille's North West Mounted Police" will have its first showing in the United States at the Chicago theatre on Thursday, October 24th. The world premiere will be held on Monday at the Capitol and Metropolitan theatres at Regina, Saskatchewan.

The two theatre opening was arranged in Regina after Larry Grayburn, manager of the Capitol, announced that the theatre was completely sold out for the premiere within a few hours after tickets went on sale. Madeleine Carroll, Preston Foster and Lynn Overman, of the cast, are scheduled to make personal appearances at both theatres. William H. Pine, associate producer, is also to attend the Canadian opening.

In Chicago the premiere celebration will begin Wednesday evening with a dinner sponsored by the State Street Council. The annual banquet of that association was moved up from November to be a part of the opening activities. Mr. DeMille is scheduled to be a guest of honor.

Among those invited to attend the "Senior Dinner" are Governor John Stelle of Illinois, Mayor Fiorello LaGuardia of New York, Mayor Edward J. Kelly of Chicago and Governor Lee O'Daniel of Texas. The Texas Rangers Mounted Band is also to be present.

On Thursday night, before the opening, WGN and Mutual will broadcast scenes from the picture with the stars portraying over the radio, the roles they enact on the screen.

Special advertising posters and signs will be placed in many locations, bearing the inscription, "Welcome Cecil B. DeMille and North West Mounted."

Arrangements for the opening are being handled by Karl Krueger, Paramount mid-west exploitation chief, and William Holander and Archie Herzoff of Balaban and Katz. Others assisting are Nate Platt, Walter Immerman, William Holden, Dave Wallenstein, Balaban and Katz and Allen Usher district manager and James Donohue branch manager for Paramount.

Paramount has announced that the following circuit executives have booked "North West Mounted Police" at increased admissions: Harold Fitzgerald, general manager of the Fox Wisconsin Amusement Enterprises; Fred Dolle, Louisville and Indianapolis; Ed Beatty, general manager, Butterfield Circuit; Jules Rubens, general manager of the Great States Circuit.

A special preview of the new DeMille film was held a week ago Wednesday at the Canadian Pavilion at the New York World's Fair. Stanton Griffis, chairman of the Paramount executive committee, and John W. Hicks, Jr., vice-president in charge of the foreign department, and some 40 foreign journalists were present.

FILMS LEAST POTENT INFLUENCE ON VOTERS' OPINION POLL SHOWS

Canvass Conducted by E. J. Wall Finds Radio Wields Greatest Power; Personal Appearances, Reading Outdistance Pictures

Motion picture appearances of Franklin D. Roosevelt and Wendell L. Willkie are having a "surprisingly" small influence in the political campaign, being the deciding factor in influencing less than 10 per cent of the voters, according to Edward J. Wall, director of the American Opinion Forecasts, an organization which uses the Ross Federal Service field force to conduct polls similar to those made by George Gallup's Institute of Public Opinion.

Radio Biggest Influence

The organization has announced its findings in answer to the question, "Which of the following influences you most in a presidential campaign—seeing and hearing the candidate in person, seeing him in the movies, reading about him in the newspapers and magazines or hearing him on the radio?" About 39 per cent said that the radio influenced them most; 35 per cent picked reading in newspapers and magazines; 17 per cent indicated that seeing the candidates in person convinced them and only eight and a half per cent said seeing the candidate in motion pictures influenced them most.

The American Opinion Forecasts' polls, including the one on the importance of motion pictures and other media as influences in the Presidential election, are carried in a number of newspapers,

Mr. Wall who was with Paramount from 1924 to 1937 and from then until the American Opinion Forecasts was formed last Spring was executive assistant to the president of Ross Federal, pointed out that the results relating to the influence of motion pictures obtained in the poll were especially interesting in the light of discussion on whether the screen should be used for propaganda purposes or not. The findings taken from "a cross section of public opinion from coast to coast" show that the American public is influenced very little, politically speaking, by present films, it was said.

A plan for testing audience reaction to films and reasons why the public does not attend the theatre more frequently is being prepared by Mr. Wall. He said that when completed it would be submitted to the principal companies.

The American Opinion Forecasts listed the following results of the poll to determine the most important medium for influencing voters in the presidential campaign:

	Per Cent Prefer Roosevelt	Per Cent Prefer Willkie	Per Cent Undecided
In Person	15.3	18.9	16.0
Movies	7.1	6.9	11.5
Reading	30.6	40.2	31.4
Radio	45.4	32.4	38.7
No Preference	1.6	1.6	2.4
	100.0	100.0	100.0

According to the poll 45 per cent of those preferring Mr. Roosevelt said they were influenced most by hearing the candidate on the radio and 30 percent picked reading about him in newspapers and magazines. Of those preferring Mr. Willkie 32 per cent indicated that the radio was the deciding medium in influencing them and 40 per cent chose reading. While about 7 per cent said that seeing the candidate in the movies influenced them most in selecting Mr. Roosevelt or Mr. Willkie, 11½ of those still undecided said that they would make their selection chiefly on the motion picture appearance of the men.

Regional, Wage Statistics

The breakdown of the figures by regions of the country showed that reading was the most important factor and motion picture appearance of the candidates the least in the North Central states. As might be expected motion pictures got their highest vote, nine per cent, in the Pacific states:

	Northeast (Percent)	South (Percent)	No. Central (Percent)
In Person	18.4	8.0	18.1
Movies	8.7	7.0	5.9
Reading	30.6	41.9	38.7
Radio	38.7	43.1	36.2
No Preference	3.6	—	1.1
	100.0	100.0	100.0

	Mountain & Plains (Percent)	Pacific (Percent)	Total (Percent)
In Person	19.9	19.2	16.8
Movies	8.8	9.0	7.5
Reading	24.8	27.9	34.6
Radio	45.7	43.2	39.5
No Preference	.8	.7	1.6
	100.0	100.0	100.0

Mr. Wall said the table arranged by income groups pointed out, "With increased income there is a tendency to more reading, or more inclination to study and be influenced by what is read." The radio is a less strong influence as the income level rises, according to the poll. The figures indicate that the radio is the strongest influence among those on relief and on farms.

	Relief (Percent)	Under $1250 (Percent)	$1250 $2500 (Percent)
In Person	18.1	18.2	17.8
Movies	7.8	9.4	7.1

Motion Picture appearances of the presidential candidates, principally in the newsreels, have an equal influence on men and women in the matter of guiding them in their choice. Women, according to the poll, are less inclined to read about the men and make their selection that way, and more apt to decide by the "radio appeal."

	MEN (Percent)	WOMEN (Percent)	TOTAL (Percent)
In Person	17.9	15.4	16.8

No Preference	1.8	1.5	1.6
	100.0	100.0	100.0

The general conclusion of Mr. Wall was that motion pictures were a less potent political influence, at least as regards American presidential candidates, than had been considered by some and that the radio has passed magazines and newspapers, long the only source, outside of personal appearances, as the chief means of influencing the public. Personal appearances also still seem to be very important, even with the growing power of radio, it was said.

FILM SELECTION FOR CHILDREN DISCUSSED

Parents were charged with the responsibility of selecting the pictures their children should see, and were admonished about attendance at the theatre by Mrs. Philip Kirchner, Cleveland Heights, fourth vice-president of the Ohio Congress of Parents and Teachers, speaking before the motion picture group at the association's 35th annual convention in Cincinnati last week.

Mrs. Kirchner also advised the various chapters in Ohio to contact their local theatre managers, particularly in the neighborhood houses, with a view of obtaining more suitable pictures for weekend showing to children.

The association protested against block booking and blind selling, and voiced approval of the Neely Bill, suggesting that every member write their representative in Washington, urging his support of the measure, and asking that every pressure be brought to bear to facilitate its early passage.

Launch Theatre Drive

"The Drive to Meet and Beat the Emergency" has been launched by Ted Schlanger, Warner's zone manager, in Philadelphia, with 105 theatre managers competing for a total of $4,000 cash prizes. Awards will be based upon the greatest gross increase at each competing theatre, with quarterly cash prices for the leading district. The contest will close August 31st, 1941.

Bowling Hits Box Office

Chicago exhibitors, apprehensive over box office inroads made by bowling as a result of last year's experience, see a further threat in the 17,526 prizes, totaling $50,000, offered to the nation's bowlers by the Brunswick, Balke, Collender Company. However, this isn't restraining local film men from bowling. B. & K. Warners and Essaness are represented in the bowling league.

Belmont Theatre Leased

The French Films Import Company, Inc., has leased the Belmont Theatre, New York City, from Sherman S. Krellberg. The agreement is effective upon completion of the run of "Here Is Ireland" at the house. The lessee is distributing "Heritage," and plans to release "Gold in the Mountains" and "Le Schpounts."

Press and Seadler, Fly to Sea and See

by A-MIKE VOGEL

Airways Editor

The shortest distance between two points was totally ignored by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Tuesday when a party of New York trade and newspaper men and other adventurous guests were conveyed to a special showing of the two-reel "Eyes of the Navy" at Floyd Bennett Field, hard by the subway.

According to the oldest inhabitant, one may proceed directly if monotonously, to "Floyd" by the usual I.R.T., bus or taxi. But not for the MGM sea dogs. Whipped to fervent enthusiasm by Admiral Silas Seadler, the hardy tars laid out a route over which Columbus would have wrung his hands in despair.

By Sea and Air

It was exciting. The first leg of the journey from the New York Battery was made via Coast Guard cutter to an undisclosed rendevous way out in the Bay. The cutter pointed at Ellis Island. Then at the Statue of Liberty. Then at the Jersey shore. Then back to Ellis. Gentle waves slapped the boat. Gentle spray slapped the voyageurs, especially Times Square 'Admiral' Silas (MGM) Seadler and Vice-Admiral Herb Morgan, his aide de camp.

When hope rain low, the glad cry of "Sail" was heard. All crowded to the rail, then moaned at the sight—a tiny amphibian plane restlessly rocking at anchor "loo'ard" (left) of Ellis. Admiral Seadler took a sight. He called sharp commands. The cutter drifted toward the open hatch (door) of the plane. It drifted bow ahead (the front). Grappling irons were hastily thrown. One by one, the gay passengers dove through the hole. Sometimes a leg was caught. Sometimes a hat knocked off by a pontoon.

No sooner up, than down. "Floyd" ahead. A bump. Seadler wondered aloud if the pilot, absent-minded, had forgotten the undercarriage. The plane came to a halt. Guests were piped over the side. Lieut. Commander D. F. Smith, ranking officer, extended greetings. Everyone gulped.

First-aid amenities, then mess call was bugled. All in the party under 36, shuddered slightly. After lunch in the best Navy tradition, the picture made with the cooperation of the U. S. Navy was screened. The subject was naval aviation training. Introduced after the showing were Winthrop Rockefeller, chairman of the board, Air Youth of America; J. Bracken Kirkland, associate director, Boys Clubs of America, Dean Thorndyke Saville, of New York University engineering department.

Commander Smith acknowledged his appreciation. He also announced storm signals. Suggested the guests return to the city via waiting autos. They did.

Form Field Press Staff For Columbia's "Arizona"

Columbia's "Flying Press Squadron" boarded airplanes of the TWA, United Eastern, and American airlines on Tuesday, for the country's important key cities to exploit the picture in those situations.

Lou Smith, head of the company's studio publicity department, and Mike Newman, are in charge of the western exploiteers. Jack Thoma heads those in the Middle West; Ed Rosenbaum, those in the Southwest; Mark Freeland, those in Eastern cities.

CREDITS' SLICING DRAWS APPROVAL

The Capital Times, Madison, Wis., daily newspaper, this week addressed one of its weekly open letters to Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, as follows:

"Dear Sirs: Some years ago we remarked in these columns that we didn't think it was necessary for the film companies to give credit in the introductory parts of their picture to everyone in the studio connected with the film. We ventured at the time that the inclusion of all names generally delayed the start of the picture so long that the patrons' minds had wandered to other things than those concerning the attractions while the first several hundred feet of film listed all the Jones and Smiths therein associated.

"Therefore, we greet with relief your reported decision to curtail the long list of credits from the start of your pictures and to get right to work with what the cast of actors has been gathered for and which the customers came to see."

Scully, vice president and general sales manager. Mr. Kreisler succeeds Leo Abrams, resigned, who had been connected with the company since 1917.

He started with the company as a salesman in Boston. The post of circuit contact is a newly-created one.

Two sessions will be given over to sound, one to sound recording, one to disc recording, two to laboratory subjects, one to television, and four to general subjects.

Other activities are planned, including a visit to the studios of Twentieth Century-Fox Tuesday. The convention will conclude Friday evening with the television session.

Kunzman, registration and information; N. Levinson, banquet and dance; G. A. Chambers, hotel and transportation; H. Griffin, convention projection, and Julius Haber, publicity.

Charninsky at Safety Meet

The part that motion picture theaters and the motion picture industry are playing in the prevention of accidents was praised at the National Safety Congress in Chicago, Monday.

Special attention was given this phase of accident prevention at a group session of the Public Education and Safety Organization section of the Congress.

The Interstate Circuit of Texas sent Louis Charninsky, manager of three of its theaters, to the Congress, as evidence of its interest in the subject.

Cantor Circuit in Pool

The Cantor circuit has joined the Indianapolis Cooperative Theatres, Inc., for combined bookings and other cooperation. All of its theatres are in neighborhoods.

DELAWARE LEADS THE WAY FOR A REVISION OF ARCHAIC 'BLUE LAWS'

Attorney General Collects Data Showing Only Nine States Are Without Restrictions; Others May Seek Changes in Statutes

by GEORGE L. PATZER
in Wilmington

The archaic Sunday blue laws which have become a point of contention on the statute books of many states appear headed for revision in several legislatures following Delaware in a movement to amend the ancient statutes to meet modern conditions.

A survey, conducted by Attorney-General James R. Morford of Delaware into legislation of other states in "an attempt to secure amendatory legislation which will remove the archaic features of this law and yet at the same time preserve proper respect for the Sabbath," has brought requests from several of the attorneys-general of other states for copies of the Delaware recommendations.

39 States Answer

Communications have been received from 39 of the 47 states to which Mr. Morford wrote concerning Sabbath statutes and enforcement. Although eight states are yet to be heard from to complete the list the information gathered to date gives some concrete evidence of the need of revising and amending the archaic laws now in force. Of the 39 states, approximately 18 still carry the outmoded statutes, which in some instances date back more than a century, on their books. One state — Virginia — finds that the law "seems to work reasonably well." Another dozen states in the grip of the blue laws find some relief in amendments giving local option on Sabbath sports and amusements while only about nine are free to do as they see fit on the Sabbath.

While some of the communications are not clear as to what restrictions are in force, indications are that South Dakota, West Virginia, Mississippi, Florida, Tennessee, Indiana, Iowa, Arkansas, Georgia, Kansas, North Carolina, South Carolina, Oklahoma, Utah, Virginia, Colorado, Michigan, and Missouri have strict blue laws; that in addition to Delaware the states of Alabama, Texas, Maine, North Dakota, Vermont, Minnesota, Maryland, Connecticut, New Hampshire, Pennsylvania, Kentucky, and New York have found some leeway through amendments calling for local option to sports or Sunday movies, or both, and that Oregon, New Mexico, Idaho, Nevada, Illinois, Wyoming, New Jersey, Wisconsin, and Montana are without drastic Sunday restrictions.

The offices of the attorneys-general of most of the states admit the statutes are archaic and that some change should be made. Several have pointed out that these ancient statutes are unenforcible and that law enforcement agencies are inclined to wink at them.

Attorney General Leo F. Tenney of South Dakota will go before the next session of the South Dakota Legislature to seek modernization of the blue laws which, he wrote, are most drastic. South Dakota prohibits Sunday "comedy, opera, ballet, farce, Negro minstrelsy, and moving pictures" and has one of the most drastic gambling and lottery laws in the country.

Maryland is also considering a revision of the gambling and Sunday blue laws according to Attorney General William C. Walsh, but as yet no recommendations have been presented.

In Maine where there have been few changes in the blue laws except to amend the statutes in 1939 to permit Sunday movies between 3 and 11 p.m., under local option, Attorney General Franz U. Burkett wrote: "A great many of our blue laws are unenforcible and should be changed to meet modern conditions."

Criticizing the Sunday blue laws of Florida as "outmoded and very ancient," Lawrence A. Truett, assistant to the attorney general, declared, "The Legislature has never seen fit to modify, repeal, or change any of them."

Tennessee Laws Unenforced

Referring to the blue laws of Tennessee which prohibit most things on the Sabbath, Nat Tipton, assistant attorney general told Mr. Morford, "These sections of the code are habitually violated but no effort has been made for some years past, so far as I know, to enforce them."

In Indiana where blue laws also hold sway, the failure of enforcement is also cited along with recommendations for repeal.

In Mississippi where the statutes are close to a century old, J. A. Lauderdale, assistant attorney general, told Mr. Morford: "Our statutory laws in reference to these matters (Sunday observance and gambling) are about the same as they have been for the last 75 or 100 years. They have not been revised or rewritten."

Advocating changes in the Iowa law, Jens Grothe, assistant attorney general, wrote Mr. Morford: "I heartily agree with you that these (blue laws) should be amended to conform to modern usages and customs." Iowa still has the Sunday blue law, he pointed out, and an unsuccessful attempt to repeal it was made several years ago. He said the law was "frequently violated."

Pointing to the Arkansas statutes as "hard to enforce," Jack Holt, attorney general, declared, "We have no modern acts relaxing these archaic laws."

From Kansas, James S. Parker, Attorney General, emphasized: "Our statutes upon those subjects are possibly as antiquated as those of the state of Delaware even though they have not been in existence as many years. We are unable to point or give you any statutes from this state upon those subjects which we could call modern."

Frank R. Kenison, assistant to the attorney general of New Hampshire, also points to the laxity in enforcement of the blue laws of that state. New Hampshire, however, has a local option clause which permits Sunday sports after 1 p.m., and amusements after 6 p.m.

Other States Report

In North Carolina where only works of necessity and charity are permitted on the Sabbath, Attorney General Harry McMullan informed the Delaware attorney-general, "Our Sunday blue laws are as antiquated as yours appear to be from statements appearing in your letter."

The statutes of Oklahoma have been in effect since statehood and were adopted from the Dakota statutes, Houston E. Hill, assistant attorney general wrote Mr. Morford. Only works of necessity and charity are permitted.

"Many of our laws are obsolete with regard to occupations which may be carried on on the Sabbath," wrote W. Owen Keller, assistant attorney general of Kentucky. Only works of necessity and charity are permitted. "Of course the statute is a dead letter as far as enforcement is concerned," he declared.

Attorney General Gray Washburn of Nevada informed the Delaware attorney general, "Our legislators have left our people free to govern their own conduct as their consciences dictated."

The statutes of New Jersey, according to Attorney General David T. Wilentz were enacted April 12, 1933 and allow sports, entertainment on Sunday the same as any other day of the week. A municipality, however, may adopt ordinances to control and regulate the conduct of sports and amusements on the Sabbath.

Most Amusements Permitted

In Pennsylvania, deputy attorney general H. J. Woodward pointed out that the state had an act similar to the blue laws which was substantially re-enacted June 24, 1939 and now permits Sunday movies and sports under local option.

Wyoming does not have a Sunday blue law according to deputy attorney general Harold I. Bacheller, but does have a statute prohibiting boxing and sparring exhibitions on the Sabbath.

"An attempt was made at different sessions of our Legislature to repeal our Sunday observance law . . . but it was decided that a repeal would be impossible," wrote attorney general Lawrence C. Jones of Vermont regarding that state's statutes which gives local option to amusements and sports. Amusements are permitted under local option after 6 p.m. and sports after 2 p.m. Bank

WAR PICTURES' BAN INCREASES GROSS

One of the biggest week's gross the Palace, Chicago, has enjoyed since it dropped vaudeville is credited to Tom Gorman, RKO Theatres district manager, who inserted advertisements in the papers stating that "Positively No Bombing or War Pictures" would be shown at the Palace and that the program was "An All-Laugh Show". Absence of depressing war films is reported to have acted as box-office stimulant.

Blue Law Revision Studied by States

night is defined as a lottery and is prohibited.

Oregon is free of blue laws wrote attorney general I. J. Van Winkle, as the Sabbath laws were repealed many years ago.

Alabama, according to Prime F. Osborn, assistant attorney general, prohibits baseball, football, tennis or golf in public places but a section of the statutes has been negatived in all cities and towns over 15,000. There are provisions enabling such cities and towns to prohibit by passage of ordinance.

Texas Laws Amended

The Texas blue laws which prohibited Sunday amusements were amended in 1931, according to W. C. Carson, of the Department of the attorney general, and the statute no longer applies to movies in theatres operated in any incorporated city or town after 1 p.m. The town or city authorities have the power, however, by proper ordinance to prohibit Sunday amusements.

A statute enacted in New Mexico in 1931 makes it lawful to operate movies, filling stations "and all works or enterprises of necessity on said day," attorney general Filo M. Sedillo wrote Mr. Morford. "No municipality or the governing body thereof shall enact or enforce any ordinance in conflict with the provisions of this section," he said.

Georgia's statutes date back to 1865-66 according to attorney general Ellis Arnall and prohibit works on the Sabbath other than those of necessity and charity.

Regarding Sunday movies in Connecticut, selectmen, the mayor, aldermen, or common council of any city or town may by vote authorize movies on the Sabbath between 2 and 11 p.m., attorney general Francis A. Pallotti told Mr. Morford. Connecticut also has a Sunday sports referendum.

Idaho Statutes Repealed

The North Dakota statutes have been amended to allow baseball, and sports and amusements on the Sabbath according to attorney general Alvin C. Strutz.

West Virginia blue laws are similar to Delaware, Eston B. Stephenson, special assistant to the attorney general, declared. The statutes prohibit laboring in any trade or calling, etc., upon the Sabbath and has very few exceptions, he emphasized.

The Idaho statutes, which were enacted in 1907 and required the closing of business houses and prohibited horse racing were repealed by the 1939 Legislature by a large extent, R. W. Beckwith, assistant to the attorney general, wrote.

Minnesota Bans Amusements

Minnesota statutes were obsolete and unforced until 1929, according to M. Tedd Evans, assistant attorney general wrote, when the legislature made amendments permitting Sunday sports between 1 and 6 p.m. Sunday amusements, however, are banned.

Utah's revised statutes of 1933 prohibit businesses from opening on the Sabbath except hotels, restaurants, filling stations, drug stores, and garages, attorney general Joseph Chez, declares.

Wisconsin's blue laws have been repealed, attorney general John E. Martin wrote Mr. Morford.

Illinois has no blue laws comparable to the Delaware statutes. "A man can do most anything on Sunday in this state that he can do on any other day so long as he does not disturb the peace of some family or religious gathering," wrote attorney general John E. Cassidy.

"This state like yours has some rather stringent laws on the subject of the Sabbath," Wendell P. Brown, assistant attorney general of New York State, informed the Delaware attorney general, however, some exceptions have been grafted into the statutes relating to Sunday movies and sports on the Sabbath. They are permitted after 2 o'clock in the afternoon, Mr. Brown pointed out, if not prohibited by local ordinance.

South Carolina has not enacted laws modernizing the laws "similar to those you label blue laws," according to attorney general John M. Daniel.

Colorado's blue laws are similar to those of Delaware. They date back to statehood, attorney general Byron G. Rogers declares, and permit only works of necessity and charity.

Michigan's statutes permit only works of necessity and charity and are comparable to Delaware's antiquated laws. "I cannot point to any recent reform of such law by legislation," attorney general Thomas Read wrote Mr. Morford.

Missouri's statutes are similar, permitting only works of necessity and charity and date back to 1821, writes Russell C. Stone, assistant attorney general.

In Montana only barbering is affected by the statutes. "The statutes of this state do not contain provisions prohibiting performance of worldly employment on Sunday except barbers," attorney general Harrison T. Freebourn said.

From the communications from other states already received and the few remaining states which are yet to come, Mr. Morford is hopeful that some solution will be forthcoming to aid him in preparing his recommendations for the legislative commission named by the last session of the Delaware Legislature in Dover to make a thorough study of the statutes.

The blue laws agitation in Delaware got under way last summer after Charles S. Horn, owner-manager of the Blue Hen Theatre at Rehoboth Beach, was fined three times on charges of Sabbath breaking. Mr. Horn's attorney immediately charged that the theatreman was being singled out among the wholesale violations of the statutes.

DESPITE the display line, "Childbirth", the title of the picture, as may be discovered by examination, is "The Fight for Life", which is the administration's picture in behalf of socialized medicine. This advertisement has appeared in New York papers. It is to be considered that various women's clubs and sundry social organizations have been militant, especially in Chicago, of late, about getting this picture onto the picture theatre screen, and this in face of the insistence by the exhibitor that it is "not recommended" for persons under 16 years of age.

There has been, incidentally, wide but partial quotation of a letter from Morris Fishbein of the Journal of the American Medical Association, concerning this picture. In his letter Mr. Fishbein, previously unquoted, remarked:

"I doubt if such a picture should be shown to young children, or even girls of high school age. . . . There is one important criticism: it is the universal glumness and sadness of practically every pregnant woman shown. . . . Presumably they were told not to smile. . . . I have worked a good deal in such places and find that . . . most of these women are gossiping with those around them and, in many instances, indulging in humor. . . . "

RURAL AMERICA AGAINST DUALS, AND FILMS ON 'ISMS', CRIME, VIOLENCE

Country Editors Record Community Attitudes on Films; Quality Rather Than Quantity in Features Seen Wanted

Rural America, speaking through its country editors, shows a need for a better insight into the motion picture as an art industry, eschews films of crime and violence, finds "isms" and other propaganda pictures unacceptable, opposes duals believing quality is more important than quantity, admits the lack of box office support for better films by local groups, and believes motion pictures have contributed to the business, social and educational welfare of the community.

These observations were reflected by some 1,100 country newspaper editors throughout the United States. The country editors themselves, however, reported a generally friendly attitude toward the screen.

Block Booking Hit

Continuing, the editors believe that relaxation of block booking would reduce the double feature, which 72 per cent of them consider an evil, and would raise the standard of films. Although they feel that Hollywood has raised the production standard to a considerable degree over what it has been, there are still too many crime and propaganda pictures.

These and more other illuminating opinions and impressions of rural America pertaining to the industry and its products develop from a survey conducted by Edward C. Woodyard, who for years represented some 2,000-odd country newspapers through his Woodyard Associates, Inc. Last month, Edward Douglas (Ted) Woodyard merged with his biggest competitor in the field, the American Press Association.

Seeking to interest the motion picture industry as an important national advertiser, in the media of the country newspaper, Mr. Woodyard approached the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America with the idea of conducting a survey of the rural press to determine the interest of rural America in things cinematic. The Hays organization furnished the questions for this survey, which was conducted some months ago, but the results of which are only now available for general consumption.

Mr. Woodyard surveyed his 2,000 rural papers, received replies from 1,109.

The survey pointed out that the typical country editor, who lives in a county seat of some 2,500 population and knows local conditions at first hand, is familiar with the local exhibitor, but that is about all he knows of the motion picture business. Usually, there are one or two theatres in the county seat and possibly two or three others scattered throughout the county.

Virtually all of these theatres advertise in the local newspapers, confining their space to program listing, with little or no art display. The publicity which accompanies the paid space, however, irritates the country editor, with its extravagant claims and ballyhoo, the survey says.

The rural editor apparently does not know, according to the inquiry, what part of the receipts taken in by the local theatre remains in the town, the chances being about 50-50 he believes that most of it goes to Hollywood and to the high-priced directors and stars, which is not the case.

He attends the local movie theatre frequently and feels that it has contributed to the business, social, and educational welfare of the community and to a lesser degree, to its health and religious life. His favorites among films are historical dramas of America, stories with good plots and human interest about average Americans.

Living in a quiet and peaceful region, he eschews movies of crime and violence. At peace with his neighbors, he does not entertain racial or "ism" or "anti-ism," ideas, therefore he finds propaganda films unacceptable.

Quality vs. Quantity

Since he enjoys quality in motion pictures, and wants his home town to have only the best, the country editor vehemently opposes double features, which he believes brings many inferior films to the screen. He and his neighbors believe that quality is more important than quantity, especially when the latter detracts from quality.

He views with horror the crime depicted in so many films, even the westerns, although they are the delight of many youngsters, including his own.

The rural editor, the survey continues, decries the lack of box office support for better films on the part of local women's clubs, Ladies Aid Societies, Legion and Parent-Teachers' Associations.

He feels that the industry could aid small town audiences and exhibitors by booking better pictures into their theatres, by relaxing block-booking rules and by increasing advertising appropriations for the better pictures. The report states in closing:

"He feels fairly friendly towards the motion picture industry—but he doesn't know enough about it to help either improve it or to help it grow in his own community."

In answer to the question, "Has the motion picture industry contributed to the welfare of your community?" the editors replied as follows:

865 (78 per cent) said the industry had contributed to the business welfare.

772 (72 per cent) said the industry had contributed to the social welfare.

828 (75 per cent) said the industry had contributed to education.

Twenty-five per cent said that the industry had contributed to the religions' welfare and 32 per cent to health.

Replying to the question, "Are the theatres in your community profitable enterprises?" 91½ per cent said they were.

The question, "Do you favor double feature programs?" elicited the response that 72 per cent opposed them, and only 15½ per cent favored them.

"Good Bye, Mr. Chips," and "Union Pacific," outranked all others in answer to the question: "Which films seen within the last year or two did you particularly like?" The first 10 in this category follow:

Rank	Picture	For	Against
1	Goodbye, Mr. Chips	161	12
2	Union Pacific	133	6
3	Hardy Series	83	2
4	Jesse James	80	14
5	Dodge City	78	3
6	Stanley and Livingstone	77	2
7	Juarez	73	15
8	You Can't Take It With You	72	—
9	Young Mr. Lincoln	72	2
10	Dark Victory	68	13

The editors listed crime, western and propoganda pictures among their pet aversions.

In answer to the query: "Does your local theatre at any time during the week have programs especially designed for all members of the family?" 527 or 55 per cent replied that they had, while 428 or 45 per cent replied in the negative.

"The Wizard of Oz," The Hardy Family series, "Snow White" and the Shirley Temple pictures were listed in reply to the question: "Which recent films do you think especially suitable for children 10 to 16 years old?" The ten most popular pictures in this category were:

Rank	Picture	For	Against
1	Wizard of Oz	312	34
2	Hardy Family Series	232	2
3	Snow White	165	3
4	Shirley Temple Pictures	106	—
5	Jones Family	51	—
6	Susannah of the Mounties	51	1
7	Boys Town	45	—
8	Little Princess	41	1
9	Young Mr. Lincoln	36	—
10	Tarzan Finds a Son	34	1

Among types of pictures most objectionable for children 10 to 16 years of age were gangster, crime, prison and sex and propaganda films, etc.

Some 820 or 74 per cent reported that pictures had shown a substantial improvement in quality in recent years; 131 or 12 per cent, opined that pictures had not improved.

To the question, "As a newspaperman, speaking generally, what is your opinion of the motion picture industry?" of the 794 comments on pictures submitted, 531, or 67 per cent, were preponderously favorable, while 263, or 33 per cent, were considered unfavorable. Of the 315 comments on the trend of pictures, 127 or 40 per cent were favorable and 189 or 60 per cent were considered "critical," rather than unfavorable.

A typical comment of one of the rural editors about the industry follows:

"I am sure that the industry is as essential to American life today as the automobile, electric refrigerator and other modern conveniences that have practically become necessities. In the pictures themselves, you can see the effort of the leaders to show the American way of life as well as give their public higher-class entertainment from historical, moral and social standpoints. The public is getting just what it demands in movie entertainment."

Brown Quits FCC; Ends Tobey Feud

Ending of the one-man campaign against the Federal Communications Commission being waged by Senator Charles W. Tobey (Rep., N.H.), was anticipated on Tuesday, as the result of the resignation of Thad H. Brown, as nominee for reappointment to that body.

Action Forestalled

Specifically, Mr. Brown's retirement from the Commission is seen as effectively forestalling any action on Senator Tobey's resolution for the investigation of broadcasting, at least, at this session of Congress.

Appointed general counsel of the old Federal Radio Commission in 1929, and named as member of the superseding Federal Communications Commission in 1932, Mr. Brown's renomination by President Roosevelt on June 5, last, was made the basis of a demand for a thorough inquiry by Senator Tobey, into the broadcasting industry.

The proposed investigation would have covered not only the nominee's activities as a member of the Commission but incidents in his private life, the alleged RCA monopoly consent decree and the CBS-Paramount deal.

With Mr. Tobey avowedly prepared to oppose the renomination on the floor of the Senate and, at the same time, to demand a full investigation of the entire broadcasting situation, the committe pigeonholed Mr. Brown's appointment. This created a stalemate until Mr. Brown's resignation.

BRITISH PREPARE FOR LEGISLATIVE CHANGES IN CONTROL OF INDUSTRY

New Taxes, Admissions Went Into Effect This Month; American Companies Face New Quota Year, Exchange Pact Revisions

by AUBREY FLANAGAN
in London

By coincident legislative circumstance the month of October this year becomes for the British film industry something near to vital. During its thirty-one days the industry will be called upon to adjust itself more briskly than usual to wartime circumstances and legislation.

With October came operation of the new theatre tax and the establishment and working of Britain's new admission rates. A new exhibitors' quota year begins, and the second half of the distributors' quota year, certainly the most difficult in their history, likewise opens. By October 31st a new exchange agreement must be achieved between the American companies here and the Treasury and Board of Trade on the British side.

Upon such details and developments as these the future of the wartime industry, to a great extent, hinges.

Export Agreement Expires

The present agreement under which the Americans here have been allowed to remit $17,500,000 of their British revenue to America expires on October 31st. Preliminary sparrings have taken place between the American Ambassador, Joseph P. Kennedy, on the one hand, and the Treasury and the Board of Trade on the other; the first blows having been administered the respective principals have retired to their corners ready for the second round.

No responsible reporter would anticipate what is in the minds of the Government or the Embassy, and all forecasts must of necessity be near to guesswork, even if that guesswork be enlightened. The situation since the last agreement has developed rather than changed and it would be surprising if more drastic restrictions were placed upon the American traders here than was done with the original agreement. The legislatures of both countries have come closer together and the war situation in general has undoubtedly brought about a process and not only a spirit of practical cooperation.

Whilst no such matters would be mentioned by either side the fact that American industry and the American Government carry valuable trump cards in their hands in the way of armament production will not improbably colour the situation.

It would not surprise the keener students of the situation if this time, instead of being allowed to remit $17,500,000 the figure was reduced to $12,500,000, nor would it be surprising if a concession were granted under which Americans here were allowed to purchase British pictures for sterling and transmit in dollars to New York.

Recent activities of the Americans in the production of better grade British films suggest that this latter process need not be an unprofitable one. The situation however has complications. American distributors are not likely to be eager to sponsor and distribute British films which would take away revenue from their Hollywood productions. A solution might lie in the transfer of an appropriate percentage of production in the companies' general programme to this side of the Atlantic. Against this there are grave difficulties facing would-be producers.

British production cannot be said at the moment to be in a flourishing condition, thanks to the air war and the general worsening of war conditions. The Americans already are finding the utmost difficulty in obtaining stars and first-class technicians on this side without having to bring them over from America. The increasing Government-commandeering of studio space for storage and war production is another factor which has stood in the way of their developing those more ambitious production plans which until the blitzkrieg they had seriously in mind.

Already Americans here have approached the Board of Trade with the concrete suggestion that companies which are unable to fulfil their quota obligations because of war conditions such as those outlined should be exempted from their individual obligations. It is no longer economic, they contend, to market higher grade pictures in Britain. It is no longer practicable always to produce them.

Only Four Quota Films

Examination of the quota figures for the past six months, the first half of the renters' quota year, reveals that the Americans have, whilst importing one hundred foreign features, been able to make only four British features. These have for the most part been of the multiple quota variety.

On the other hand, an examination of the films registered during the first six months produce an interesting statistical study. Only 33 British features have been made in this country in that time and 139 British shorts. In the same months last year 43 British features were registered and only 87 British shorts.

This year 197 foreign features were registered and 197 foreign shorts. Last year only 152 foreign features were registered and 270 fereign shorts.

The corollary would appear to be that an increasing number of independent productions have been put out in this country, the programme of Republic, for instance, has been considerable. The considerable increase in British shorts is probably attributable to the increase in sponsored and semi-sponsored pictures blessed by the Ministry of Information.

Meanwhile the exhibitors' quota year has begun on October 1, with the picture theatre operator compelled to devote 17½ per cent of his screen time to British quota footage. The shorts figure is 15 per cent.

The trade situation generally has suffered some deterioration. It is estimated that the whole country would show a drop in attendance of 25 per cent at least over last year. On the other hand, the entertainment tax figures for the month of August 1940, show an increase of 25 per cent over August last year. The figure would appear to be surprising if it were not noted that August 1939 immediately preceded the War and was one of the worst Augusts on record. The aerial blitzkrieg did not of course start until September.

The London area alone, which has probably been the worst sufferer from air raids, having been subjected to the most intense and sustained bombardment in history, produces figures which are not healthy. In the immediately London area, that is the area governed by the London County Council, some 60 cinemas out of 300 have had to close, some temporarily, some for the duration. In the greater London area, which extends in some parts to the Coast, 210 out of an approximate 1,500 houses have gone dark.

Better in Certain Areas

Yet in certain districts in Britain trade is better than it has ever been and queues are the order of the day and night for the most ordinary programme pictures. Reception areas and remote country districts unaffected by bombing are in general the most fortunate. In some districts visited by Hitler's bombers, but where wages have gone up and industry is booming, trade conditions have left the exhibitors contented.

On October 7 the new theatre tax came into force and the new admission scales devised by British exhibitors began to operate. So complex and so varied is the pattern that a comprehensive and accurate tracery is impracticable.

Despite the lead given by the circuits, but not surprising to those who know the variegation of the trade pattern, a 9 pence minimum has not been achieved for all first-run houses. In many districts, of course, it has been established, but in other districts minimums can be found as low as 4 pence.

In many districts independents and circuits have agreed upon the circuit scale. In some areas a percentage of increase all round has been decided upon. In one place the increase is 1d. per seat. In others the 6d. seat has gone to 9d., and the 9d. seat to 1/0d. The varying conditions which obtain throughout Britain today, the mobility of the film going population, and the varying prosperities of various areas, is, of course, the reason behind this lack of united policy.

Asks Bank Plan Revival

Indefinite postponement of the plan for a British Credit Bank might lead the industry into the same plight in which it found itself at the close of the last war, the second annual report of the Film Council declares.

The report, made public by the Board of Trade, says the council resolved recently to pursue the matter with the object of devising in advance "in collaboration with the Board of Trade a complete scheme whereby the British industry will become credit-worthy," to be launched at the right moment.

20th-Fox Decentralized

The Twentieth Century-Fox British organization has been decentralized to minimize the risk of serious interruption from the Nazi blitzkrieg, according to Francis L. Harley, managing director.

Production, publicity and London sales have been retained here under Mr. Harley. Sales headquarters in Manchester are under the supervision of Sutton Dawes. A secondary sales office is in Birmingham, and the secretary and administrative records have gone to Pinckney Manor, near Rugby.

Branches are operating as individual businesses, maintaining their own print stocks.

TEDDINGTON STUDIOS FIRED BY BOMBS

Seven incendiary bombs struck the Warner British studios at Teddington during an air raid last week. Studio employees and fire fighters brought the flames under control before serious damage resulted. Production was uninterrupted, it was reported.

Now before the cameras in the studio is "An Empire Is Built," costarring John Gielgud and Diana Wynyard, with Thorold Dickinson directing.

The Great Dictator

(United Artists-Chaplin)

Charles Chaplin Returns

There can be no question in any showman's mind as to the exploitability per se of a film which returns Charles Spencer Chaplin to his public after five years off screen and brings him back talking.

"The Great Dictator" does these things and many more.

It presents Chaplin, the Comedian, during its first quarter-hour, in a world war setting as he was seen and loved in "Shoulder Arms," and it presents Chaplin out of character, at its close, addressing the world with all the passion and eloquence at his command on the condition of humanity at this time and how to improve it. This sequence is stark propaganda, starkly in contrast with what has preceded it.

In the 95 minutes separating these antipodes, the picture offers comedy and tragedy, satire and melodrama, slapstick and sentiment in alternation and with star, writer and director—all Chaplin—rotating their claims upon interest in production that compares in kind to no predecessor from the Chaplin studio or elsewhere.

Showmen who promise their customers that they will see the Chaplin they have known and adolized are secure in that pledge, for it is as this Chaplin that he engages his audience for the first 15 minutes.

Showmen who elect to emphasize "Chaplin talks" as keynote of their campaigns are supported by his use of both King's English and extemporized jargon burlesquing Adolf Hitler's exhortations from the throne in a sequence which had the Hollywood preview audience in stitches.

Showmen who choose to base their bid for attendance upon the fact that the comedian conceived and produced the picture in a belief that satire is a more lethal weapon against dictators than denunciation may proceed with knowledge that the Chaplin talent has been exercised to the limits of its resourcefulness in that conviction.

The story concerns a Jewish barber, victim of amnesia following injury in World War I, who remembers his identity shortly before his country is to invade a neighbor and attempts to resume practice of his craft in a society he does not know has changed. Storm troopers harass and abuse him, but a government official whose life he has saved provides protection until he himself is confined in a concentration camp. Escaping, the official enlists the barber and his friends in a plot to blow up the palace, but this fails and both are sent to prison. Escaping again, they are fleeing the country when the barber is mistaken for the dictator he resembles—who in consequence is imprisoned as the barber—and hailed as victorious in the invasion just effected. Brought to a microphone to proclaim his arms triumphant, the barber becomes Mr. Chaplin, who pleads instead for a new order predicated upon humanity to man, peace for all and gentleness to replace brutality.

Chaplin divides his talent and time without partiality between his portrayals of the barber and the dictator. Shaving a customer to accompaniment of a Brahms rhapsody, the swallowing of coins come upon in a pudding and a skylight escape from pursuers are highlights of the barber characterization in point of laughs induced. The delivery of a broadcast in Hitlerish gibberish, the meeting of his Mussolini-like rival in a trainshed and his attempts to dominate him thereafter are highlights of the dictator impersonation.

Jack Oakie, playing the Mussolini-like dictator, creates uproar in the portion of the picture in which he participates. Paulette Goddard as a girl of the ghetto supplies a name for the distaff side of the marquee.

In many moments of the production, Chaplin is the renowned artist—adroit, penetrating and unique in his devices. In these he is the Chaplin of old, Keystone with a polish. One gains an impression that many of the best moments of "The Great Dictator" would be better if the editing had been sharper.

The picture ends abruptly, both because there is no conclusion to what has gone before and, also, because Mr. Chaplin, himself, in a personality, his own, indeed, but a stranger to the public, elects to utter a serious argument on world conditions.

Previewed at the Carthay Circle Theatre, Hollywood, to a press audience early on the scene and openly unanimous in expectation of a great picture, though professionally a shade doubtful that any film could be made to live up to the anticipations bred for this one by advance publicity anent its theme, purpose and circumstances of production. For the first quarter-hour the auditorium resounded with the round laughter of solid enjoyment. As the picture progressed the laughs came less steadily and were somewhat spotty, rising to peaks denoting personal triumphs for the star, to applause on several occasions, tapering off into sounds of restlessness in mid-picture. Discussion of the production following the preview was pro and con, but heated and taking many directions, presaging a plenitude of word-of-mouth publicity for the picture when the public sees and starts talking about it.—WILLIAM R. WEAVER.

The Thief of Bagdad

(United Artists-Korda)

Technicolor Fantasy

Said Alexander Korda of this picture in a recent interview, "What Disney has accomplished with cartoons we have tried to do with living players. . . . We carried one thought uppermost in mind: let the imagination run riot."

Said most of those who saw the film at Hollywood's Carthay Circle theatre on an afternoon in Indian Summer, "Korda made good his promise."

Mr. Korda's picture is fantasy in fact and without reservation, an exercising of imagination in the manner and direction of the Arabian Nights with the arts and sciences of the cinema ransacked for ways and means of creating effects beyond the norm. In its employment of the Technicolor process the production surpasses any released to date, including those from the Disney plant to which Mr. Korda professes indebtedness. In its uses of double exposure it dares and succeeds beyond frontiers established by predecessors and considered ultimate. Sound is made to contribute both ornamentation and realism to incidents and situations extracted from fancy without regard for credibility. Exteriors and interiors are on a scale matching the scope granted the writers of the tale.

The story told in all this splendor is of the adventures of a thief of Bagdad in the interests of his sovereign, a monarch dethroned and blinded by an usurper. Involved in the story are such things as the magic carpet and the flying horse of Oriental fable, the all-seeing eye, the genie imprisoned in a flask for 2,000 years and released by the thief to participate in his works, a magician who changes the thief into a dog and back again, summons the wind to whip up a storm at sea. Technology utilized in presentation of these and other materializations of the fantastic is of a quality which the preview audience found frequently to be incentive for handclapping.

Two years in production, the film embodies cooperation of Zoltan Korda and William Cameron Menzies as associate producers, three directors and two associate directors, Vincent Korda as designer, Miles Malleson as screenplaywright and Miklos Rozsa as source of songs and score. George Perinal as chief photographer, Natalie Kalmus officiating for Technicolor, accounted for results which startle and please the eye.

Conrad Veidt as the usurper, Sabu as the thief, John Justin as the king, June Duprez as the princess and Rex Ingram as the genie are principals in a cast numbering hundreds.

Previewed at the Carthay Circle theatre, Hollywood, to a capacity audience composed of press and profession. Applause frequently testified to appreciation of technological achievements, color effects and highlights of action, attention unflagging throughout indicating approval of the whole.—W. R. W.

Arise, My Love

(Paramount)

Contemporary Comedy-Drama

Take two capable and ingratiating handlers of comedy lines and situations, Claudette Colbert and Ray Milland, add romantic complications and play both against the backdrop of contemporary European scene and you have the ingredients of "Arise, My Love." The result is an entertainment which is both gay and moving.

Mitchell Leisen's expert direction, aided by the ministrations of several deft performers, extract countless laughs from the script and skim blandly over the surface of the European imbroglio and present-day world conditions, without becoming bogged down in them. Miss Colbert's fetching costumes will doubtless evoke admiration and gasps of approval from the feminine contingent.

"Arise, my Love," tells the story of an American girl reporter in Europe, Claudette Colbert, ever on the alert for a scoop, who would stop at nothing short of murder, so to speak, to get one. Unknown to Ray Milland, also an American, a member of the Spanish Republican air force, and who is languishing in a Franco execution cell on a charge of treason, she poses as his wife, intercedes with the authorities and succeeds in saving his life, all for the sake of a good story.

Otherwise the film is concerned with their efforts to reach Paris, amid the welter of the oncoming European conflict. Then Mr. Milland follows the girl reporter to Berlin as the Polish invasion is launched.

The film is handled in such bright and breezy manner with a view to developing all of the gaiety inherent in a boy-meets-girl narrative, however, that the gathering European clouds form only an echo. The dialogue is sprightly and the film moves along at a steady pace to its crisis. It is regrettably recorded that a few suggestive lines and situations have been allowed to creep into the production.

In this, Miss Colbert and Mr. Milland are rescued from the "Athenia," when it is torpedoed by a submarine, while en route to America. Mr. Milland is pressed into service as a pilot of one of the rescue seaplanes, after he returns to a haven on shore. On this note of self-sacrifice and service the film ends.

The audience at the Paramount Theatre enjoyed the film immensely, judging by the number and volume of laughs which greeted a number of scenes and the reaction to the allusions of contemporary scenes and personalties.

Musical Annual

This edition of Republic's annual offers with partiality to none and opportunity for all a cast of personalities whose names on a marquee are the kind that notify customers without question as to what they'll be found engaged in on the screen. There is a balance of power between these names, duplicated in the apportionment of emphasis upon their wearers, which gives the film a roundedness achieved in few musicals. Direction by John H. Auer is of a quality to make the most of this set of circumstances.

Principals in charge of the singing are Kenny Baker and Frances Langford, supplying songs singly, together, and backed by Six Hits and a Miss plus chorus. Numbers by Jule Styne and Walter Bullock for their use are of the sort the title of the picture suggests, such oldies as "Dinah," "Mary Lou," etc., being interpolated in part.

Ann Miller accounts for dance routines that click like her taps.

Heading the division in charge of comedy is Hugh Herbert, with Patsy Kelly, Franklin Pangborn, Sterling Holloway, Phil Silvers and Mary Boland also provoking laughs.

Borrah Minevitch and company perform twice.

Produced by Sol C. Siegel, the screen play by Bradford Ropes, F. Hugh Herbert and Maurice Leo pertains to a radio station caught up with by television and the endeavors by which its management contrives to stay in business and prosper.

Previewed at Warners' Hollywood theatre to an audience which manifested approval to the extent of staying on to the finish in spite of an earthquake which rocked the auditorium a bit some ten minutes before the finale.—W. R. W.

World in Flames

1929–1940 Documentary

"A Picture for Free People" is the subtitle given to this compilation by Paramount News of newsreel highlights of the past decade which is to be released this month by Paramount and that is what the film essentially is.

"The World In Flames" portrays, for Americans, history from 1929-40. There is no propaganda, bias or prejudice and the only message, and that in the closing minutes of the picture, is one which is endorsed by every American—preparedness for defense.

"World In Flames," on account of the nature of the events depicted, is no happy story. War, refugees, death and destruction are in almost every foot of the hour long film. Beginning at the time of the 1929 crash the picture shows outstanding newsreel records right up to the "Battle of Britain." The first years are covered swiftly and most emphasis is given to World War II.

Many of the scenes will be remembered but the subjects are of such importance that they are worth seeing over and over again. The editing and unifying commentary have made the film impressive.

The story told by the actual newsreel shots made as the events were happening is mainly one of aggression. It begins with the Japanese advance in Manchuria, marked by the protest of the United States alone. The next important happening is the Italian adventure in Ethiopia. Trouble in Spain is an undercurrent. Foreign intervention on behalf of both sides in that struggle is indicated: help to Franco from Italy and Germany and aid to the other party from Stalin. Also shown is the undeclared war in China where the death and misery is sometimes forgotten since our attention turned to Europe after September 1, 1939.

In the years 1939 and part of 1940 the War in Europe is given the principal attention. Notable among these scenes, fresh in the memory of theatre-goers, are those of Arthur Menken in Norway, the retreat from Dunkirk and shots made by the Germans in Poland and used in their war of terror propaganda films.

In "World In Flames" Paramount, without any fanfare or advance publicity, has assembled a documentary film that is an outstanding example of the type. It is all fact, with no "produced" interludes. It is serious—very serious—entertainment. Many Americans will want to see this newsreel history of the past decade and with the help and cooperation of local officials, schools and patriotic organizations the appearance of this film can be a special event at the theatre. Care in theatre programming is needed.

Seen at a New York projection room where the reenactment of important events of the past ten years seemed to deeply impress a score of reviewers.—MARTIN QUIGLEY, JR.

Released by Paramount. Produced by Albert J. Richard. Written and documented by William C. Park. Voices by Gregory Abbott, Gilbert Martyn and Tom Chalmers. Released October 25, 1940. P.C.A. No. 02955. Running time, 60 minutes. General audience classification.

A Little Bit of Heaven

(Universal)

Comedy, with Songs

Joe Pasternak, the wizard of Universal City, scores another touchdown with Universal's "A Little Bit of Heaven," a sequel to "The Under-Pup," in which little Gloria Jean made her film debut. The picture has the warmth, the humanness and the entertainment qualities that have marked Pasternak's other contributions to the Universal programs. Gloria Jean again enacts the role of a little girl with a voice, who lives in a tenement section of a large city.

The story centers about the girl becoming a

Supporting the youngster are Hugh Herbert, C. Aubrey Smith, Nan Grey, Billy Gilbert, Butch and Buddy, Nana Bryant, Frank Jenks, who appeared in "The Under-Pup," and Robert Stack, Stuart Erwin, Eugene Pallette, and Tommy Bond. Another item for exploitation-wise showmen is the fact that among the cast, and appearing only in "bits," are such old-time stars as Charles Ray, Noah Beery, Sr., Maurice Costello, Monte Blue, Pat O'Malley, Kenneth Harlan, William Desmond and Fred Kelsey.

Daniel Taradash, Gertrude Purcell and Harold Goldman adapted the original story by the late Grover Jones and supplied with competence a vehicle for the singing-acting talents of the young star who sings five numbers.

The Ape

(Monogram)

Horror Story

Monogram's "The Ape" is a horror story on the pseudo-scientific side, its plot dealing with a country doctor, disguised as ape, slaying two men and attempting to kill a third in order to obtain their spinal fluids to cure a young girl of paralysis. It is adapted from the Broadway play of same title written by Adam Hull Shirk and produced some time ago with success.

Boris Karloff plays the medico whose desire to cure a young girl who befriended him leads him to murder and his own death at the hands of a posse. The role of the girl is enacted with freshness by Maris Wrixon. Others in cast are Gertrude Hoffmann, Henry Hall, Gene O'Donnell, Jack Kennedy, Dorothy Vaughan, Jessie Arnold, Selmer Jackson, George Cleveland.

William Nigh's direction and Richard Carroll's and Kurt Siodmak's screen play stress the eerie qualities of the story. William Lackey was Scott R. Dunlap's associate producer.

Moon Over Burma

(Paramount)

Adventure Romance

Dorothy Lamour, dressed more conservatively than is Paramount's wont when casting her in a jungle picture, and minus her wealth of hair, appears here with Robert Preston and Preston Foster in a story occurring in the teakwood forests of Burma.

Singing in a native cafe, Miss Lamour is brought back to the teakwood plantation by Preston and Foster managed by the former. Her presence there changes him from a shiftless young man with a propensity for alcohol, as he falls in love with her. But she has meanwhile done the same, with Foster, and he with her, although it takes his former fiancee, portrayed by Doris Nolan, to make them realize it.

Albert Basserman is seen as the nominal head of the plantation, blind as a result of a cobra bite. The plantation is in the center of property owned by a banker who does his best to prevent logs from being cut and shipped, an effort involving a fire and a log jam among other action elements.

A. M. Bostford produced and Louis King directed the Frank Wead, W. P. Lipscomb and Harry Clork screen play, based on a story by Wilson Collison. Frank Loesser wrote the lyrics for the two songs sung by Miss Lamour and written, respectively, by Frederick Hollander and Harry Revel.

The Open Road

(Robert Mintz)

Imported Melodrama

Based on the play and opera "Le Chemineau" by Jean Richepin of the Academie Francaise, which was popular with French audiences at the turn of the century, "The Open Road" is a film eulogy of peasant life in the France of more peaceful days.

Victor Francen, already familiar to the American audiences of foreign films for his many starring roles in other imported pictures, in this portrays the vagabond whose romantic inclinations and responsibilities are only surpassed by his love of freedom and the open road. In supporting roles Tenia Fedor as "Toinette" the peasant girl seduced by the wanderer, and Georges Colin as the unwanted suitor whose love for "Toinette" is stronger than his reproach for her foolish mistake and who nobly marries her to save her reputation.

Directed by Fernand Rivers, who also produced, the Gallic touches of simplicity and clarity have been incorporated while the musical and photogenic background add ear and eye appeal to the story. English sub-titles of the dialogue and song are ample throughout.

Triple Justice

(RKO Radio)

Western Melodrama

The latest of the George O'Brien series of Western melodramas for RKO contains all the basic elements of entertaining outdoor action pictures. Produced by Bert Gilroy under the directorial guidance of David Howard the theme of retribution and the successful crusade of a justice-seeking cowboy are incorporated.

When "Brad Henderson" (George O'Brien), as a Wyoming cowboy, is invited to attend the wedding of a sheriff-friend in Arizona, he becomes involved in a bank robbery and murder. To prove his innocence and protect his friend's position he sets out, single-handed, to capture the bandits. Many adventures ensue for all until the bandits are caught through the clever detective work of "Brad."

In supporting roles are Virginia Vale, romantic interest as the sister of one of the bandits, Harry Woods as the deputy sheriff and secret leader of the outlaws, and the Lindeman sisters as the trio of Mexican senoritas offering a number of musical renditions.

Under Your Hat

(British Lion)

Spy Extravaganza, with Music

Entertainment which takes the picturegoer's mind off the war starts off with an immediate advantage in these bomb scarred isles. Escapism, of course, is not enough, and the escapism of this opus is definitely aided and abetted by the infectiously inconsequential personalities of the Hulberts, who have wide stage and radio followings here—and by the breezy treatment of their adventures in a quite mythical but exhilarating world of spies and international plotters. It is much the brand of comedy-musical the Hulbert-Courtneidge menage used to do so well, and their return to the metier at a most appropriate and jaded moment should help the exhibitor in Britain to extract the utmost from a far from easily drawn clientele. Probably there are audiences on the other side of the Atlantic who will relish English comedy of the broader brand without expecting reason to accompany the rhyme.

Maurice Elvey's treatment of the material is characteristically unsubtle. Dance routines in a semi-spectacular semi-burlesque manner pepper the production which has a slender plot, and between while the Hulbert-Courtneidge legpull the True Blue Britons from the Hill Country, play "tag" with the spies, get mixed up with cabaret ballets, but eventually get back to Britain with the secret carburetor which has been ensconced in a box of slimming chocolates. The background takes in a Continental canvas and is well photographed. Not once does the picture cease from being quite funny, not once is either Jack or Cecily slacking on a keen comedy job.

A Wardour Street trade show audience seemed to relish the film, punctuated the screening with laughter, and seemed quite indifferent to an air raid alarm and the potential presence of Nazi bombers somewhere overhead.—Aubrey Flanagan.

Trailing Double Trouble

(Monogram-Weeks)

Western Melodrama

This second in George W. Weeks' series of westerns for Monogram release fulfills the promise of the first. This time the story runs somewhat more to action and less to story, the plot carrying the principals up and down and across the rangeland in pursuits, decoys, ambushes and gunfights. But there is no less fighting, in which the hero handles himself with the same aplomb displayed in the first film.

Crash Corrigan, Dusty King and Alibi Terhune again ride into a scene of trouble—there's been a murder of the brother of as nice a gal as ever bossed a ranch—and track down the culprits. This time it's a gravel contract instead of a mine claim or cattle herd that's at stake. This time, also, the heroes ride away again at picture's end, despite the allure of the girl they've saved from the terrorists.

The Face at the Window

(Arthur Ziehm)

Mellerdrama

Unabashedly a melodrama of the "unhand me villain, my heart is pledged to another" cliche this British production of the Brooke Warren play, which was a spine-chiller at the turn of the century, has much to recommend it—the hero, villain and the girl overact in an authentic reproduction of the melodrama circa 1880, and, in addition, it is a pretty good mystery.

Arthur Ziehm, the distributor, is releasing "The Face at the Window" with another melodrama, "Torso Murder Mystery," as a double thrill show. The latter picture, also British-made, was reviewed in Motion Picture Herald, December 30, 1939, under the title "Traitor Spy."

The locale of "The Face at the Window" is Paris where a notorious murderer, the "Wolf" is on the prowl. His method is to stab the victim in the back while they are distracted by a horrible face at a window. "The Wolf" is actually the "Chevalier del Gardo," a suave villain, accepted in the best circles, and the face is that of his brother, a freak. The "Chevalier" has designs on "Cecile de Brisson," daughter of a banker, who in turn is in love with "Cortier," a bank clerk (pronounced clark).

"Chevalier" stops at nothing to get his proud beauty. Interspersed with his prowlings and killings the "Wolf" makes frequent trips to "The Blind Rat," a dive, where he plots his nefarious deeds and where the climax of the film occurs, when "Cortier" rescues "Cecile."

Mozart

(Mozart, Inc.)

Moments of a Music Maker

This screen study of the musical and marital moments of the Austrian composer, Wolfgang Amadeus Mozart, will find its best and most appreciative reading from concert conscious customers disposed to discount the evident and annoying deficiencies which the production displays in its acting and technical resources. Even so, an ardent Mozartian may complain of the wayward treatment of the story.

Opening with a visit to the Mozart museum in the birthplace town of the composer, the story flashes back to a glimpse of the infant prodigy displaying his talents for the Empress Maria Theresa and her none too enthusiastic youngster, Marie Antoinette. A sudden transition finds the musician at man's estate and his meeting with the family of his future bride, Constanza. The two eventually marry after Mozart's mother has died and he has freed himself of an infatuation for Constanza's pretty sister, Aloysia.

Seen at a mid-afternoon performance at the Little Carnegie Playhouse in New York, where a sparse audience was audible in its displeasure over the inaudibility of the sound track.—Joseph F. Coughlin.

Power and the Land

(RKO Radio)

River of Electricity

Another chapter in the story of the New Deal is recounted in this documentary study of the program of the Rural Electrification Administration. To preach the doctrine of electrical evangelicalism, Joris Ivens, as director for the Washington powerhouse personnel, pictures in the instance of one farm family the wonders that come to such a rural establishment upon junking the antiquated kerosene lamp for the modern mazda bulb. All of this transformation is accomplished in true fairy tale story by dipping into the pot of governmental gold which is to be found not at the end of a mythical rainbow but on the banks of the Potomac.

The treatment of production is regulated on a "before" and "after" style basis. The William Parkinson family, as an example for this power preachment, is first seen without the benefits of electricity. The farm chores from sunrise to sunset are handled in a state of semi-darkness and back breaking labor. The milk sours because of the want of an adequate cooling system. Mother Parkinson sweats all day over a hot wood burning stove and in between meal preparations does the big family wash without the aid of a ready supply of running water. Such a state cause the farmer population of the district to band together for the construction of a cooperative electrical system, money for the enterprise coming from the Rural Electrification Administration. The reason for the governmental assistance is because privately operated power companies are either not willing or unable to advance loans for such endeavor.

Mr. Ivens, who at present is president of the Association of Documentary Film Producers and who is principally remembered for his direction of the leftist production, "The Spanish Earth," has composed a work that is effective in its propaganda aspects. The photography, especially of the early morning dawns over the country land, is pictorially moving. The commentary was formulated by Stephen Vincent Benet.

The film was produced by the Rural Electrification Administration and will be distributed by RKO Radio on the same gratis basis which was used by Paramount in its handling of "The River." To be released November 11. Running time, 36 minutes.

Trailer Tragedy

(RKO Radio)

Edgar Kennedy

The chief exponent of the "slow burn" type of comedy, Edgar Kennedy has opportunities in profusion to make use of his specialty here as he, his wife and father-in-law go vacationing by trailer. Edgar's troubles begin when the finance people overtake the trailer and remove the automobile and continue until finally the trailer is gone for non-payment of installments. Edgar's father-in-law has forgotten to mail the checks. Besides Edgar there are Vivian Oakland, Bill Franey, Tiny Sanford, Charlie Hall and Tom Dempsey in the cast. Running time, 17 minutes.

Window Cleaners

Donald Duck

Donald Duck, Pluto and a bumblebee are the exponents of merriment in this Walt Disney cartoon. Their effort meets with eventual failure, for although the robbery as such is successful, all the participants are caught, the last being Bogart, who meets his death after a gun fight high in the mountains.

Rounding out the cast are Alan Curtis, Arthur Kennedy, Joan Leslie, Henry Hull, Henry Travers, Jerome Cowan, Minna Gombell, Barton MacLane and Elizabeth Risdon.

The series stars Ralph Bellamy in the title role, and in this case he is principally supported by Margaret Lindsay, Charley Grapewin, James Burke and Michael Whalen.

Directed by Kurt Neumann, whose latest was "A Night at Earl Carroll's," the picture revolves around the suicide of a famous physical culturist driven to take his own life because of fake X-Ray plates shown him by an unscrupulous doctor. The son of a Police Inspector, and a writer of mystery stories, "Ellery Queen" solves the case.

Release date: November 28, 1940.

Returning to his home town as guest of honor at a Frontier Day celebration and to act as honorary sheriff, he encounters the local gangsters, suffers a beating at their hands, and resolves to stay and clean them up through his program and by running for Sheriff. His success further endears him to the girl portrayed by Ann Miller, and delights his pal, depicted by Jimmy Durante. Vera Vague, "Gabby" Hayes, Mary Lee, Jerome Cowan and Barton MacLane are also in the cast.

Sol Siegel was associate producer and Joseph Santley directed, his last having been "Dancing on a Dime."

Rosemary Lane is here seen as a young woman engaged to a boy portrayed by John Eldredge, marriage choice of her family. Really in love with a happy-go-lucky boy in the town, interpreted by George Reeves, she finally breaks her engagement, marries the boy of her own choice.

Financial difficulties seem insuperable when the young man is offered a chance to run on the opposition ticket to the corrupt mayor, which he accepts. His campaign speeches, slanted at the angle of why he would vote for his opponent, manage to bring out the latter's corruption and get the boy himself elected.

The cast includes Virginia Brissac, Francis Pierlot, Oscar O'Shea, Ferris Taylor and Joseph King. William Jacobs was associate producer and Noel Smith directed the Robert Kent screen play, from a play by Barry Connors.

Meet the Missus

(Republic)

Latest chapter in the film history of the Higgins family, this is the first using the replacements made for the Gleason group which formerly personified the family since the beginning of the series.

Here are seen Roscoe Karns, as "Joe Higgins"; Ruth Donnelly, as "Lil"; George Ernest, as "Sid"; Lois Ranson, as "Betty," and Spencer Charters, as "Grandpa." Polly Moran, Dorothy Ann Seese and Alan Ladd round out the cast.

Directed by Mal St. Clair, who did "Young As You Feel," the picture was produced by Robert North. The story concerns the loss of some bonds, and attempts on the part of Grandpa to escape from an engagement to the "Widow Jones" made only to ease the bond situation. The various complications that ensue provide the comedy and entertainment.

TWO NEW STATE EXHIBITOR UNITS; WEHRENBERG, BRANCH ARE REELECTED

New York Units of MPTOA Set Expansion Plans; Illinois Group Includes New Regional Directors; Myers at Michigan Meet

The Motion Picture Theatre Owners of New York State has become a state-wide organization, as the result of meetings held in Syracuse and Albany last week, at which it was decided to open offices in those two cities. The organization is already strong in Buffalo; and Max Cohen's New York Allied affiliated with the MPTOA several months ago.

In Illinois, last week also, the United Theatre Owners of Illinois became a state-wide group, with the election of seven additional board members. Among other exhibitor organizations meeting last week were the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Eastern Missouri and Southern Illinois, which reelected Fred Wehrenberg, of St. Louis, president; and the Allied of Michigan, which reelected Ray Branch president, and heard Abram F. Myers, national Allied general counsel, ask for a permanent settlement of industry problems.

Meanwhile, the consent decree, in the Government's New York anti-trust suit, continued through another stage of postponement, the Federal Court in that city agreeing to the request of the film company and Government attorneys for still another deay of one more week. See page 12.

Complete New York MPTO Organizational Plans

Meetings of the New York State MPTO in Syracuse and Albany on Tuesday and Wednesday of last week resulted in a decision to open branches in those two cities before the year's end; and committees were appointed to complete details. A. C. Hayman, of Buffalo, presided over the meetings and heads the new MPTOA of New York, Inc.

Several hundred theatres will be represented by the augmented group. Directors will be from every section. A state convention is planned for next June. There will be close cooperation with Max Cohen's New York Allied, affiliated with the national MPTOA, and which will retain jurisdiction in the city's metropolitan area.

Edward L. Kuykendall, president of the MPTOA, told the Buffalo unit last week that the consent decree was unfair to exhibitors, but that he had not decided whether the national organization should "intervene" at this time "as a friend of the court." (Motion Picture Herald, October 12th, page 15.)

Illinois UTO Covers The Whole State

With the election of seven additional members to the board of directors, the Illinois United Theatre Owners became a state wide organization last week. The members were elected at a meeting in Mount Vernon. They are: Mrs. I. W. Rodgers, of Cairo; Steve Farrar, Harrisburg; Noah Bloomer, Belleville; S. E. Pirtle, Jerseyville; F. C. Souttar, St. Louis; Robert C. Cluster, Salem; George Barber, Villagrove.

Edward G. Zorn, Pontiac, president, presided. One speaker was William F. Crouch, executive secretary. It was announced that district meetings would be held in November.

Myers Views Decree For Michigan Allied

"Any settlement of industry problems should be permanent, and enduring, and should not depend upon the voluntary support of the producer-distributors," Abram F. Myers, general counsel of the National Allied, told the 21st annual convention of the Michigan Allied at Jackson, in that state, last week. Mr. Myers was the chief speaker. About 250 attended. In charge of convention details was W. S. McLaren. Officers elected were Ray Branch, reelected; W. James Alson, vice-president; Edgar E. Kirchner, secretary-treasurer; Pearl M. Sprott, business manager; C. R. Beechler, Henry Carley, William A. Cassidy, Glenn A. Cross, Allen Johnson, Fred Penell, P. C. Schram, William Schulte, Walter Semeyn, J. E. Stocker, W. G. Thick, and Fred Witters, directors.

Missouri, Illinois MPTO Reelects Fred Wehrenberg

Fred Wehrenberg, veteran St. Louis exhibitor, was again named president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Eastern Missouri and Southern Illinois, at the annual convention in St. Louis last week. Officers elected were S. E. Pirtle, I. W. Rodgers, Sam Komm, and Robert Cluster, vice-presidents; Louis Hehle, secretary-treasurer; Lou Ansell, assistant secretary-treasurer; and Walter A. Thimmig, sergeant-at-arms.

Philadelphia UMPTO Plans Intervention

The board of directors of the United Motion Picture Theatre Owners, of Philadelphia, in that city discussed last week possible intervention in the Government's New York anti-trust suit, to prevent the acceptance, by the Federal court, of the consent decree now being drawn by majors' and Government attorneys. Papers are understood to be ready.

Other subjects discussed were local clearance, raises in admissions, and the Red Cross drive. The latter was thoroughly backed.

Cleveland Independents Protest to Jackson

A group of independent Cleveland exhibitors, representing 57 theatres, last week protested to United States Attorney General Robert Jackson, and to Thurman Arnold, assistant United States Attorney General, in charge of anti-trust prosecutions, against the blocks-of-five selling provision of the consent decree. The protest was in the form of a petition, which read, in part:

"Adoption of the five picture clause will cause inestimable chaos, and multiply the disadvantages under which independent theatre owners operate their theatres; and will not only increase film rentals, but prevent elimination of undesirable pictures."

Southern Exhibitors Hear Consent Decree Reports

Chief topic of the convention of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Arkansas, Mississippi and Tennessee, which began in Memphis on Sunday and ended Monday evening, was the consent decree. Speakers at the convention were Y. Frank Freeman, vice-president in charge of Paramount studios; Ed Kuykendall, national MPTOA president, and others. R. X. Williams presided.

Only one exhibitor out of 365 who replied to a questionnaire in the New York Independent Theatre Owners Association magazine, "The Independent," favored the selling in blocks of five provisions of the consent decree, the association reported this week, after final tabulation.

Ohio ITO Planning Testimonial Dinner

The Independent Theatre Owners of Ohio will hold its eighth annual convention at the Deshler-Wallick Hotel, Columbus, October 30th and 31st. There will be a testimonial banquet to Martin Smith on the first evening.

Harry Perlewitz, of Milwaukee, business manager for the Independent Theatres Protective Association of Wisconsin and Upper Michigan, has announced a district meeting of the association, to be held November 1st at Wisconsin Rapids.

The board of directors of the Associated Theatre Owners of Indiana has changed the dates of the convention from November 11th and 12th to November 25th and 26th.

The annual convention of the Independent Theatre Owners of Arkansas will be held in Little Rock, that state, November 17th and 18th. O. G. Wren, of that city, will preside. C. C. Mundo, also of Little Rock, is chairman of the board.

THE HOLLYWOOD SCENE

Pace Maintained

Hollywood, despite an unseasonal heat wave which brought the thermometer up to 94 degrees during several noon hours this week, kept up the pressure applied to production last week, finishing the same number of films, 11.

Six were started, four less than last week, and 34 were shooting, compared to 39. Being prepared were 14, as against last week's 19, with 71 being edited, two more than in the previous stanza.

Viva Warner

A definite move on the part of a motion picture concern to cement the relations between the Americas was announced this week by Warners, which will make a two reel short subject on South America.

Set for production by the middle of November, the picture, in Technicolor, is now being written by Jack Scholl and will be directed by Jean Negulesco.

Described as a "combination travelogue and gaucho western," the picture's musical background will consist of South American folk themes.

From Culver City this week comes news that the MGM short subjects department has taken the production of new season product in stride.

Two of the Pete Smith Specialties have been completed, with the same number currently in work. First of the six two-reel "Crime Does Not Pay" subjects starts next week, while the first of the nine John Nesbitt "Passing Parade" subjects is nearing completion.

Also in work now are four of the scheduled 10 one-reel "Miniatures," of which two are a part of Carey Wilson's schedule of six. Three of the nine "Our Gang" comedies have been completed and two others are in work. Also, three of the 18 color cartoons have been finished, as have four of the scheduled 12 Traveltalks.

Columbia quietly was going ahead this week with two of its bigger films in production.

Started was "Legacy," starring Warner Baxter, and described as an "American Forsythe Saga." Directed by Gregory Ratoff, this picture is based on the Charles Bonner novel, and is being produced by 29-year-old Robert Sherwood.

Shooting on the Gower Street lot, meanwhile, was "This Thing Called Love," costarring Rosalind Russell and Melvyn Douglas, who are currently appearing on screens in MGM's "Third Finger, Left Hand." Produced by William Perlberg, who is shortly to join the Twentieth Century-Fox forces, the picture is being directed by Alexander Hall.

NOW WHO'S A PIGEON?

Long has "You're a Pigeon" been a Hollywood catch phrase for everything from a victim in a gin-rummy game to a producer who exceeds budget.

But last week some of the opprobrium, at least, was removed from its meaning, for Dixie, the pigeon which played Lenchen in "A Dispatch from Reuter's", was guest of honor at the regular luncheon of the Hollywood Women's Press Club.

Called the Luncheon for Lenchen, the food was preceded by a presentation. Dixie received a gold anklet inscribed "The First Newspaper Woman".

Looking back, as some did, it was wondered whether it had all been worthwhile.

Stories

MGM has secured an option on Jan Struthers' "Mrs. Miniver," current best seller of an English family in present times. Greer Garson is penciled in for the title role by producer Sidney Franklin, and James Hilton and R. C Sherriff have been assigned to the screen play.

"The Gentle People," Irwin Shaw stage play, has been purchased by Warners as a vehicle for Ann Sheridan, John Garfield, Thomas Mitchell and Albert Basserman.

With production slated for the first of the year, Jerry Wald and Richard Macauley have been assigned to write the screen adaptation.

The story is of a racketeer who intrudes on the Sheepshead Bay fishing grounds of two old men and their niece. To protect themselves the men are forced to murder.

Screen treatment of "A Cool Million," a light comedy with a modern New York background, was purchased this week by Columbia. The treatment was written by Boris Ingster and Nathaniel West from the latter's novel. Sam Bischoff will produce.

SOL C. SIEGEL, Republic executive producer, will join Paramount as a producer in November.

ARCH OBOLER, radio writer and director, has been given a term contract by Frank Lloyd Productions.

MERVYN LEROY has been assigned to direct MGM's story of the life of Ephraim McDowell.

WOLFGANG REINHARDT has had his Warner associate producer's contract renewed.

HEDY LAMARR was given a new MGM contract.

PHILIP MERIVALE will appear in "Mr. and Mrs. Smith" for RKO.

EDMUND GOULDING will direct "Mr. Skeffington" for Warners.

MICHELE MORGAN has been signed to a term contract by RKO.

Make "Good Neighbor" Film

As part of the general campaign to cement relationships between the Americas, Warners in Hollywood, this week, announced that it would produce a two-reel subject on South America. Jack Scholl is writing the script, to be made in technicolor under supervision of Gordon Hollingshead. Jean Negulesco will direct the subject, which will be a combination travelogue and gaucho western.

New MGM Series

MGM has announced a new series of pictures, following the pattern of its "Andy Hardy" and "Dr. Kildare" series. The new series is entitled "Keeping Company," and will follow the lives of a typical young couple. To be starred in are Ann Rutherford and John Shelton.

ARBITRATION WORKING IN NOVA SCOTIA AREA

Distributors, Circuits, Independents Come to Terms at Board; May End Government Control

Arbitration has proven efficacious in reconciling differences between distributors and theatre circuits on one side and the independent picture exhibitors of Nova Scotia, on the other side. Previous failure of the parties to agree resulted in legislation being passed in the provincial assembly establishing complete control over picture distribution by the provincial government through the censor board. The distributors were forced to deliver pictures as the censors directed, and not according to the revenue involved. Fines and suspension or expulsion for violations were established.

Before the law was implemented, an arbitration board was set up. So successful has been this board on which distributors, circuits and independents are represented, that the legislation has not been enforced. The law may be repealed at the next session of the assembly, in the early Spring.

Clarification of the difficulties between branches of the industry was evidenced at the 1940 convention of the Allied Exhibitors and the organization of the maritime branch of the Canadian Picture Pioneers. W. H. Cuzner, of Sydney Mines, an independent exhibitor from the soft coal mining district in which the drastic legislation originated, was again chosen as president of the Allied group. Also representing the independents is Frank Sobey, vice-president, of Stellarton. The re-elected secretary-treasurer, T. J. Courtney, manager of the Casino, Halifax, representing Canada's biggest circuit, Famous Players, of which the Casino is a link. Two other circuits represented on the council are the Spencer group, by A. A. Fielding, of St. John, and Franklin & Herschorn, by P. J. Haley, of Halifax.

In the Pioneers, the chief executives are A. J. Mason, of Springhill, a veteran exhibitor from a soft coal production area, who had been a leader in the movement for the government control of picture distribution; R. S. Roddick, manager of the Capitol, and R. G. March, of St. John, manager of Twentieth Century-Fox exchange. Mr. Mason is president and Mr. Roddick and Mr. March are co-secretaries.

All of the complaints in distribution, have been adequately handled by the arbitration board, and there is now more harmony in the trade than for many years.

Quebec Allied Elects Norrish

Quebec Allied Theatres Inc., at their annual meeting this month, re-elected B. E. Norrish of Associated Screen News Ltd., president.

Three production crews were working in Quebec last week. G. F. Noxon is directing a new film in the "Canada at War" series for the National Film Board, using an Associated Screen News camera crew. Another ASN crew with A. Jacquemin, Phil Taylor and Nils Montclair are working on a production for the Province of Quebec. Ortus Films had camera and technical crews at work in Quebec on scenes for their full-length feature "49th Parallel" under supervision of E. H. Borradaile.

Motion picture theatres of Canada are making an important contribution to the success of the current Canadian Red Cross Campaign for funds. Six hundred or more theatres are showing special trailers, 211 of which were produced by Associated Screen News Ltd. By means of these showings, donated by the theatres, a direct appeal for support of the Red Cross campaign is made to theatre audiences. Distribution on a coast-to-coast basis has been under the supervision of the Canadian Film Boards of Trade.

Warner Brothers feature "George and Margaret," made in England, has been playing at the Eglington theatre in Toronto and at the Snowdon theatre in Montreal. Famous Players Canadian Corporation has booked the feature in its "A" houses.

"Sixty Glorious Years," Herbert Wilcox production, after 16 months has been released in Toronto. The delay was not caused by the censors for the film was passed when submitted originally.

Judge Urquhart of the Appeal Court in Toronto has ruled that New Toronto cannot enforce a bylaw prohibiting the distribution of handbills, heralds and other printed matter. Charges against two house-to-house handbill distributors were quashed. The Statutes of Ontario prohibit such a ban on handbills, the judge pointed out.

Famous Player Canadian theatres are assisting the Government of Canada's war effort by acting as local sales agencies for War Savings Stamps and Certificates. Patrons are urged to take change from their theatre admission in War Saving Stamps instead of coins.

FRENCH PLAN STRICT FILM CENSORSHIP

Export curbs and strict censorship of all films made in France were announced by Vice Premier Pierre Laval in Vichy Wednesday, October 9th, as part of a program for a moral reform of French motion pictures in conformity with the plans of the Vichy government, according to a dispatch to The New York Times.

In future all film theatres must prominently post outside signs indicating the nature of the films on the program—whether they are for children or adults. Complete revision of 10,000 films now authorized for showing in France will be ordered and all objectionable films will be eliminated, according to the dispatch. Authorized films will be classed in two categories, those for children and those for adults.

The government will forbid the exportation of any undeveloped films, and news films will be subject to censorship.

German Feature Supply Decreased

In July, 1940, the German Board of Censors approved six feature pictures, all of which were Reich productions, according to the current issue of Foreign Commerce Weekly, organ of the U. S. Department of Commerce. Including these additions, the total importation of films for the first seven months of 1940 was 56 units, compared with 73 for the corresponding period of 1939, showing a definite decrease due mainly to the British blockade.

The table which follows divides the German approved feature films for the first seven months of 1939 and 1940, according to country of production:

Country	Jan. to July 1939	1940
Germany	47	48
Italy	3	5
United States	16	3
France	3	..
Japan	2	..
Denmark	1	..
Hungary	1	..
Total	73	56

Drop in Finland

During the first six months of 1940, the Finnish Government's Film Censorship Bureau reviewed 30 feature-length films, a drastic reduction as compared with 166 during the corresponding period last year, according to the Commerce Department's organ.

Of the 30 features, only nine were produced in America, eight were German-made, five were native products and four were produced in Sweden. The Finnish total includes two features composed entirely of shorts on the Russo-Finnish war. The drastic reduction in number of features reviewed, is due to the Government's policy of reducing to a minimum the import of so-called non-essential goods.

Motion pictures had been subjected to strict military censorship until June 10 last. During that time no films were banned, but in one instance the sound track on a newsreel was suppressed. Leading American distributors have asked the Government License Board for licenses to import American Films, payment to be made after lifting of import restrictions. Up to the present, no decision has been made.

Extend Greece Regulations

By ministerial decree in Greece, all quota and exchange regulations affecting the importation of American films into that country which expired June 30, 1940, have been extended through June 30, 1941.

Ban Italian, German Film Publicity on the Radio

Motion pictures in the German and Italian languages no longer receive publicity over New York and other large city radio stations broadcasting programs in those languages.

This announcement was made last week by Joseph Lang, general manager of Station WHOM, Jersey City, who heads the radio industry's committee on foreign language stations.

The action was taken to prevent the spread of subversive propaganda. It was explained that, while the radio programs might not have such propaganda, nor even the film at the theatre, the newsreel or accompanying feature might; hence, it was best to avoid giving publicity.

American Films Gain in Mexico

by JAMES LOCKHART
in Mexico City

American pictures will have increased playing time in Mexico now that Congress, at the request of President Lazaro Cardenas, has repealed the federal law enacted September 1, 1937 which made it mandatory for all cinemas to exhibit made-in-Mexico feature films or several short subjects to equal the length of two features at least three times a month.

Exhibitors protested the law, contending that it was impossible to obey it to the letter because of the paucity of Mexican pictures. President Cardenas investigated the situation and found the exhibitors were right and also found that domestic production at present has no hope of competing with the output of Hollywood and elsewhere abroad. As part of the Federal plan to assist domestic production the industry, some time ago, was exempted from certain Federal taxes for five years, but results were negligible.

Labor at Crossroads

Mexican and foreign branches of the picture industry see possible changes in the policy of the Confederation of Mexican Workers in reports that Vincente Lombardo Toledano, head of the union, may resign. The Confederation has long controlled films and all other sectors of the amusement industry to the extent of banning pictures of which it does not approve.

The Confederation's executive committee has been assured that most of the groups belonging to the organization will vote against Mr. Toledano at the Confederation's annual election of officers in November and that support will be given Fidel Velazquez, now the organization's publicity man and secretary. Mr. Velazquez is a veteran labor leader.

Some film men attach little importance to the friendship between Lombardo Toledano and Mr. Velazquez. They look for a decided change in the Confederation's leftist policy if Mr. Velazquez takes charge.

Strike at Cervantes Circuit

Appeals in the form of an open letter for fair play in the strike that has closed the Cervantes circuit of five large Mexico City neighborhood cinemas have been made to President Cardenas and the municipal government by the Mexican Exhibitors Union.

The strike was called to enforce demands for salary increases and, among other things, compensation for "professional diseases," including rheumatism dyspepsia and neurasthenia. The Exhibitors Union says the strikers want 508 days' pay a year.

It denied rumors that have been spread to the effect that some first run exhibitors, with the aid of foreign interests, have formed a combine that is trying to drive the neighborhood theatres out of business so that the public will be obliged to patronize only the more expensive theatres.

Two leading theatres in Vera Cruz are also closed by a strike. Higher pay, less work and economic benefits are sought.

Publicity Short Subject

Governor Maximino Avila Camacho of Puebla state, brother of General Manuel Avila Camacho, the President-elect, is the star of a four-reel subject that has to do with bull fighting. Governor Avila Camacho appears as a metador.

UFA AND TOBIS TAKE CONTROL IN HOLLAND

German Censors Check Films but Endeavor to Continue Showings to Bolster Morale

(Following is one of the first, if not the first, direct news dispatches on conditions in the motion picture industry in any one sector of the lowlands to reach the United States since the Germans invaded that sector of the Continent.—EDITOR.)

by PHILIP DE SCHAAP
in Amsterdam

Vital changes in the film industry in Holland have resulted from German occupation of the country. Only pictures censored and approved in Germany since 1936 are allowed to be shown. English and French films are definitely forbidden.

The German companies, Ufa and Tobis, and some other productions companies of Dutch and German origin are supplying the market. Domestic pictures are permitted when re-censored by the Nazi authorities.

Two newsreels are released in Holland, Ufa and Tobis. The first has existed for may years and the latter is being produced by the Dutch newsreel companies, Polygoon and Profilti. U. S. newsreels disappeared form the Dutch market some time ago.

The Dutch Motion Picture Federation has been revamped. C. S. Roem, former vice-president of the Dutch Bioscoop Bond, is president, and Johan Miedema vice-president. Mr. Roem became president by a scant two vote margin over Mr. Miedema, 174 to 172. The managing board now consists of B. Kunzig, manager of Ufa here; F. L. D. Strengholt, manager of MGM; B. Koch, manager of Tobis; P. J. Beynes from Gofilex, a Catholic organization in Leiden, and and J. M. P. ter Linden, manager of the City Theatre Circuit. The Warner Brothers and 20th-Fox representatives were replaced.

The managing board of the Federation is authorized to take immediate decisions in everything which they think necessary without consulting the Bond.

RKO's Holland Manager Reports on His Market

The Germans may have closed the offices of other major motion picture companies in the territories they've occupied, but in Holland the German Army distributed film for RKO, according to Max Westebbe, for the past three years Holland manager for RKO, who returned to New York last week for conferences with RKO foreign sales chiefs.

The Germany Army authorities felt the showing of films was imperative to restore morale in the occupied territory, he said, and they also allowed the RKO office in Amsterdam, employing 23 persons, to remain open. Furthermore, he added, it is the only American major company office still open. Other companies were affected by the ban on American film company operations, issued several months ago by the Germans in retaliation for the anti-Nazi films made by American companies.

Mr. Westebbe explained he had the "proper" connections with the German authorities, and. as he put it, he told them, when they marched into Amsterdam, four days after they invaded, that it would be "poor business" for them to close his office. He reminded them, he said, that they would need films for the theatres they insisted should remain open, that he had not distributed the "Nurse Edith Cavell" picture in Holland, that closing of the RKO office could only result in ill-will.

The Germans forced Netherlands theatres to remain open, Mr. Westebbe said. For several days, when ordinary trucking service was interrupted, German Army trucks delivered film from his Amsterdam exchange to local theatres.

Thus, in one instance, a German district commander, in a territory in which action had occurred, noticed a theatre closed. The local exhibitor said he could not obtain film from Amsterdam and did not have an automobile to send there. The commander requisitioned a staff car and the film was in the theatre, from Amsterdam, in two hours.

Mr. Westebbe stayed in Amsterdam during the German invasion. He watched the Germans march into the city and then motored, without hindrance, through the whole country, to see what theatre damage had been done, and how to reorganize shipping. In Rotterdam he found most of the theatres had been destroyed. But, in sections in which little or no fighting had occurred, theatres were operating as normal. And, apart from the interference in motor traffic in Amsterdam the first several days, he found no shipping problems. The local trucking company that had shipped prints for the film community, continued the shipments. Mr. Westebbe explained that gasoline was not so scarce in the Netherlands as had been rumored.

Little Competition for RKO

He thinks the RKO Amsterdam office may be permitted to remain open. He refused, for reasons of policy, to disclose what pictures it is distributing. He added, however, that he thought the Germans would welcome a reciprocal film trade agreement with the United States; i.e., freer distribution of German films here.

While the number of theatre customers decreased, because of war damage and personal factors, his billings increased, Mr. Westebbe said, pointing out that all competition to RKO from other American film companies had been eliminated.

Mr. Westebbe was accompanied here by his wife and family. He said he spent eight weeks obtaining a permit to leave Holland, and one month getting from that country to New York.

Complete Cuban Deal

Hoffberg Productions, Inc., and Cia. Nacional de Peliculas S. A. have closed a deal whereby the Cuban distributing company will handle 31 Hoffberg releases in that territory on a franchise arrangement. The new Cuban firm was organized by George Naylor, Universal branch manager for 15 years in Havana and Jose Segredo. The two are currently in New York.

Plane-to-Ground Facsimile Shown

The latest development in transmission and reception by facsimile equipment for two way communication between airplanes and the ground, was demonstrated for representatives of the trade press, Wednesday afternoon, October 9th, at Bendix Airport, N. J., by Finch Telecommunications, Inc., of Passaic, N. J., under the supervision of William G. H. Finch, president.

Publicity Uses Seen

Last May, at a previous demonstration, Mr. Finch said facsimile could solve many problems in communications for the motion picture industry. Not only can publicity material be sent out over facsimile broadcasting stations by film companies, but individual theatres may transmit data on their own programs and other exploitation material, according to the inventor. Twentieth Century-Fox supplies publicity material regularly for the nightly facsimile broadcasts over WOR in Newark.

Another possible use for the equipment, would be in joining into a facsimile unit, theatre circuits and company branch offices by which messages, photographs and other material could be sent all over the country within a few minutes.

The Finch Duplex Facsimile unit, latest refinement in the system, permits simultaneous transmission and reception of written messages, sketches, maps, charts, drawings, etc., between airplanes in flight and ground stations or between two or more distant points over an ordinary telephone wire.

At the airport, where the Finch Flying Laboratory, an eight-passenger Fokker plane is based, the journalists went aloft in groups to witness the apparatus in action. They took turns writing messages which were transmitted by the plane's radio to the field laboratory, an elaborate trailer, fully equipped with radio transmitting and receiving apparatus, stationed at the field.

When the flying laboratory landed, the newspapermen were shown facsimiles of their messages in their own handwriting, just as they had been received while the men were in the air, miles from the field.

Mr. Finch explained that the complete unit is 14⅞ by 13¾ by 12¾ inches high, and weighs less than 50 pounds, including its power supply unit. It is housed in a stream-lined metal case, with a window, which permits easy view of the receiving and transmitting drums in operation.

The unit utilizes the photo-electric cell to change variations of light and shade into electric impulses and sends these currents through a stylus needle, which reproduces the original material on the receiving drum.

The greatest contribution of the Finch organization to the science of facsimile transmission and receiving, it was asserted, was the development of a synchronizing device which harmonizes the speed of rotation of the transmitting and receiving drums.

Use of facsimile equipment, said Mr. Finch, is expected to be an important aid to military forces in the air and in the field and for use on ships, trains, police cars and trucks, etc. One of the main advantages of facsimile reproduction over aural communications, is that it dispenses with the constant attendance of a listener and that the chance of frequent errors and/or complete loss of messages is virtually non-existent.

One of the contributions made by facsimile receiving, Mr. Finch concluded, is the fact that it appears in finished form and that no further processing is necessary. Material received over wire-photo, however, requires dark room treatment before final use.

Urge Patent Conscription

The Non-Sectarian Anti-Nazi League, in communications to Thurman Arnold, assistant attorney general, Senator Homer T. Bone, chairman of the Senate Committee on Patents, and Representative Charles Kramer, chairman of the House Committee on Patents, this week urged conscription of patents.

Pointing out that the Department of Justice had announced that foreign control of vital patents imperilled the defence program, the League urged legislation which would exempt from private patent control, the production of equipment and material deemed necessary for national defense. The League envisions granting special franchises to producers of war material for stated quantities only. This would protect investors under the law.

BMI Takes Title To 124,000 More Music Numbers

Broadcast Music, Inc., the broadcasters' new source of music supply, has acquired radio performance rights, effective immediately in the catalogue of G. Ricordi and Company of Milan, Italy, embracing 124,000 titles, including 500 operas and several symphonic works.

The Ricordi catalogue is not included in the contract between the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers and the related Italian governmental society, and, therefore, these rights do not come within the scope of ASCAP's contracts with the Italian society, it was said.

Operas Included

Among the copyrighted works are the operas of Puccini and Respighi, and the standard editions of the works of Verdi, Donizetti, Mascagni, Rossini, Boito. The Buenos Aires listings, which contain tangos, rhumbas,and congas, are in the grant. Existing contracts between Ricordi and BMI member stations are assigned to BMI by Ricordi. These stations therefore will not be obligated to make payment under their contracts with Ricordi commencing with the effective date of the BMI-Ricordi contract.

The contracts were signed by Dr Renato Tasselli for Ricordi and by M. E. Tompkins, vice president and general manager, for BMI.

The acquisition brings the total music titles which will be available for radio after January 1, 1941, to 240,000. Of this number Broadcast Music, Inc., now directly controls the performing rights on approximately 140,000 and the remaining 100,000 titles are divided among other licensing societies such as Associated Music Publishers and Society of European Stage Authors and Composers (SESAC).

Miller on BMI Dispute

Although expressing the opinion that a meeting between representatives of bandleaders and broadcasters would be futile, Neville Miller, National Association of Broadcasters president, has accepted Fred Waring's invitation to a conference regarding the BMI-ASCAP dispute.

Mr. Waring requested the conference in an effort to bring about some settlement. Mr. Miller asserted that ASCAP has shown no willingness to negotiate and that the latter organization "has acted as an aggressor against broadcasters and orchestra leaders alike."

The Wisconsin State Musicians' Association, at its convention in Eau Claire, on Tuesday, blamed ASCAP for loss of jobs and urged national officials of the American Federation of Musicians to use their influence in promoting the interests of BMI.

MGM Officials Speak

William F. Rodgers and Edward M. Saunders, of MGM, were to be hosts to some 200 Chicago and Milwaukee exhibitors at an informal luncheon, Thursday, October 17th, at the Blackstone Hotel, Chicago. They were expected to discuss Loew policies for the new season.

J. T. Flynn, western division sales manager for MGM, last week, discussed sales policies and product, with members and officers of Northwest Allied, during a visit to Minneapolis. A luncheon meeting at the Nicollet Hotel was attended by Northwest independent exhibitors.

Fine Succeeds Lynch

W. R. Lynch, general manager of the Paramount Enterprises, 13-theatre Miami circuit, since January, 1937, has resigned his post because of illness. Hy Fine, former district manager for M. & P. Theatre in Boston will succeed him.

During Mr. Lynch's regime, the circuit's Sheridan was erected, the Paramount was completely remodeled and the Tivoli and Cinema Casino were added to the chain. Two new theatres, the Boulevard and Lincoln Road, as yet uncompleted, will soon join the circuit.

Epidemic Effect Lessens

Box office effects of the infantile paralysis epidemic are not as severe as they were, but grosses are still affected in the Kansas City area, according to exhibitors, this week. In localities where the ban against children has been lifted, box office receipts are still below normal. In the rest of the State of Missouri, the few cases reported, have not materially affected box office receipts.

Prepare for Banquet

Virtually all the major film companies, several circuits, some music publishing firms, and many individuals have already taken space in the souvenir journal for the first annual banquet and ball of the Cinema Lodge, B'nai B'rith, October 26th at the Hotel Pennsylvania, New York City. Benny Goodman's orchestra will provide music, and varied talent will appear.

Music Union Asks Vaudeville Return To Film Theatres

Urging the return of stage shows and orchestras to motion picture houses to stimulate sagging box office receipts, the International Musician, periodical of the American Federation of Musicians, says in part in the current issue:

"A simple remedy for the entire situation would be to restore stage shows and orchestras to the motion picture houses. Then when they have a good picture, business instead of being good, will be capacity and, when the picture is weak, the stage shows will have enough drawing power to keep the business going."

Adopted in Some Houses

Convinced that it is impossible to line up sufficient acts for a five-act vaudeville policy, Isadore Rappaport, operator of the Hippodrome, Baltimore, has switched to a modified presentation program. Last week, he presented a 16-girl Fanchon and Marco line and engaged Beth Mitchell, F. & M. director, to stage the show. Eddie Sherman continues to book acts and, when available, the presentations and name bands.

Bill Miskell, manager of Tri-States' Orpheum, Omaha, has announced that the house would play "more vaudeville than ever," this season. He added that he would feature name bands, with good units to support them.

Vaudeville night for the Globe, Bridgeport, has been shifted from Monday to Saturday, with one first run feature added, Harry F. Shaw, Loew-Poli division manager, has announced.

Stage shows were to return to the Earle, Philadelphia, following the run of "Boom Town." First show booked into the Earle was to have been George Jessel's Movie Starlet unit.

The Bijou theatre, New Haven, resumed Saturday night vaude shows, recently, with the addition of another week-day probable. Loew-Poli, Waterbury, was to have booked George White's Scandals, while Meriden's vaudeville opening date had not been announced.

The Arena, Connecticut's only indoor sports theatre, was to have reopened last Sunday, October 13th, with the Mitchell Ayres and Jack Teagarden orchestras, Henry Armetta and seven other acts. Present indications are that vaudeville will be presented every Sunday, through the season.

Collegians Hear Kanin

Garson Kanin, director of RKO's "They Knew What They Wanted," now at the Music Hall, New York, was to address the New York University class on "The Motion Picture," at the School of Education auditorium, Thursday night. Professor Frederic M. Thrasher was to preside at a discussion of Mr. Kanin's productions, after which one of his pictures was to have been shown. Mr. Kanin directed "His Favorite Wife," "Bachelor Mother," "The Great Man Votes," and "A Man To Remember."

Columbia Signs for Serial

NLRB ORDERS VOTE FOR MORE STUDIO WORKERS

AFL Strives for Complete Unionization; Networks and AFRA Pact Ready for Signing

Office workers in seven Hollywood major studios will shortly have an opportunity to select a bargaining agency for negotiations with producers. The National Labor Relations Board has ordered a bargaining agency vote election to be held "within 30 days." The Screen Office Employees Guild, independent union, obtained the NLRB order.

The studios in which elections will be held are Columbia, Loew's, RKO, Republic, Hal Roach, Universal, and Walter Wanger. There will also be elections at Twentieth Century-Fox, differing only in that the office workers will choose between the independent guild and the Twentieth Century-Fox Guild.

AFL Drive Seen

With the coming election, Hollywood again moves closer to 100 per cent unionization, the aim of the American Federation of Labor, which dominates the studio labor scene. The Employees Guild is comparatively new, but is understood to be strong; and the AFL, which several weeks ago appointed Aubrey Blair to bring into AFL ranks all Hollywood's unorganized, is understood to have approached the Guild on possible affiliation.

The economic condition of most of the extras is "entirely unsatisfactory," the standing committee of the motion picture producers and the Screen Actors guild has reported, after a study. "An extra cannot be expected to continue providing an availability which does not reward him with anything more than a sub-standard living," the report said.

The committee suggested that preference be given to extras who work 10 or more days annually; that all information anent extras be in a central office; and that the producers and the guild each appoint a representative to the standing committee, with authority to make binding agreements.

The NLRB this week certified the Moving Picture Painters Local 644 as the sole bargaining agent for scenic and assistant scenic artists at the Warners, RKO, Twentieth Century-Fox, Columbia, Loew's, Universal, Samuel Goldwyn, Paramount, and Hal Roach studios.

Petrillo Bars Band Pickups

James C. Petrillo, "czar" of American music, president of the American Federation of Musicians and of the Chicago musicians' local, this week again barred remote band pickups from a network. It was the Columbia Broadcasting System against whom the ban was directed this time, and the ban arose from a dispute which musicians' locals are having in Akron, Ohio, and Scranton, Pennsylvania, with stations WADC and WGBI in those cities respectively. Commercial programs are not affected. Mr. Petrillo has exercised this ban before, and in each instance, the local stations settled differences with the musicians' units.

The new agreement between the American Federation of Radio Artists and the three large networks has been drafted, and was expected to be signed this week. The pact covers sustaining program performers, replaces an expired one, and more closely approaches the contracts covering commercial performers, in rates of pay. The union threatened a national strike several weeks ago, but the New York State Labor Mediation Board intervened; and, last week, settlement was reached, with the signature, and ratification by locals of the union in New York, San Francisco, Chicago, and Los Angeles, expected this week.

The New York Stagehands' Local No. 1 last week began picketing the Rockefeller Center offices of the National Broadcasting Company, over employment of its members in theatres used by the network for radio broadcasts. Settlement of the argument was expected shortly.

A strike called last week by the Laboratory Technicians Local 702, New York, against Producers Laboratories, Inc., was settled Monday, after a talk between J. T. Cosman, president of the laboratory and John Rugge, president of the union. The laboratory agreed to give the workers an extra week's pay. The union had demanded a week's vacation with pay.

Operators To Discuss Contracts

In New Haven, the operators' local, 273, was to meet early next week at the Trades Council Hall, to conclude discussions of new contracts which will be signed with circuits and independent theatre owners of the area. The Stage Employees Local 74 will meet October 28th, with John O'Connell presiding.

In Chicago, theatre owners were to meet at mid-week with leaders of the city's projectionists' union, to settle a new operators' contract.

In St. Louis, the Department of Justice office was reported to have received one more exhibitor complaint against the city's stagehands' local No. 6. The latest complaint is supposed to have come from the Ansell Brothers, operating the Ritz, Varsity, and Empress, and is said to have mentioned union coercion at the latter theatre. The Department is said to already have complaints against the stagehands' activity from Clarence Kaimann and Mrs. Bessie Schulter.

In Lawrence, Massachusetts, Superior Court Judge Edward Broadhurst last week refused to issue a temporary injunction to restrain local projectionists from picketing a theatre.

The national board of the American Guild of Variety Artists has appointed Jack Miller to assist Lee Travers in reorganizing the Philadelphia local.

THEATRES RATIFY EQUITY AGREEMENT

The League of New York Theatres on Monday ratified the basic agreement with the Actors Equity. It will run for one year, and replaces that which expired September 1st and was continued during negotiations. Two new clauses are in the agreement: one permitting Sunday shows at regular, instead of double, wages until June 1st; another increasing actors' minimum pay from $40 to $50 per week on contracts signed on and after December 1st. The League also re-elected Marcus Heiman, president; Lee Shubert and Brock Pemberton, vice-presidents; Gilbert Miller, treasurer; and Herman Shumlin, secretary.

Thompson in Music Post

Virgil Thompson has become music critic for the New York Herald Tribune. He has written musical scores for several motion pictures, among which are "The Plow That Broke the Plains" and "The River."

Dramatists Set Stage-Film Pact

A compromise formula by which film companies would return to the backing of stage plays prior to their Broadway opening was set Tuesday by representatives of film companies and Broadway stage managers.

Meanwhile, it was reported that MGM might be one of the first of the film companies to return to the financing of legitimate plays. Reported under consideration is an operetta by Jerome Kern and Oscar Hammerstein, which Max Gordon is scheduled to produce. Authors are said to be working on alternate locales, one in San Francisco and the other in New Orleans. The principal purpose is to provide a film vehicle for Jeanette MacDonald, it was said.

Before the impasse between Hollywood and Broadway, MGM backed a number of shows produced by Mr. Gordon and Sam H. Harris, among them the "Jubilee" and "Pride and Prejudice," recently released as a motion picture and considered a box office success.

National Decency Legion Classifies Eight Films

DEFENSE UNIT LOOKS TO HOLLYWOOD FOR AID

Newsreel Companies Meanwhile Ask War Department for New York Censors on Defense Program Footage

John Hay Whitney, former Selznick International executive and backer of many motion picture projects, this week was swinging into his new duties as head of the motion picture section of the coordination department of the Division of Commercial and Cultural Relations Between the American Republics, in Washington. Mr. Whitney was appointed last week by Nelson A. Rockefeller, coordinator of the division, which is a part of the National Defense Council.

No Competition Seen

Mr. Rockefeller's Washington office said this week that Hollywood cooperation would be sought immediately, and that that community should understand that the film activities of the division would not be competitive and that, in fact, Hollywood's product would be used.

Henry L. Stimson, Secretary for War, this week accepted "with gratitude," the motion picture industry's offer of full cooperation, voiced last week by Will H. Hays, president of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America.

In a letter to Mr. Stimson last week, Mr. Hays announced he had appointed Francis S. Harmon, his executive assistant, liaison man between the film industry and the Government. Mr. Harmon is expected to work with George J. Schaefer, president of RKO and head of the industry's committee on national defense.

The five newsreel companies in New York have jointly asked the War Department to establish New York censors for newsreel footage on the present defense program. At present, Army censors look at the footage in Washington, and their projectors only handle made-up prints. This causes delay. The newsreel officials pointed out that the Navy has a modern New York branch.

Major L. E. Thompson, general chairman of the American Red Cross Theatres Committee, announced this week that arrangements were completed for the special film which the motion picture industry is contributing to the organization's membership campaign, to start November 11th.

Warner Brothers have contributed production costs. The company planned and produced the picture. The Eastman Kodak Company donated 2,000,000 feet of film to make prints. The Dupont Film Manufacturing Corporation contributed 300,000 feet. Consolidated Film Industries is processing the film.

Nine distributing companies whose branch managers have been designated district coordinators, are booking the picture. They will send prints to exchanges in time for shipment to theatres by November 10th.

Deanna Durbin is featured in the film, a short subject. Also in it are Edward Arnold, Kay Kyser, David Butler, Lum and Abner, James Cagney, Pat O'Brien, Gene Autry, George Burns, Don Ameche, Edward G. Robinson and many other stars.

A second picture is planned, starring Priscilla Lane. This will be the official Red Cross film, and it will be distributed later by the local Red Cross chapters.

Development of the entertainment program for the Army's draftees continues. It is now expected that every Army post will have a theatre, with nightly shows of current films; that the theatres will have two shows per week; and that admissions will range from 14 to 20 cents. The War Department is expected to reorganize its distribution system. It is expected 35 mm prints will be used.

The Navy Department is expected to have a film entertainment schedule approximating the Army's.

In Hollywood, last Thursday, October 10th, approximately 300 heard an "expose" of "un-American moves to sabotage national defense on the West Coast," during a dinner at the Goldwyn Studios. Dr. John R. Lechner, Cecil B. De Mille and Joseph Scott were chief speakers; Edward Arnold, master of ceremonies, and Reginald Denny, program director.

The research and production facilities of the Radio Corporaion of America are being expanded to meet national defense orders and increased business, and the company is borrowing $15,000,000 for five years, David Sarnoff, president, said this week. The funds are being obtained from a group of banks whom Mr. Sarnoff did not name. It is being borrowed at 1½ per cent interest, with the privilege of payment in whole or in part at any time before the five years. Some of it, Mr. Sarnoff indicated, will be used to retire the company's outstanding bank loans of $2,000,000, which carry an interest rate of 1¾ per cent, and are due next April 8th.

Niles Trammell, president of the National Broadcasting Company, played host to 20 Latin-American army officers last Saturday night at the New York studios. The officers ate dinner and then heard President Roosevelt's speech on national defense, by radio.

Warner Subject Shown

Warner Brothers new two reel color short subject, "A Flag of Humanity," depicting the life of Clara Barton, the Red Cross' founder, was shown for the first time October 9th at the Avon Theatre, Stamford, Connecticut. National release date is Saturday.

James Roosevelt, head of Globe Productions and also a Captain in the U. S. Marine Corps, is expected to continue his production activities, though he may be mustered into service November 1st. He is in the 22d Battalion of the Organized Marine Corps Reserve in the Los Angeles district.

W. S. Van Dyke, director, has received "stand by" orders from the Marine Reserve. He is a major.

David Sarnoff, president of the Radio Corporation of America, and Thomas Murtha, president of Local 1, International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employees, have been appointed to the New York Defense Council.

Dale Woodruff, associate manager of the Rialto, Allentown, Pennsylvania, has enlisted in the National Guard.

Floyd A. Ditting, of Des Moines, and Floyd T. Smith, of Sioux City, both Iowa theatre operators, have been appointed to local draft boards.

J. Lester Stallman, manager of the Astor Theatre, Reading, Pennsylvania, opened his theatre recently to two batteries of the National Guard, who were preparing to leave for a year's training in Virginia.

Comprising the second batch sent from Kodak's English workers, 38 English youngsters arrived in Rochester last week, bound for homes of American workers.

The IATSE this week announced that its members in good standing who are drafted will be exempt from dues, retain their standing, and will have their seniority respected.

Ned E. Depinet, vice-president of RKO, last week asserted his company would reemploy all men who enlist, who are members of the National Guard, or who are conscripted.

HERO OF WESTERNS DIES IN ARIZONA CAR CRASH

Tom Mix, Soldier, Marshal, Adventurer, Once Drew $17,000 Weekly Salary from Films

Thomas Edwin Mix, known familiarly to a generation of western fans as Tom Mix, was killed Saturday, October 12th, when his automobile got out of control and overturned near Florence, Ariz. Mr. Mix was traveling alone. It is understood he was serving as an advance agent for a circus and was en route from Tucson to Phoenix. He was carrying $6,000 in cash and also had several valuable diamonds with him, police investigators said.

Born in Pennsylvania

Born January 6, 1880, at Mix Run, near Dubois, Clearfield County, Pa., Tom Mix was the epitome of the western cowboy despite his eastern background. As a boy he worked at odd jobs in Dubois, was a water boy for lumberjacks in the Allegheny Mountain forests, and learned horsemanship by helping his father in the management of a stabel in Dubois.

There followed a modern odyssey that found him in the early summer of 1910 in Oklahoma, a United States marshal looking on while a camera crew, dispatched by Colonel William N. Selig, was making pictures of frontier life.

Describing that scene Terry Ramsaye in "A Million and One Nights" says: "This United States marshal was Tom Mix, a person who might be interested but seldom thrilled. He had rather run the gamut of the thrills of the West and the well known 'great outdoors of God's country where men are men.' Tom was born into that stuff. His father was Captain Mix, of the hellroaring Seventh United States Cavalry, a veteran wounded at the battle of Wounded Knee.

"And Tom himself in his turn had had more than a smell of powder. A youngster, with the experience of the Southwest behind him, he went to Cuba as a scout in the Spanish-American war, thence to the Philippines and on to the fighting in China at the battle of Tien-Tsin. Then, back from foreign adventures and scarred with the wounds of conflict, he went into the Texas Rangers. Up in the valley of the Pecos in New Mexico, it was Tom Mix who rounded up the bandit Shont brothers and collected a rifle nick in his shin bone along with the prisoners. The prisoners were brought back, dead and alive respectively, fifty-fifty. Now, settled down with a rich ranch in the Cherokee Nation, Mix had nothing to do but be United States marshal and ponder on the passing of the good old days of general excitement in the big West.

"This day had brought him the sight of something new under the sun—the motion picture camera. He felt impelled to participate. 'Is this a private round-up—or can I get in?'

"'If you've got any speed, help yourself to the excitement,' replied the cameraman. 'I reckon there's room.'

"Mix slipped back into the stirrups and shot his pony out into the field. There was action aplenty. Then, just by way of topping it off, he roped and bulldogged a steer in a close-up in the matter of sixteen seconds.

"In July (1910) Selig released 'Ranch Life in the Great Southwest,' and Tom Mix was started on his way to fame and the career of a motion picture cowboy." In 1925 his salary with the Fox Film Corporation, Mr. Ramsaye adds, was quoted at $17,000 a week.

That year of 1925 he went to Europe where he was an eight day wonder. Everywhere he went he took his black horse, Tony, these last years retired to Mr. Mix's San Fernando Valley ranch near Hollywood. Tony's exact age is obscure, but it is said to be over twenty.

TOM MIX

Mr. Mix made in the neighborhood of 100 films, among them "Chasing the Moon," "The Lone Star Ranger," "Riders of the Purple Sage," "Dick Turpin," "The Deadwood Coach," "The Canyon of Light," "Silver Valley" and "Outlaws of Red River."

Funeral services were held Wednesday at the Little Church of the Flowers, Glendale, Cal. Burial was in Forest Lawn Cemetery.

Columbia

BEWARE SPOOKS: Joe E. Brown, Mary Carlisle—Joe Brown is no draw for us like he was when with Warners. We did only average business. We expected to do much better.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

BLONDIE HAS SERVANT TROUBLE: Penny Singleton, Arthur Lake, Larry Simms—This one of the series is a little different and was inclined to scare some of the kids here. However, the adults enjoyed the spookiness and comedy in the house of secret panels. This series should be able to hold on quite a while yet. The rotating closet and the flashlight stuck in "Dagwood's" mouth went over the best here. I ran it with "Four Sons," which is really not a good choice for a double. Running time, 66 minutes. Played October 4.—W. Varick Nevins, III, Alfred Co-Op Theatre, Alfred, N. Y. Small college town and rural patronage.

HE STAYED FOR BREAKFAST: Loretta Young, Melvyn Douglas—Very poor business on this fine comedy. Guess the people were broke or something as a feature of this type is generally good box office here. Thought this was very clever and well worth playing. Running time, 89 minutes.—A. E. Eliasen, Rialto Theatre, Paynesville, Minn. Rural and small town patronage.

LONE STAR PIONEERS: Bill Elliott—To our western fans it seemed to please. Business very good.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

WEST OF ABILENE: Charles Starrett, Marjorie Cooley, Sons of the Pioneers—Fair enough western that satisfied but if Columbia doesn't remove that stucco saloon from one or two of these westerns I'm afraid it will drive us all to drink. How about a change of scenery too, as well as in the cast? Running time, 60 minutes.—A. E. Eliasen, Rialto Theatre, Paynesville, Minn. Rural and small town patronage.

First National

THEY DRIVE BY NIGHT: George Raft, Ann Sheridan, Ida Lupino, Humphrey Bogart, Gale Page—Swell entertainment to good business. Running time, 90 minutes. Played September 22-23.—M. D. Stewart, Texas Theatre, De Leon, Texas. Small town patronage.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer

ANDY HARDY MEETS DEBUTANTE: Mickey Rooney, Judy Garland, Cecilia Parker, Lewis Stone, Fay Holden—You can't go wrong on this. It hits the spot. "Swell show." Running time, 85 minutes. Played September 23-24.—R. A. Poage, Lyric Theatre, Brooksville, Ky. General patronage.

BOOM TOWN: Clarke Gable, Spencer Tracy, Claudette Colbert, Hedy Lamarr, Frank Morgan—Fair run on this at advanced prices but don't play it advanced prices if you're in a small town as this feature, I believe, doesn't warrant any increase. The feature is good and will please, but I believe the people want something a little different for the increased admission and they won't get it in this. The cast's about perfect with the exception of Lamarr who, it seems, doesn't have what it takes to keep up to the standard of the four stars of this feature, Tracy, Gable, Colbert and Morgan. Running time, 120 minutes.—A. E. Eliasen, Rialto Theatre, Paynesville, Minn. Rural and small town patronage.

BOOM TOWN: Clark Gable, Spencer Tracy, Claudette Colbert, Hedy Lamarr, Frank Morgan—In all and all an extra good show with lots of action and emotion. Will please most kinds of crowd but the advanced price kept some of my regulars away and as for me I don't like it. Running time, 119 minutes. Played September 28-October 1.—R. A. Poage, Lyric Theatre, Brooksville, Ky. General patronage.

CAPTAIN IS A LADY, THE: Charles Coburn, Billie Burke, Beualh Bondi, Helen Broderick, Helen Westley, Marjorie Main—Some think this good. Others razzed it. Business only fair. Running time, 65 minutes. Played September 18-19.—Ray Peacock, Onalaska Theatre, Onalaska, Wash. Loggers and mill workers patronage.

GOLDEN FLEECING: Lew Ayres, Lloyd Nolan, Rita Johnson—Fair draw only. Seemed to please. Running time, 70 minutes.—A. E. Eliasen, Rialto Theatre, Paynesville, Minn. Rural and small town patronage.

GOLDEN FLEECING: Lew Ayres, Lloyd Nolan, Rita Johnson—Good comedy to fair business. Running time, 71 minutes. Played September 15-16.—M. D. Stewart, Texas Theatre, De Leon, Texas. Small town patronage.

I LOVE YOU AGAIN: William Powell, Myrna Loy, Frank McHugh, Edmund Lowe—Swell picture. Comedy scenes were good. Audience reaction: they all liked it. Played on double feature program with "Santa Fe Marshal." Business good first night; below average second night. Running time, 99 minutes. Played September 25-26.—Irvin Baker, Jr., Roaring Spring Theatre, Roaring Spring, Pa. Rural and small town patronage.

PHANTOM RAIDERS: Walter Pidgeon, Florence Rice—They thought it war picture and stayed away. Poorest business in months. Played September 25-26.—Ray Peacock, Onalaska Theatre, Onalaska, Wash. Loggers and mill workers patronage.

SPORTING BLOOD: Robert Young, Maureen O'Sullivan, Lewis Stone—Very good. Story on training of race horses. Thrilling and interesting and also contains some exciting horse races. Played on double feature with "Private Affairs." Running time, 82 minutes. Played October 2-3.—Irving Baker, Jr., Roaring Spring Theatre, Roaring Spring, Pa. Rural and small town patronage.

SPORTING BLOOD: Robert Young, Maureen O'Sullivan, Lewis Stone—Any location with rural patronage, don't hesitate to play. Good draw and will please. Running time, 82 minutes. Played September 20-21.—R. O. Poage, Lyric Theatre, Brooksville, Ky. General patronage.

WAY OUT WEST (reissue): Laurel and Hardy—We brought this back to extra good business. The reason, we feel, was Foto-Nite, which we play every Monday night.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

WYOMING: Wallace Beery, Leo Carrillo, Ann Rutherford, Marjorie Main, Bobs Watson—Good picture and good business. One of the best from Beery and just as good as "The Bad Man of Brimstone." Play it quick. Running time, 88 minutes. Played October 2-3.—E. M. Freiburger, Paramount Theatre, Dewey, Okla. Small town patronage.

Monogram

SKY PATROL: John Trent, Marjorie Reynolds, Milburn Stone—Only average picture. Played it on dual bill to average weekend business.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

Paramount

COMIN' 'ROUND THE MOUNTAIN: Bob Burns, Una Merkel—Picture only fair but business extra good. Running time, 70 minutes. Played September 17-18.—M. D. Stewart, Texas Theatre, De Leon, Texas. Small town patronage.

COMIN' ROUND THE MOUNTAIN: Bob Burns, Una Merkel—Just fair. No story and not enough comedy. The producer failed to take advantage of the radio stars such as "Uncle Ezra," Don Wilson and many more. Played on Cash Nights. Business good. Running time, 62 minutes. Played September 30-October 1.—Irvin Baker, Jr., Roaring Spring Theatre, Roaring Spring, Pa. Rural and small town patronage.

I WANT A DIVORCE: Joan Blondell, Dick Powell—A very fine feature that could do a world of business if properly exploited. My patrons enjoyed this very much but I didn't sell it any too well so there weren't many to enjoy it. Don't be afraid of this one as it will stand up under anything, and give it all you got. Running time, 80 minutes.—A. E. Eliasen, Rialto Theatre, Paynesville, Minn. Rural and small town patronage.

SANTA FE MARSHAL: William Boyd, Russell Hayden—One of the best Hopalong Cassidy westerns. Pleased everyone including the women. Played on double feature program with "I Love You Again." Running time, 68 minutes. Played September 25-26.—Irving Baker, Jr., Roaring Spring Theatre, Roaring Spring, Pa. Rural and small town patronage.

Republic

COVERED WAGON DAYS: Three Mesquiteers (Robert Livingston, Raymond Hatton, Duncan Renaldo)—These westerns average good and fill the half of our week-end program very satisfactorily.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

GAUCHO SERENADE: Gene Autry, Smiley Burnette, June Storey—Usual Autry business, and that means plenty good. Running time, 66 minutes. Played September 20-21.—Ray Peacock, Onalaska Theatre, Onalaska, Wash. Loggers and mill workers patronage.

GIRL FROM GOD'S COUNTRY: Chester Morris, Jane Wyatt, Charles Bickford—This type always draws a good crowd. Picture well liked. Running time, 70 minutes. Played October 1-2.—M. D. Stewart, Texas Theatre, De Leon, Texas. Small town patronage.

RKO Radio

MY FAVORITE WIFE: Cary Grant, Irene Dunne, Randolph Scott, Gail Patrick—When I saw this last Spring, I decided I would save it for Fall because to me it is the funniest comedy of the year. My wife had an emergency appendicitis operation shortly after laughing at this one a couple of months ago. We held our breath when we played it and, though there was a great amount of laughter, luckily no operations were necessary. A very good crowd enjoyed it thoroughly. This is just what everyone is looking for these days. Running time, 88 minutes. Played October 3.—W. Varick Nevins, III, Alfred Co-Op Theatre, Alfred, N. Y. Small college town and rural patronage.

RAMPARTS WE WATCH: March of Time Documentary—Played this only one day to exceptionally good business. Ran four complete shows with a bargain matinee so everyone could see it. Heard many fine comments on this and no kicks but it did get a trifle long as some told me. A feature of this sort gives us a few things to think about during these times as we are without a doubt doing just the same things today that got us into the last World War. Would suggest that everyone who could show this splendid feature do so as soon as possible. Running time, 87 minutes.—A. E. Eliasen, Rialto Theatre, Paynesville, Minn. Rural and small town patronage.

TOM BROWN'S SCHOOLDAYS: Sir Cedric Hardwicke, Freddie Bartholomew, Jimmy Lydon, Josephine Hutchinson—Satisfactory picture but stars are not box office. Played as second feature with "Walt Disney's Festival of Hits." Average business. Running time.

81 minutes. Played October 4-5.—Irvin Baker, Jr., Roaring Spring Theatre, Roaring Spring, Pa. Rural and small town patronage.

WALT DISNEY FESTIVAL OF HITS: "Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs" and Four Disney Shorts—Includes Cartoon feature "Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs" and four prize winning cartoon. Were very good and were all in color. Played with "Tom Brown's Schooldays." Average business. Running time, 117 minutes. Played October 4-5.—Irving Baker, Jr., Roaring Spring Theatre, Roaring Spring, Pa. Rural and small town patronage.

Twentieth Century-Fox

EARTHBOUND: Warner Baxter, Andrea Leeds—A rather peculiar picture that did not do so well here. Running time, 67 minutes. Played September 22-23.—Ray Peacock, Onalaska Theatre, Onalaska, Wash. Loggers and mill workers patronage.

FOUR SONS: Don Ameche, Mary Beth Hughes, Eugenie Leontovich—It is a well done dramatic story with the mother stealing all the acting honors. It is concerned with the Germans and Czechoslovakia and is extremely depressing. Most people do not come to the theatre to see this type of picture even though it may be very well done like this one. It seemed to hold their interest as there was not a sound from the audience during the unfolding of the story. It drew an average crowd when doubled with "Blondie Has Servant Trouble." Running time, 89 minutes. Played October 4.—W. Varick Nevins, III, Alfred Co-Op Theatre, Alfred, N. Y. Small college town and rural patronage.

MAN I MARRIED, THE: Joan Bennett, Francis Lederer, Lloyd Nolan, Anna Sten—Too much accent on the dialogue; did not take with my people. Maybe too real. Running time, 77 minutes. Played September 8-9.—R. A. Poage, Lyric Theatre, Brooksville, Ky. General patronage.

MARYLAND: Walter Brennan, Fay Bainter, Brenda Joyce, John Payne, Hattie McDaniel, Charlie Ruggles—Well liked by good crowd. Running time, 90 minutes. Palyed October 6-7.—M. D. Stewart, Texas Theatre, De Leon, Texas. Small town patronage.

MARYLAND: Walter Brennan, Fay Bainter, Brenda Joyce, John Payne, Charlie Ruggles, Hattie McDaniel, Ben Carter—Some liked it and some didn't; it is a good show nevertheless . If you happen to run a colored theatre, it is just what the doc ordered for you. Colored players stole the show. Few white actors don't mean a thing. Advertise it "all colored star cast" and you won't make a mistake. Running time, 92 minutes. Played September 29-30.—Steve Chorak, Etna Theatre, Etna, Calif. Rural patronage.

MARYLAND: Walter Brennan, Brenda Joyce, John Payne, Fay Bainter, Charles Ruggles, Hattie McDaniel—Very pretty feature that didn't mean a thing in this spot. Neither "Kentucky" nor "Maryland" drew here, even though I tried "Kentucky" twice but still nothing. Running time, 91 minutes.—E. A. Eliasen, Rialto Theatre, Paynesville, Minn. Rural and small town patronage.

PIER 13: Lloyd Nolan, Lynn Bari—Just a little cops and robbers picture which got by on family night. Running time, 70 minutes. Played October 1.—E. M. Freiburger, Paramount Theatre, Dewey, Okla. Small town patronage.

RETURN OF FRANK JAMES: Henry Fonda, Gene Tierney, Jackie Cooper—Swell entertainment. Both thrilling and exciting. Color was very good. Was not as good as "Jesse James" but it sure did pack 'em in for every performance. Played September 27-28.—Irving Baker, Jr., Roaring Spring Theatre, Roaring Spring, Pa. Rural and small town patronage.

VIVA CISCO KID: Cesar Romero, Jean Rogers—Good western to average Saturday crowd. Running time, 64 minutes. Played September 21.—M. D. Stewart, Texas Theatre, De Leon, Texas. Small town patronage.

YOUNG PEOPLE: Shirley Temple, Charlotte Greenwood, Jack Oakie—Oh, why wait till Shirley's last picture to give her a story. Much better than last of Shirley pictures. Running time, 79 minutes. Played October 4-5.—R. A. Poage, Lyric Theatre, Brooksville, Ky. General patronage.

United Artists

MADE FOR EACH OTHER: James Stewart, Carole Lombard—A very good picture that did only average mid-week business. Played it too late.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

OUR TOWN: Frank Craven, Martha Scott, William Holden, Thomas Mitchell, Fay Bainter, Beulah Bondi, Guy Kibbee, Stuart Erwin—Bad all the way through. They should have knocked off that stupid commentary. Running time, 90 minutes. Played September 1-2.—Steve Chorak, Etna Theatre, Etna, Calif. Rural patronage.

Universal

IT'S A DATE: Deanna Durbin, Kay Francis, Walter Pidgeon—Much better than common. Pleased about 80 per cent. I thought it worth the money. Running time, 100 minutes. Played September 15-16.—R. A. Poage, Lyric Theatre, Brooksville, Ky. General patronage.

PRIVATE AFFAIRS: Hugh Herbert, Nancy Kelly, Roland Young, Robert Cummings—A good little picture. Enough comedy to keep it interesting throughout. Played on double feature program with "Sporting Blood." Business below average. Running time, 74 minutes. Played October 2-3.—Irvin Baker, Jr., Roaring Spring Theatre, Roaring Spring, Pa. Rural and small town patronage.

Warner Brothers

FLOWING GOLD: John Garfield, Pat O'Brien, Frances Farmer—A good crowd liked this one. Running time, 85 minutes. Played September 29-30.—M. D. Stewart, Texas Theatre, De Leon, Texas. Small town patronage.

FLOWING GOLD: Pat O'Brien, John Garfield, Frances Farmer—Very entertaining picture that proved a very big box office flop here. We expected to do very good on this but guess we didn't sell it right as it should have been a honey wherever action pictures are desired. This is good and should be sold good. Running time, 82 minutes.—A. E. Eliasen, Rialto Theatre, Paynesville, Minn. Rural and small town patronage.

KNUTE ROCKNE—ALL AMERICAN: Pat O'Brien, Gale Page, Ronald Reagan, Donald Crisp—Warner Brothers have produced the greatest football picture of all time and for all time to come. And the picture will help to make Knute Rockne the greatest football coach that the world has ever known and anyone seeing the picture will have the feeling that Rockne is the real actor and present throughout his entire coaching career. Everybody will like this picture, both old and young and everybody seeing the picture will be thrilled as they have never been thrilled before and the inspiration for betterment will entrance all young men and women to do the better, decent things in life. Running time, 98 minutes. Played October 5-13.—William Noble, Criterion Theatre, Oklahoma City, Okla. General patronage.

MY LOVE COME BACK: Olivia de Havilland, Jeffrey Lynn, Charles Winninger, Eddie Albert, Jane Wyman—Swell picture to good business in spite of two night football games. Running time, 85 minutes. Played October 3-4.—M. D. Stewart, Texas Theatre, De Leon, Texas. Small town patronage.

MY LOVE CAME BACK: Olivia de Havilland, Jeffrey Lynn, Eddie Albert, Jane Wyman—Excellent entertainment. Many favorable comments. Business above average, especially on the second day. Played September 23-24.—E. B. Bowman, Maxton Theatre, Maxton, N. C. Small town patronage.

SEA HAWK: Errol Flynn, Brenda Marshall, Claude Rains, Alan Hale, Flora Robson, Una O'Connor—Good picture; fair business. This picture is too long and it takes it 40 minutes to get started. Also, it is a costume picture and not so good for small towns in spite of its title. Running time, 126 minutes. Played October 6-7.—E. M. Freiburger, Paramount Theatre, Dewey, Okla. Small town patronage.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE

An international association of showmen meeting weekly in MOTION PICTURE HERALD for mutual aid and progress

A-MIKE VOGEL, Chairman and Editor GERTRUDE MERRIAM, Associate Editor

PRODUCT IS NO GUARANTEE

Due to early theatre training, we developed the habit of running a quick finger over and under surfaces, ledges and other spots even when outside the job. This, of course, was a social error but decidedly a virtue in the theatre where dust can and does hide in the most annoying places.

Dust-hunting is recalled by Ralph Pollock's report on theatre cleanliness, on another page, a policy pursued at the Los Angeles Million Dollar to the extent of having white-gloved ushers continually making the rounds in search of dirt. The same care is exercised in keeping toilet rooms immaculate. In fact, vigilance in all phases of patron-protection is the watchword.

Does it pay? Decidedly, according to Pollock, especially in his independent operation where the picture supply is limited. He writes:

"No doubt, there are hundreds of other theatres that have a poor selection of product and are hampered with other problems that are out of their control. Hence, the writer has mentioned what he has done with factors that sell tickets by going after features that are within one's control. We don't keep our efforts a secret. The patron sees the work going on and he is very certain to be told about it as well in one way or another.

"Incidentally, it took this theatre out of the red."

No theatre, no matter how well-favored, can compete long against opposition of inadequate housekeeping. Pollock's handling presents evidence that a theatre can overcome booking and other handicaps by maintaining and selling a spotless, smart and carefully-checked operation.

In the keenly competitive business of gasoline retailing, one company recently spent thousands of dollars, and successfully, to advertise the cleanliness and comfort of restrooms in filling-stations handling its product.

"WITHIN ONE'S CONTROL"

The heading of this piece, taken from Pollock's quotes above, may well be applied to Bob Griffith's efforts in the same direction. Situated in a section of Chicago where eight houses are fighting for business, and playing behind three of them, the Manta-man decided to build up a steady following by selling the theatre institutionally. How he does it through program copy is set down elsewhere in this section. To be noted, is the boxoffice progress credited to these messages, as attested to by the heartening comments of pleased patrons.

Griffith's findings fit with exactness the pattern of a previous editorial observation here. That, of two opposition houses, with everything else equal, the one additionally supported by consistent and intelligent institutional advertising, will, over a length of time, return the better grosses.

IN WHICH "CORN" IS SOLD

Impressed with the high-laugh voltage of "La Conga Nights," Manager Sidney Miller struck upon the unprecedented device of selling the date in Corsicana, Texas, as the "corniest picture ever made." And, as told in this section, he sold it to an old-fashioned fare-thee-well.

Miller's campaign was all "corn" in every shape and fashion, from corn on the cob, corn in the jug, to "corn on the film." No negative connotation of the word was implied. In the Round Tabler's skilled hands, the term was projected to mean hilarious comedy. That the customers took it that way is written down in the capacity houses the campaign brought.

This is a business of imagination, of initiative. It took a lot of both, plus plenty of "moxie" to launch a campaign so labelled. Miller's shrewd thinking stamps him as possessing these virtues with which expert showmanship is studded.

THE INITIATIVE COUNTS

It becomes time to direct the spotlight in the direction of Warner-ite Marlowe Conner, stepped up by bossman Jim Coston from the subsequent-run Avalon, in Chicago, to the first-run Sheboygan, in Sheboygan, Wisconsin. In the new situation long enough to get the feel of it, Conner now reports in this week's pages to indicate he is taking the bigger assignment in stride.

The Round Tabler's habitual procedure of exploiting dates with an initiative usually reserved tor first-run engagements had much to do with his promotion. That should be encouraging for other managers in the "subsequents" also hitting the ball.

FINDS PROGRAM COPY HELPFUL TO GROSSES

Theatre Services and Equipment Stressed by Griffith Bring Favorable Patron Responses

Situated in the Woodlawn section of Chicago, with opposition of eight houses, the subsequent-run Lex, of the Indiana-Illinois circuit, is being built up institutionally and importantly by Manager Bob Griffith, through the medium of diversified copy on the cover of his weekly program. The run of 5,000 is distributed as follows: 500 in the nearby University dormitories, 300 in the community parking lot near the theatre, 700, from the theatre and the remaining 3,500 house-to-house within the mile area from which the theatre draws.

Measuring three and a half inches by five, the program cover is bordered by art strips according to the season. Those forwarded by the Round Tabler used during the summer, carry polar bear and Eskimo decorations, with identifying "cooled" and theatre slugs topping the copy, as illustrated in the accompanying cut.

Umbrella Service Praised

The copy ranges widely, all bearing on some form of service, not always known to every patron. Set down are some of the most recent examples: The following, for instance, headed "This Way, Please" brought an immediate and noticeable increase in parcel checking:

"Better seats in the second aisle. . . . May I check your parcel? . . . May I help you with your coat? . . . Would you care for a program? . . . There are 101 little courtesies the Lex Theatre Service Staff is eager to extend to each and every patron attending our Comfortably Cooled Theatre."

Griffith notes that the day after a "Storm Warning" program was distributed, there was a heavy rain which filled the theatre's umbrella rack before the end of the first show. This is the copy that did it:

"Don't leave your umbrella at home when the storm clouds threaten—just because it is so clumsy to handle in the theatre. Our Service Staff will gladly check your umbrella as you enter the Lex. Our umbrella service provides a quick check and claim service with no delay to patrons."

"Ice Machine" Spotlighted

Much attention in copy is directed to the cooling plant, such as the message entitled "The Ice Machine," which goes as follows:

"The Veteran Engineer calls it an 'ice machine' and he isn't far wrong either, because our General Electric compressor is capable of producing the cooling effect of 40 tons of ice in a single day. This cooling effect is used to reduce the temperature of the fresh, pure, filtered air which circulates through the Lex to add to your enjoyment of motion pictures."

In inviting the public to phone the theatre for picture information, Griffith reasons that if the house becomes known as the question-and-answer station of the community, it will also be thought of as the leading picture theatre. Under the heading: "Calling Dorchester 1085," the copy follows:

"And then the courteous greeting, 'Good Evening, Lex Theatre'—and at our end of the line we are ready with the answer to 'What's playing today?' . . . 'What time does the next feature start?' . . . 'When does the last show begin?' . . . 'What's playing next week?' . . . and 101 questions about movies and the Lex Theatre. We are always glad to have you call Dorchester 1085.

Recognition of the traffice hazards for children in the congested section of the theatre is made in the "Safety Zone" copy, reproduced in the next column. And as a measure to emphasize the theatre's projection equipment, Bob wrote a piece called "Pictures for Sale":

"Our business is selling pictures . . . large, clear, rock-steady motion pictures projected on to the finest new Even Light screen. That is why the Lex Theatre is equipped with the finest and most modern sound and projection equipment. There is no eye strain when watching a good motion picture at the Lex."

Tying up with the local paper which runs the "Blondie" comic strip, Round Tabler Stan Andrews of the Capitol Theatre in Guelph, Ontario, promoted the executives for a streamer reading: "See Blondie in the Movies at the Capitol."

Loewmen Prepare For Election Day

The wide public interest in the Presidential and state elections of this year is being recognized in the Loew-Poli Theatres by a drive instituted by Harry Shaw and Lou Brown to impress upon all divisional managers the benefits to be had by keeping patrons informed of how the nation is voting.

Bulletins to all situations emphasize the value of tying in with local newspapers to furnish election results to the theatre, the suggestion being forwarded that a hookup be made exclusive wherever possible. To this extent, the managers are authorized to give papers a one-frame trailer with copy somewhat along these lines: "Read the Times Star for the most authoritative election news." Trailer is to be run four days in advance. In such cooperations, it is intended that the paper will aid by mentioning the returns to be announced from the theatre stage. Posters out front and copy in the regular advertising are also listed.

Where it is found impractical to tie in with papers, efforts are to be made to work with radio stations for the furnishing of bulletins and announcements of the service over the air. Stations are to be compensated with one-frame trailer similar to that to be given the papers.

Tieup with paper or radio station for the planting of teletype in the lobby is also favored as is broadcast of election programs and bulletins from the theatre.

Hunters Compete For Conner Prizes

At Warners' Sheboygan, in Sheboygan, Wisc., long enough to learn his way around, Marlow Conner, recently promoted to that spot from Chicago, has turned loose some of his exploitation ammunition, most currently on "The Biscuit Eater," to tie in with the hunting enthusiasm in that sector. Announced as a hunting party and sports show, the event took the form of a draw contest for $250 of hunting equipment promoted by the Round Tabler which included shotguns, outboard motor, kayak, hunting coats, caps, socks, hip boots, hunting knives and shells.

Conner used a novelty hunting license herald to advertise the party and had a speaker from the state conservation department for added atmosphere. After the successful drawing, Marlowe invited the audience to rise and look under their seats where a number of passes had been planted.

On "Foreign Correspondent," an easel was placed out front and labelled "latest bulletins from your foreign correspondent as issued by the Sheboygan Press." Runner from the paper brought clippings every half-hour to be pasted in the easel and displayed long before the flashes were published in the regular editions. For "Howards," Conner used the social columns to note the Howards would be in town on the following Sunday to visit friends at the theatre. This was followed by inviting all the local Howards to the picture, their comments run in the following day's ads.

MILLER HAS WHOLE TOWN BUZZING ON "LA CONGA" NIGHTS CAMPAIGN

Texas Interstater Builds Date Around "Corn" Exploitations for Unusual Returns; Want Ad "Personals" Cause Excitement

The city of Corsicana, Texas, named "Cornycana" for the date and the changing of "La Conga Nights" to "La Corny Nights," proved to be the advertising spearheads of the unusual campaign put over by Manager Sidney Miller, in selling the picture as the "corniest ever made" for the showing at the Ideal, in that situation.

In no sense derogatory, the "corny" slant was stressed in selling the attraction as "one of the funniest pictures ever," with everything used in the campaign tied to corn in one fashion or another. This was brought out, for instance, in letters wrapped around corn cobs and delivered to newspaper editors, radio announcers, barbers, and other news channels. The letters announced that when brought to the theatre, the cobs would serve as guest tickets.

Prizes Offered Non-Laughers

To build up the hilarity, Miller offered prizes to those who could sit through a screening without laughing. Contestants were required to eat a sack of popcorn before the showing to "put them in the mood." In addition to a month's term pass to the winner, other prizes were a case of corn, a case of corn starch, pan of corn bread and a bottle of corn remover. Winner, interviewed on the radio, admitted he wanted to laugh but was prevented by a number of green persimmons he had eaten in advance.

The slant further emphasized in advance foto-night stage contests, included a corn shucking competition and games which required the entrants to carry grains of corn between their toes from a pile in the center to the side of the stage. These tieins allowed for extra plugging on the date.

Miller also hooked election time to the showing with a candidate named "I. M. Corn," running for Assessor and Collector of Laughs. The "candidate," on crutches, canvassed the town distributing gag election cards which explained his condition as due to broken ribs brought on by laughing at the picture. At the theatre, three boys were employed to "picket," their cards reading that the attraction was unfair to the Corn Huskers Union.

Novelty Heralds Amusing

Novelty herald ideas were in keeping. Under cuts of two smiling youngsters, one carried copy declaring they had "seen corn in the field, on the cob and in poppa's jug, but that's the first time we have seen corn on film." Another, in the form of an envelope, contained grains of popcorn, imprint reading, "enclosed is a scene from," etc. Yet another herald spotted a cartoon cut of Hugh Herbert, a number of which showed an ear of corn sprouting from the star's ear. These entitled the holders to free admission (see cut).

Lobby decoration centered around corn stalks and "corny" copy. Special set piece held corn in the can, corn on the cob, corn in the jug, with the attraction follow-through of "corn on the film." Cashiers cooperated by making and wearing corn necklaces, which became a popular local fashion.

Highly successful, too, was a series of classified teaser "personals," wherein a "Margie" and a "Lucille" exchanged information, on different days, regarding "father's broken ribs" and the accident which caused it. The undue excitement caused by the ads made it advisable to disclose the "snapper" before he intended to do so, reports the Round Tabler.

Ryan Ties Serial To Kid Contest

Cancellation of a kiddie's pushmobile contest sponsored by one of the dailies, gave Joe Ryan an opportunity to step in and tie the disappointed juveniles to a promotion for his opening of the "Deadwood Dick" serial at the Eastman, St. Cloud, Minn. The youngsters who had built pushmobiles for the races were instructed to convene at one spot, where Ryan arranged to have their cars lettered and to parade to the theatre for a free showing. Publicity buildup was given the event by leading columnist on the paper on Joe's suggestion.

To impress the same serial upon the children of Yazoo City, Miss., Manager Clara Schmitt of the Yazoo, made the first chapter available to the youngsters at a two-cent admission.

Film Local Games For Circuit Dates

Minneapolis high school home-coming football teams are being featured in a series of exclusive shorts to be shown at the Minneapolis amusement houses in a tiein between the circuit, local Tribune newspapers and Officials and Coaches Association. The footage is taken by the newspapers during games on Friday and open the next day first-run at the downtown State. Following this, they play downtown second-run dates and are then shown in the circuit's suburban theatres. Introduction of each film is made by sports editors of both papers, play by play comment being furnished by other members of the staffs.

At the end of the season, newspapers and the circuit will throw a gigantic theatre party for all teams, coaches, faculties, parents, etc. During the celebration, each team will be presented with the film of the game screened in addition to a sportsmen's trophy for the best sportsman of each aggregation.

The project officially launched and endorsed by all the city's high school coaches, at a screening of "Knute Rockne," was worked out by C. B. Stiff, district manager of the circuit's Twin City theatres and Everett Seibel, Minneapolis Amusement publicity department head. It is reported here by Charlie Winchell, advertising director, as one of the best goodwill and box-office stunts yet contributed to induce high school attendance.

University Players Participate On Holdsberg's "Rockne" Date

Starting early in August, the advance campaign for "Knute Rockne" at the Des Moines, in Des Moines, Ia., was inaugurated by Manager Harry Holdsburg with a newspaper tiein plugging the coming series on the life of the famed coach, the introduction being made via a full roto page in the magazine section. The series, which ran weekly, was followed in September by publicity on the alumni preview and the South Bend opening was also given elaborate attention early in October.

Week ahead, theatre staff wore lettered football sweaters and head gear. Sweat shirts with picture copy were distributed among high schools and local colleges to be worn at practice and during school hours.

Highlight of the exploitation on opening day was a street stunt of throwing three footballs from the 13th floor of the Register Tribune building at noon. The Drake University football regulars in uniform were on hand to catch the balls and after the final try, balloons were released, some containing tickets to the picture. The stunt, as expected, tied up traffic for blocks, which was further utilized by Holdsburg for wide distribution of heralds in the crowds, plugging the stunt and opening of picture.

Radio tieins were prominent, most important being guest tickets awarded on score contest staged by Station WHO.

Outside current display for "Spring Parade" at the New York Roxy covering 17 feet from side to side was given a background of white shiny oilcloth against which figures and credits were emphasized as here noted. All copy constructed of two layers of laminated celotex, which in turn was covered by specially mounted red leather.

Round Table in Pictures

Colorful was lobby stunt arranged by Manager R. E. Russell for "Down Argentine Way" at the Loew's Poli, in New Haven, with ushers dressed in conga blouses of various hues, hats, cumerbunds and silk badges advertising the date. Appropriate conga music was played while flashing colored bulbs helped simulate the technicolor in the picture.

To get across the title "Strike Up the Band," Round Tabler Sam Gilman at Loew's Theatre, in Dayton, Ohio, created realistic lobby setpiece which was featured ahead and during run. Seated on raised platform was cutout of Mickey Rooney behind promoted drums and cymbals, picture title in flitter on main drum. At base of display were scene stills, flanked on either side by life-size cutouts of Rooney and Garland. Traps were finished in mother of pearl, entire display being illuminated from the rear.

That the Philippines also go in for giant displays is evidenced at left showing how Clifford Almy, Warner manager in Manila, exploited date on "All This, and Heaven Too" at the Capitol Theatre. Large cutouts of Davis and Boyer were set against blowup copy of the book, flittered title letters extending from one end of lobby to the other.

Cocks Hooks Acts to Street Stunts

Playing name bands and unit stage shows at the Strand Theatre, in Syracuse, Harvey Cocks has been consistently telling the folks about it in a series of comprehensive exploitations, most recently on Cab Calloway and the "Funzafire" unit, starring Benny Meroff.

For the latter, the Schiner caused a lot of necks to crane with his street stunts wherein three boys dressed as Napoleon, Santa Claus in a bathing suit and man dressed as a woman paraded streets with appropriate gag back banners. Old model "T" Ford painted with crazy copy carried the same three characters through the main streets of the city.

Day ahead of opening, Meroff had his entire company out distributing cards with peanuts attached and copy reading "Do you want to go nuts? See," etc., etc. Aggregation consisted of a midget, fat man weighing 450 pounds, line of chorus girls, stooges, etc. Another street bally stressed a sound truck with laughing record which covered factories, schools and other spots where crowds congregated. Cocks also took Meroff over to leading ballroom night before opening, where the star was introduced and plugged the show. Chorus girls were used for radio interviews out front of theatre.

Night Clubs Cooperate

Exploitation on Cab Calloway consisted of announcements at all night clubs before and during the engagement, all "juke" boxes played the leader's records, while barker in front of house using the p. a. system one hour before each show, gave forth a sprightly spiel. Music store mailed out letters on new record counter, also plugging the date. Fleet of taxis carried bumper cards "Take a Cab to see Cab Calloway," and chain druggist featured a "Hi-De-Ho" sundae which was plugged on mirrors and windows in all stores. Sound truck with public address system going full steam rode throughout the city opening day calling attention to the engagement. Stickers were placed on all records and sheet music sold during the run, and boys carried large banners down main street during rush hours.

Cocks also employed his radio outlets to spread the word, among the top broadcasts being the one on the life of the band leader, the cast being composed of negro artists. The date was also given the prestige of national attention through Milt Herth's coast-to-coast broadcast.

"LET'S HEAR FROM YOU"

Irwin Dresses Lobby For "Pago Pago"

Entire front of the Lyceum Theatre, in Duluth, Minn., was dressed in overhanging cedar boughs and palms as part of George Irwin's campaign on "South of Pago Pago." Large cutouts of the various stars were featured and title cutout letters were hung from under marquee.

Reported as clicking for the theatreman, was his chuckle ad contest on "The Sea Hawk." Planted on classified ad page, entrants were invited for guest tickets to scan ads on that page and create their own humorous ads.

Rules for the Quigley Awards

Awards are now voted on single exploitations and not on complete campaigns as formerly. This includes goodwill and institutional ideas, as well as those on pictures.

Each Quarter is divided into two-week preliminary contests.

Winners in each preliminary are appointed Fortnighters.

Entries of Fortnighters in each Quarter are judged for Quarter-Master Plaques, Medals, Citations.

Quarter-Master Plaque, Medal and Citation Winners are appointed Quarter-Masters.

Entrants registering the best records of Quigley Plaques, Medals and Citations in the four Quarters will be eligible for the Grand Awards judging.

There are no classifications of population or situation. Everyone starts from scratch.

There are no deadlines. All entries will be considered in the period in which they are received.

All product is eligible—features, shorts, serials. Also stage shows, amateur presentations, etc.

More than one idea may be included in one entry but Preliminary Awards will be voted for best individual idea.

No fancy entries are necessary. With the usual "evidence", submit brief description and "reasons why" an entry should be considered.

At this writing, the first Fortnight of the Fourth Quarter has passed, with seven more to go until the end of the Fourth Quarter. It is to be kept in mind that, with everything equal, theatremen who score more often in the Fortnighters will receive greater consideration in voting the Quarter-Master Awards.

Credits Business to Care of House

Putting a house in the black with a policy of minute cleanliness and patron services, is the story reported by Manager Ralph G. Pollack, of the Million Dollar, in Los Angeles, an independent operation with a limited selection of product. Among the "musts" carried through by the theatreman and impressed upon his public, conspicuous is the cleaning, every hour on the hour, of all rest rooms, with ushers making the rounds every 15 minutes to check. Every third day, the toilets and other places needing similar attention are gone over with a solution 14 times stronger than the usual disinfectant.

Dust control is maintained by a daily routine wherein one of the staff wearing white gloves goes through the house touching every possible place where patrons might contact. If and when the gloves are soiled, the maintenance department is contacted immediately to repair the situation.

Cooling Plant Featured

Functioning of the air-conditioning plant is publicly spotlighted by a series of auxiliary fans placed throughout the house and to which ribbons or flags are attached so that the action of the units are visually impressed upon patrons.

All the balcony rails are painted in enamel white, to assist patrons seeking seats and to make egress easier if the occasion warrants. On the job constantly, is a rug stitcher who goes over all rugs carefully in order to forestall any claims upon the theatre for neglect of service due to accidents by falls, etc.

Since lobby easels are restricted by local ordinances, Pollock by careful planning has increased selling space by 50 percent by such devices as the installation of overhead signs, additional side panels, and use of back of boxoffice for coming attractions. Every panel is framed so as to give the best display visibility.

"LET'S HEAR FROM YOU"

Chamber Cooperation Secured By Russell on "Boom Town"

Reported as a first time that New Haven newspapers have ever run co-op ads with theatre mention, Bob Russell at Loew's Poli for "Boom Town," landed numerous breaks from merchants tied directly to the picture. Chamber of Commerce cooperated wholeheartedly by writing to every downtown store suggesting that they tie up with the theatre management. Russell contacted 136 stores, the majority of them using title slugs in the papers, window cards and streamers.

Additional newspaper coverage included a contest, cuts were run of the upper portions of the faces of the four stars appearing in the picture, guests tickets going to those giving correct names. Serialization was planted, full page new season plug was run in the Journal Courier and a new season slogan contest landed in the New Haven Register. Directorial signs were posted on all telephone poles and trees on roads leading into the city, fashion standees placed in leading stores, movie radio guide magazines with title strip across cover were distributed.

EXPLOITATION BRIEFS FROM A-FIELD

Laugh effect record was used by Joe Nevinson at the Bromley in Philadelphia for "Turnabout" in front of his regular trailer, using single frame reading: "Pardon us for laughing, but you'll laugh too when you see," etc. Gadget lobby display was made up week ahead with appropriate screwball tiein copy. Street bally consisted of man walking streets with his clothes on backwards, clothing arranged so that his head was not visible. Another bally man carried a dummy head with back banner saying he laughed his head off at the picture. Newspaper advertising was planted up-side-down and teaser novelties were distributed.

Ending right before school opened was the six-week kid contest planned by Milton D. Levy at the Commercial Theatre, in Chicago, with a series of preliminary events held each weekday for five weeks in front of the theatre and at local parks. The semi-finals were held on the theatre stage every Saturday afternoon for five weeks with promoted prizes going to winners.

"We hope you like your seat and trust that we'll have the pleasure of seating you at 'Boom Town!'" That was the message to patrons of the Warner Ritz, in Clarksburg, W. Va., printed on cards and signed by the staff of ushers, handed out in advance of the "Boom Town" showing by Lee Byers as part of his campaign.

Creating plenty of comment locally was Doc Twedt's stunt of growing whiskers for his date on "Virginia City" at the Lido, in Manly, Iowa. Starting six weeks ahead, much was made over the hirsute adornment in local papers, which gave due credits to the theatreman, picture and playdates.

WALLPAPER HERALD TELLS ABOUT "GIRLS"

The old reliable wall paper herald reappeared recently for the date on "Too Many Girls" at the RKO Virginia, in Champaign, Ill., when Manager Grant A. Martin used the slant widely on the eve of the university's opening game.

Copy was in form of an invitation to participate in the world premiere, the names of the cast listed as the committee. The snapper, that the paper had been scraped off the walls to make room at the theatre, was used as a P.S.

Planting the "Do You Know Your America" contest in the Cleveland Plain Dealer ahead of "The Howards of Virginia" at the Warner Hippodrome, Dave Bachner of the advertising department through tieup with the paper offered cash prizes to winners with admissions to runners up. Running for four days, much free space was garnered, winding up opening day with list of winners.

An old jallopy of the "Andy Hardy" genus toured the streets of Kansas City and visited football games in the city and vicinity as part of the "Strike Up the Band" campaign put over by John McManus for the film's showing at the Midland. Film credits were painted in bright yellow on the body and banners hung from front and rear of the car. All this was topped by cutouts of Mickey Rooney and Judy Garland anchored in the rear seat.

Playing up the "giant" angle in "Dr. Cyclops," Robert Roberts, assistant manager of the Majestic, in Stuttgart, Ark., promoted numerous merchants for windows, in all of which the colossal line was stressed. Five and ten featured display with tiein copy reading: "You don't need the eyes of Dr. Cyclops to see our values," etc., etc. Giant values in refrigerators were plugged, Cyclops sundaes featured and street bally consisted of man dressed to represent the inventor in the picture.

To start off his Red Ryder serial, Charles Rich, at the Surf Theatre, in Brooklyn, promoted for giveaway to the kids cake, candy, and school supplies consisting of desk sets, brief cases, fountain pen and pencil sets and Mickey Mouse bags.

Dick Schacht, at the Badger Theatre, in Merrill, Wis., in advance of "Andy Hardy Meets Debutante" dressed a couple in formal attire and had them ride on the back of an old bannered Ford to represent Mickey and Judy. Car was equipped with p. a. system, which plugged the picture and playdates as it toured the city. In addition, Schacht promoted a page of co-op ads, each merchant plugging the attraction.

With the Mayor and Business Association endorsing his "Happiness Week" recently held at the Schine Piqua, in Piqua, Ohio, Robert Anthony constructed a special lobby display consisting of a laughing clown and balloons, each of the following carrying copy on one of his forthcoming attractions. Full page of co-op ads was sold to the merchants, entire front was decorated in holiday attire with pennants which were strung around the marquee reading "Schine's Happiness Week," and all three sheets and window cards were sniped with Happiness Week copy.

Distributed to all homes in his district and the surrounding area were heralds gotten out by W. A. Popham for his theatre's 10th anniversary at the Roxy, in Saskatoon, Saskatchewan. Merchants' ads in center spread paid for entire cost of printing and distributing. Contest angle was brought in by burning anniversary candle in lobby with guest tickets going to those coming closest to guessing when the candle would extinguish itself. Birthday cake was promoted.

Ahead of "They Drive By Night" at the Ohio Theatre, in Canton, Ohio, Manager W. D. Harwell promoted local fleet of trucks for bannering its sides. Copy read: "See trucks like these as they drive by night." This was followed by theatre and playdates.

LATE NEWSPAPER ADVERTISEMENTS

AN OPEN LETTER

September, 27, 1940.

Dear Jack:

A bunch of the boys at the club were gabbing about things in general, the war, politics and what have you.

"What this country needs," said one, "is not only a good five cent cigar, but a good laugh!"

Yeah, he said it—a good laugh, and he didn't mean from political speeches.

"Where you gonna get it?" said another as he nonchalantly trumped his partner's act. "Even the comic strips are getting serious!"

What does that prove, Jack? It proves that the average man is hungry for some good, light entertainment—plenty of hokum with a lot of belly laughs.

As far as I'm concerned, the search is ended. Right now they can saunter over to the Rialto Theatre, lay their dough on the line and see "The Boys From Syracuse." If Martha Raye, Joe Penner, Charles Butterworth, Alan Jones, Eric Blore and Alan Mowbray don't lay them in the aisles screaming, then I've lost my sense of humor!

Try this prescription yourself, Jack. It's good for what ails you!

As ever,
STANLEY LAMBERT,

Rise and Sit
...but Steel can take it!

There's a lot to a good theater chair that escapes the unknowing eye — especially when comfortable upholstering hides construction of ARMCO Special-Quality Steel.

Yet it is important to you, the theater executive, to know that your chairs are built of special-quality steel, carefully chosen for this exacting purpose. This is important to your patrons too.

For one thing, ARMCO Special-Quality Steel can be formed perfectly into a comfortable chair of modern design. And all-welded as it is, there is no chance of faulty joinings. The weld is as strong as the steel itself. Steel chairs, moreover, do not creak and groan. They're solid and durable.

Wherever the steel is exposed it is given a handsome finish, securely bonded with the metal. This relieves the monotony of complete fabric covering and is pleasing to the eye and touch.

When it comes time to replace your chairs, insist upon steel construction—ARMCO Steel. You'll get a better-looking chair, a sturdier chair, and one that will definitely save you replacement dollars in years to come.

The frame is built of ARMCO Special-Quality Steel welded for strength and solidity. Owners are assured of long, economical service.

This modern theater chair gains its beauty of line and strength of construction from the all-welded frame of ARMCO Special-Quality Steel.

Patron's Choice On Double Features

In discussing the scheme of his dual-auditorium theatre in Alhambra, Calif., James Edwards, Jr., of the Edwards Theatres Circuit of Los Angeles, revealed some ideas concerning such an arrangement that definitely take it out of the classification of novelty. The theatre is pictured elsewhere in this issue (pages 14 and 15). In a letter accompanying descriptive data, Mr. Edwards comments:

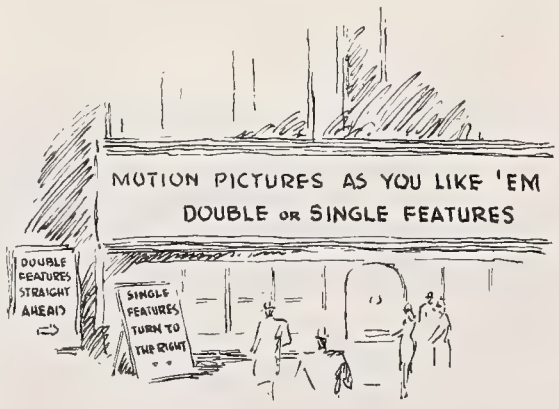
James Edwards, Jr.

"In an article of a recent issue of the Saturday Evening Post, Samuel Goldwyn said, 'The double-feature is killing the movie industry and the panic is on in Hollywood. The long shows discourage attendance and three out of four people want single-bills. Hollywood is sick because of the diminished box office receipts.' Mr. Goldwyn proposed legislation or government regulation that would result in forcing all theatres to show single-bills. In such an event, Hollywood would still be sick, because, while the single-bill patron would be pleased, what would happen to the double-bill fan?"

Public Is Kidding Us!

Then Mr. Edwards referred to the Gallup poll which brought forth figures indicating that the majority of people prefer double-bills, "if both pictures are good," and which startled some good people of our business with the statement that millions of people don't go to the movies at all, or rarely. Mr. Edwards sees a connection between this and his dual theatre. He comments:

"Our experience in the operation of theatres has always been that folks vote for singles, then buy doubles!



"Perhaps in the last few years we have been forcing the single-bill fans to see two pictures against their will—if they went to the movies at all. Result: Many did not go as often, hence a partial explanation of the drop from eighty-five million average weekly patrons in 1930 to but fifty-four million the week of July 13-19, 1940. Wouldn't we be committing another wrong upon the movie-goer and drive the motion picture industry closer to bankruptcy if we again attempted to force some of our patrons to see one feature when they wanted to see two?

"That was our problem. What could be done to regain the eighty-five million weekly average attendance? Should the operators of the 17,000 theatres in the United States throw up their hands and quit? Should they acknowledge defeat and admit that the business heads of other fields of entertainment—radio, bowling, etc.—could do a better job?

Public Divided Into Three Groups

"The average American movie theatre has on its hands the job of pleasing three, separate and distinct types of patrons: One, the single-bill patron; two, the double-bill patron; three, the double-bill patron who has already seen one of the features on the twin-bill program."

And to please all three, Mr. Edwards built an Annex on his Alhambra theatre, providing two auditoriums. How it works is explained in conjunction with the pictures of the house. Here we have only to add Mr. Edwards' interpretation of the scheme in its significance to the double-bill issue:

►"What does this new theatre mean to the movie industry? Well, the proof of the pudding is in its eating! Since the opening of the second auditorium, the Alhambra theatre's business has increased 31%, which figure, taken nationally, would place us well on the road to the restoration of the eighty-five million weekly attendance!"

Rural, But Not Hicks

An important phase of the theatre decentralization movement which, setting in a few years after the depression sobered us all, has been "taking the movies to the people," is the establishment and improvement of exhibition plants in towns that had been judged too small to have a theatre, or that had theatres in no way equipped to present motion pictures according to modern standards. The development, growth, success and progressive methods of the St. Cloud Amusement Corporation, operating in northwestern New Jersey, are an interesting expression of today's small town role in this business. They are described elsewhere in these pages.

Alvin Sloan (seated) and Clifton E. Smith, who head operation of the St. Cloud Amusement Corporation group of theatres, discussing an issue of their weekly "newspaper" at circuit headquarters in the town of Washington, N. J.

►One of the examples of enterprise offered by this rural circuit is a local newsreel. Alvin Sloan, general manager of the circuit, has worked this out rather differently from the manner in which this idea is usually applied. The details will be the subject of an article in the November issue of Better Theatres.

Now operating in a number of small towns, the organization has a plan for a motor highway theatre that is very provocative. This theatre would be incorporated in a countryside development, with attractive and commodious automobile parking facilities as part of the scheme.

It would not be one of those drive-in see-your-favorite-star-through-a-windshield things, but a bona fide theatre, capable of legitimate, high-standard presentation of motion pictures, yet bringing theatrical entertainment even closer to rural folk, while offering a dropping-in place to town people out for a drive. In England, such country theatres, located at intersections of important highways, are rather common—Oscar Deutsch's Odeon circuit has made a good thing of the idea. For some reason, it has not impressed American exhibitors. Mr. Sloan's scheme may prove a starter.

South American Way

WE HEAR a great deal these days about the advancement of trade between North and South America. The average American cannot realize what it often means in the terms of actual commercial processes. A new theatre project came to our attention a couple of weeks ago which suggested a little description here for those "average Americans" who are also theatre operators and managers. They have well-stocked dealers at their doors, and technical knowledge on every hand. But consider what many an exhibitor among our Latin American neighbors has to go through to achieve the same thing. The new Teatro Colombia in Bogota affords a good example. Our data comes from Kenneth Streuber, export manager of the National Theatre Supply Company.

"Although just completed," Mr. Streuber explained, "this job was started back in 1937. We got a phone call from the company in charge of the project. They wanted complete specifications on projection layout, stage, screen size and location, lighting, and so on, before they even started on architectural plans. That's rather reversing the procedure used in the United States, but maybe it isn't such a bad idea. In fact, they wanted us to specify even the color scheme for the stage decorations, drapes, etc., and as it turned out, they arranged the color scheme of the whole theatre from these specifications. Of course, their engineers and architects came up to New York, which is no mean trip to make, and probably more correspondence went on concerning this one job in a week than American exhibitors, with rare exceptions, have ever had relative to a whole group of houses in a month. They even visited factories and theatres to make sure they were getting what they wanted."

But that was mere planning. The headaches started with shipment and financial arrangements. Mr. Streuber went on:

"Duty in Colombia is levied on the gross weight of the shipment and the tariff is according to classes of goods. When a package has different articles, the duty is based on that article which carries the highest rate, even if it's a little piece of fabric. Well, this meant setting up all equipment in the factory here, making the necessary tests, then taking the equipment apart for packaging so as to get the lowest duty rate. For example, a stage curtain all sewn ready for installation takes a higher duty than one in pieces ready to be sewn together. We shipped these curtains pinned together, with carefully written instructions how to sew them.

"Then shipment—that was something. The altitude of Bogota is about 9,000 feet. Freight is most economically transported by steamer up the Magdelena river, then by truck to Bogota. But the river is wont to dry up, so the most dependable method is to railroad and truck across the mountains. You had to guess which was best to do, and take your chances."

From 1937 to 1940 for one theatre project. But it is finished now — and a splendid theatre the Teatro Colombia is, as pictures below indicate.

Plastic Screens

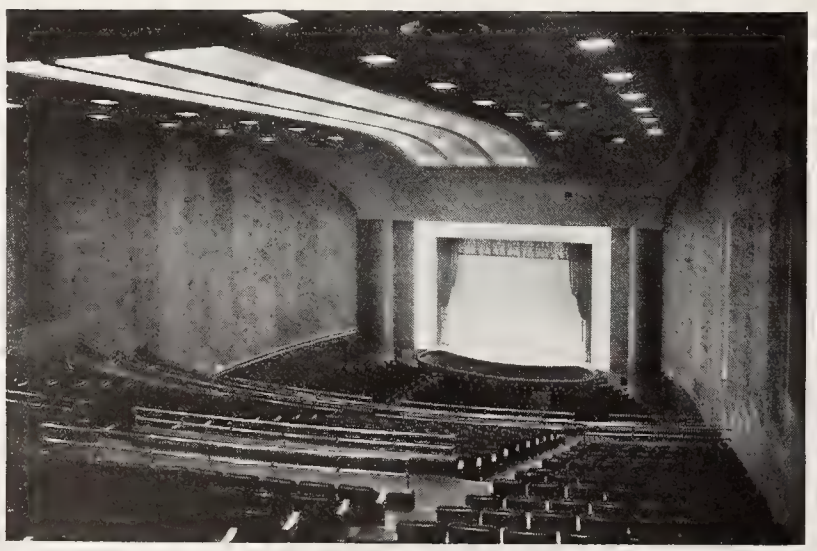
Screens are going to be identified, henceforth, as plastic, or non-plastic. So, at least, one is led to believe by the apperance of screens so identified by their manufacturers.

A screen which the Da-Lite Screen Company brought out in 1928—the so-called Da-Tone X—was said by its maker to have a plastic surface. A short time later, a Da-Tone Z screen was marketed as also a plastic type, with certain fire-resisting chemicals added. Pyroxylin plastics were used in the manufacture of both types.

The two new plastic screens, however, seem, on the basis of data divulged, to carry the method to the point of creating what might be called a synthetic fabric with an integrated surface.

The Hurley plastic screen distributed by RCA is described by the latter as a specially treated fibre pulp on cloth backing, with a smooth surface of extremely high reflective power and, because of the smoothness, great freedom from accumulation of dirt. The Hurley screen is also extremely thin, reducing the diameter of perforation per unit of sound transmission.

New Screen Demonstrated



The plastic screen brought out by Walker-American Corporation of St. Louis, for distribution through National Theatre Supply Company, was demonstrated before a group of theatre and trade press people in New York recently. The reflecting surface of the new screen is a plastic which is moulded on the fabric backing through a process of manufacture which carries the plastic surface through the sides of the perforations to the back of the screen. The smooth perforation walls thus created are said to be much less susceptible to accumulating dust, efficiency of sound transmission being accordingly preserved.

Additional protection against accumulation of dust and general soiling is provided by a process of moisture-proofing the fabric, designed to prevent roughening of the reflecting surface as a result of moisture loosening its bonds with the fabric.

As still further protection against dust the screen is made in one piece, regardless of size, eliminating all seams.

The pigment used, described as amorphocrystalline, gives a somewhat different color tone than that previously employed in Walker screens. At the comparative showing in New York, the new screen did appear to give more pleasing tones in black-and-white, and somewhat greater naturalness in color pictures. The new screen projects a brighter picture toward central seating sections, but has somewhat greater fadeaway toward the sides. It is not, however, as directional as a beaded screen, but appears to be a diffusing screen with semi-directional properties.

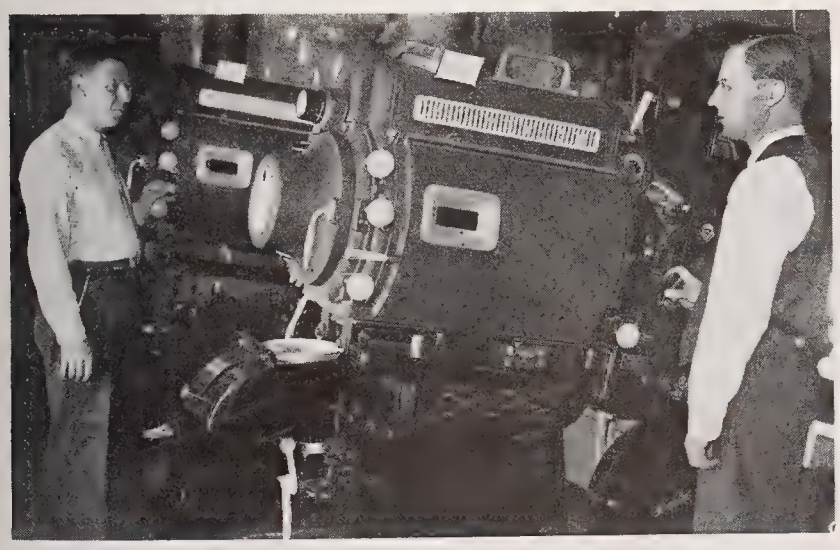
Indicating what our neighbors to the South are doing these days theatrewise. These are views of the new Teatro Colombia in Bogota, designed by Guillermo Herrera Carrizosa and built by F. T. Ley & Company, which has an American branch. The auditorium seats 2,800, with over half in the balcony. The building also contains a cabaret (beneath the balcony), a broadcasting studio, and a bar on the ground floor accessible from the theatre interior. The auditorium walls are treated with J-M Permacoustic (ceramic acoustical tile), while nearly all of the equipment, including complete stage rigging and drapes, lighting and seating (by International Seat Corporation) are from American manufacturers. The theatre, awarded a prize by the city, is the property of Compania Nacional de Construcciones. The program consists mainly in motion pictures with a few stage acts on some days of the week.

A story of Showmanship in the country

Progress at a Profit in Rural Circuit Operation

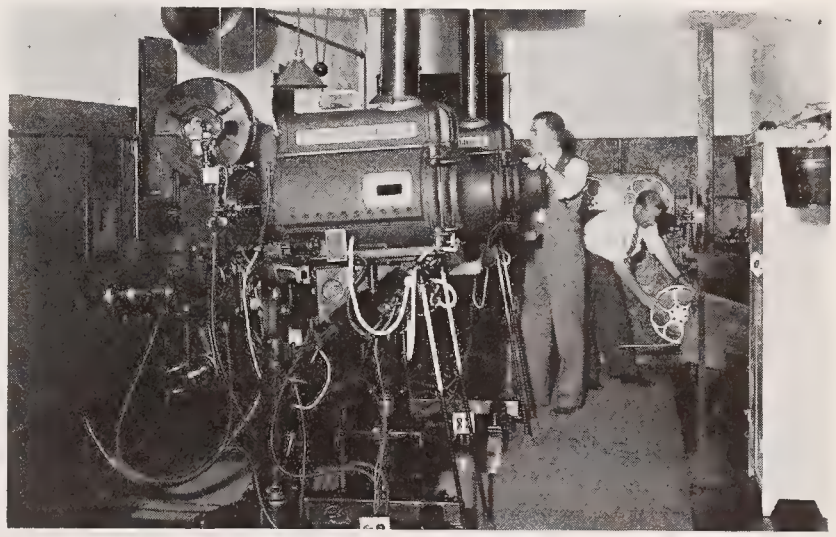
By GEORGE SCHUTZ

THE FARM country and little towns of New Jersey beyond the metropolitan area associated with New York City, and including Newark and Jersey City, are not fundamentally different from rural sections in other parts of the nation. Nine years ago, in one of these Jersey towns — Hampton — Alvin Sloan, who some years before had been a projectionist, but latterly had worked in other fields than showbusiness, rented a ramshackle building called Minerva Hall, and began to exhibit motion pictures in it every Saturday night. Today, as the general manager of the St. Cloud Amusement Company, he operates a dozen theatres which form a rural circuit with standards of operation, in all the essentials of motion picture presentation, that many a city theatre cannot match.



This is not a story of personal enterprise, although it might well be. It is, rather, a description of methods—methods which have made permanent, well equipped theatres in little country towns, entirely compatible with profits.

Altogether, the St. Cloud Amusement Company operates in nine towns. All but one of these are in northwestern New Jersey; the Casino in Mt. Pocono, Pa., is operated during the summer only. As may be seen in the accompanying map, the St. Cloud circuit has sliced off a compact rural territory nicely patterned to avoid severe city and circuit competition. This territory is intensively cultivated to develop the motion picture habit and to keep the people conscious of the sources of fine motion picture entertainment nearest to their homes. The theatres themselves—made more and more physically attractive as income permits, kept spic and span all the time, and with fine projection—do the rest.



Map of northwestern New Jersey showing (in shaded areas) territory in which the St. Cloud circuit operates, and the adjoining cities controlled by affiliated or other influential circuits.

The growth of the group indicates the success of the policy adopted by Mr. Sloan and his associates, which include Clifton E. Smith, who has been in showbusiness, one way and another, most of his life. Mr. Smith has taken film buying and booking as his special end of the business, while Mr. Sloan looks after physical operation and institutional promotion. A year after the little Saturday-show venture in Hampton (long since discontinued), Mr. Sloan and his colleaques built the St. Cloud theatre in Washington, a town of 4,400 population. Three years later, in 1935, they took over operation of the Clinton Point in Clinton, which has a population of only 900. The Clinton Point had been built by Hugh Kent, who also erected the rustic-style Barn theatre in Frenchtown, which the St. Cloud circuit began to operate last year. The Washington theatre in Washington was leased in 1935. Followed the Belvidere, built in Belvidere, a town of 2,200, in 1937; the Sussex in Sussex, which has a population of 1,400, taken over in 1938; the Court Square in Newton, population 6,000, built in 1939; the Barn in Frenchtown, population 1,200; Roy's theatre in Blairstown, population 500, also acquired in 1939; the Branchville in Branchville, population 500, and the Newton in Newton, both taken over this year. The Branchville is operated only Saturday nights; all the rest, however, operate daily, with the Washington and Court Square presenting daily matinees, and most of the others operating continuously from 2:30 p.m. on holidays. Evening adult admission price is usually 36c plus 4c tax; at the Court Square it is 40c plus tax.

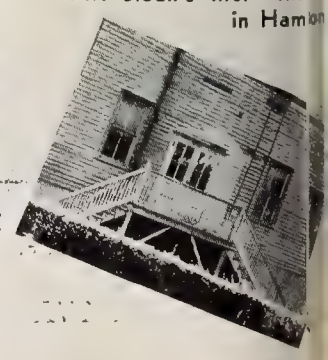
Except for sections which, because of lakes or river resorts, attract a large summer population, these towns and their drawing areas are populated by people typical of rural life—the families of small town shop keepers and professional men, artisans and odd-job workers, and farmers. The latter produce mostly milk and dairy products, although chickens and eggs are important products of Hunterdon County. There are hosiery, textile, porcelain and woodworking factories in Washington, while Belvidere is the home of the Hercules powder plant at which occurred the explosion, fatal to many workers, that recently startled the nation. By and large, however, this section, to which the St. Cloud circuit has made motion picture entertainment of a better sort immediately available, is typically rural, with incomes predominantly in the lower brackets.

Promotional Tabloid



The intensive cultivation of the available population for the support of these theatres, some of which have seating capacities larger than the population of the towns they are in, is carried on principally by means of a "newspaper" which, if not absolutely unique as a medium of theatre exploitation, is at any rate notable with respect to both effectiveness and economy.

This publication is got up in the manner of a tabloid-style newspaper. Called the "Theatrical and Shopping Guide," it carries general advertising as well as the advertisements and editorial publicity of the theatres. It is published in three editions, one for each area that has been found to constitute, on the basis of distances and trading customs, more or less a division of the total territory served by the circuit.

Each edition, which emphasizes in its picture exploitation the theatres of its own division, provides a valuable advertising medium also for the merchants of that division, thus this "newspaper," containing eight pages or more, is in truth a "theatrical and shopping guide." Every family receives it free; in the towns where the theatres are located, it is delivered to the homes by boys; to residents elsewhere,

DELUXE SEATING MODERNIZATION

Exploiting Comfort

■ One of the biggest of large-scale jobs in the modernization of the nation's theatre seating is that recently completed at the Chicago theatre, Balaban & Katz "ace house" in downtown Chicago. The 4,000 new chairs installed, manufactured by the International Seat Corporation, are to an important degree custom-built and use foamed latex cushions.

Dunlop foamed latex cushions are used for backs as well as seats, and also on the arm rests, which are covered in the same "Countess" grade of L. C. Chase mohair used on the seats and backs. The back cushions were specially moulded in the same thickness as a spring back. Arm rests are interestingly built up with a small wood block as a base over which is a moulded rubber shoe, above which is a shaped layer of foamed latex, on top of which is foamed latex slab to complete a shaped arm cushion, which is covered in an old rose a little darker (to counterbalance soil) than the old rose used on the seats and backs. General construction is of the regular deluxe model type employed by International, with standards, back panels, seat pans and side plates of American Rolling Mill steel. End standards, however, are of cast iron with a special design by Rapp & Rapp, Chicago architects. The casting was given a special treatment, including prime coat and undercoat, before an overall spray of light rose, after which an additional coat of white was applied to the ground areas and gold to the raised portions of the design configuration. Finally, an allover glaze in old rose was applied, and metal parts were lacquered in the same color. Balaban & Katz gave the installation city-wide exploitation, with newspaper stories describing the chair, and, additionally, one of the chairs was exhibited in a huge lobby display (pictured at left), explaining the construction of the chair and its significance to comfort. Incidentally, the Chicago theatre installation rounded out a period of six years, starting in 1934, during every one of which International has reseated some unit of the Balaban & Katz circuit.

Dual Theatre

TWO (2) AUDITORIUMS

. . . to settle the double-feature issue!

■ The Alhambra theatre in Alhambra, Calif., is not the first theatre to have two auditoriums, but it is doubtless the first to be so arranged for the purpose of disposing of local attitudes toward double-feature and single-feature bills. The second auditorium was recently added to the existing theatre so as to let the patrons ot the Alhambra, a unit in the Edwards Theatres Circuit of Los Angeles, take their choice. Each auditorium has its own projection room, and the seating areas connect with a common foyer, reached through one lobby and vestibule with one box office. The manner of screening is thus explained by James Edwards, Jr.: Each auditorium shows the same double-bill nightly, but the features are so alternated and reversed that while one is being screened in one auditorium, the other feature is playing in the second auditorium; then this order is reversed. For example, suppose the program is made up of two pictures, A and B. You, as a patron, want to see only A. At any time you enter, Picture A will be playing in one of the auditoriums. A directional sign in the foyer will tell you which auditorium has the picture you want to see. Now should Picture A have started when you come in, and you simply do not want to see Picture B, which will follow on the same screen, you merely get up and go into the other auditorium to see the beginning of Picture A. . . . Physically, the two auditoriums (and the exterior as well) strikingly contrast modern theatre styling with that of the past. The new auditorium, altogether simple and plain in decorative treatment, has walls of maroon Acoustipulp ornamented by a few symbolical figures, painted in a modern relief effect, and a ceiling, unadorned and following structural forms, finished in buff Acoustipulp. The seating in the Annex is similarly in contrast with that of the other auditorium, employing the streamlined Avon model of the American Seating Company, with standards and back panels in light tan, and upholstering in red mohair. The murals are appliqued cutouts with light recesses behind the edges. The low ceiling, imposed by apartments above, result in extremely low projection ports, with the projectionists viewing the screen not directly through observation ports, but by means of periscopes. Each auditorium has its own ventilating system.

ENTRANCE AREA MODERNIZATION

Colonial Theatre, Bluefield, W. Va.

Design and Engineering by
F. & Y. BUILDING SERVICE

FRONT BEFORE REMODELING.

LOBBY (looking toward street) BEFORE REMODELLING.

■ In the remodeling, recently completed, of the Colonial theatre in Bluefield, W. Va., owned and operated by Max Matz, the auditorium, surprisingly, was not the problem. The theatre as a whole was definitely obsolete in general style as well as in plan, but it could be salvaged—saved for continued operation—if the front and entrance area could be effectively modernized without extensive structural changes. Removal of old-fashioned, shabby ornamentation, and paint answered, within the expectations of the owner, the problem in the auditorium. What distinguishes this modernization project from the average is the inordinately long and narrow lobby-foyer area, extending deeply from the street into the middle of the block. The front, in style, was of comparable character.

Physical Problem

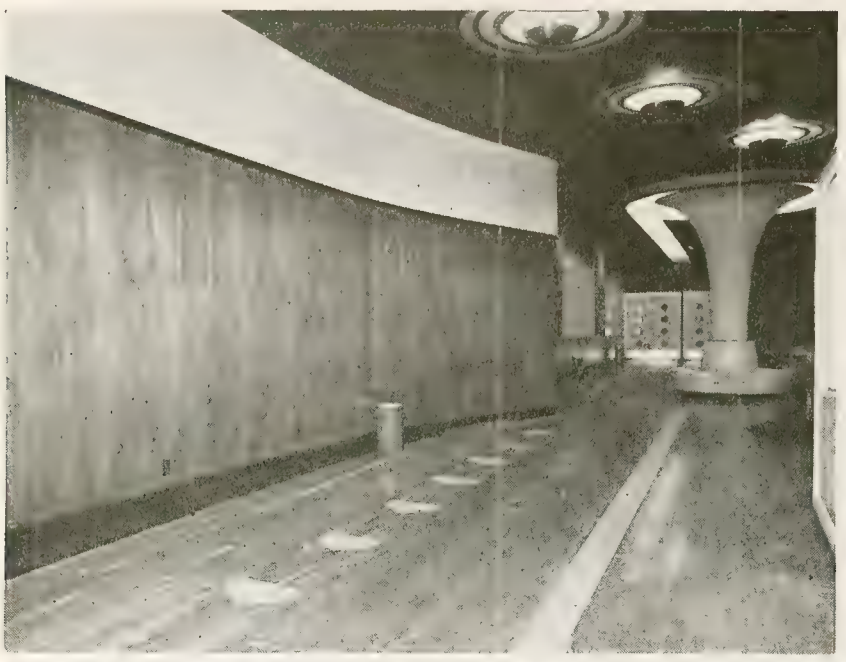
Overall width of the front measured 25 feet, 6 inches, either side being flanked by huge brick columns, each an integral portion of the building. The entrance lobby extended back 16 feet, with a low ceiling. Keeping in a style seemingly dedicated to a hideous appearance, 18 feet of the front was occupied by a confectionery, leaving but 7 feet, 9 inches for a pair of doors. The lobby was a dismal hallway full of ornamental plaster gingerbread 96 feet between the first and second set of doors, and only 7 feet, 9 inches wide. Floors were of cheap tile, walls of stained white marble. From the second set of doors to the auditorium ran an equally unattractive foyer 27 feet, 9 inches long. Behind the storeroom (see floor plan), which extended 72 feet back, was an entrance 5 feet wide to the adjoining hotel; behind this was an office and one small toilet room.

Specifications for remodeling the Colonial called for a multitude of improvements, each with qualifications. The effect of both height and width for an imposing front elevation had to be achieved without covering completely the second story windows; with retail space at a premium, a store was to be retained; provisions were to be made for a refreshment counter (separate from the other storeroom) within the lobby; additional space for a modern lobby was to be obtained, and also for a foyer, with both powder and toilet rooms adjoining.



Other factors, each applicable to any form of building or modernizing, were necessarily considered: Lowest practicable initial cost, extreme durability, low maintenance cost, and reasonable replacement cost. And at the same time, the remodeling had to be conducted in such a way as to permit "business as usual."

Inasmuch as Mr. Matz also owned the adjoining building, the overall width of the front was increased 4 feet, 8 inches by simply covering that much of the adjacent brick pier. Inner space was increased by 2 feet when the brick pier on the right was replaced by a steel column below the marquee. The new marquee is approximately 2 feet lower than the old one; the signs and ornamental nose of the design extending above.

Modernization Methods

With the island box office removed, the theatre portion of the entrance-way was moved forward 7 feet, the storeroom 12 feet, 6 inches. Width of the storeroom was reduced to 8 feet wide, leaving space for two pairs of doors. Utilizing bent plate glass, the store has a display window approximately 3 feet, 6 inches deep, and 5 feet, $2\frac{1}{2}$ inches wide; the single door is identical with those to the theatre—glass framed with $2\frac{1}{4}$-inch birch, using aluminum hardware and alumilited aluminum kickplates.

Suntan and red glass (Owens-Illinois) were used on both sides of front, underneath the marquee; Wagner attraction boards, framed with alumilited aluminum, are on either side. The box office occupies the space behind the left pier, projecting but $13\frac{1}{2}$ feet; entrance is through a door leading into the lobby. Floor is of terrazzo. In front of the doors, in a $\frac{3}{8}$-inch recess, is a rubber mat of blue, white and buff. To give an illusion of greater depth, peach mirrors were used above the doors and storeroom display window. Black structural glass is used below the box office and display windows.

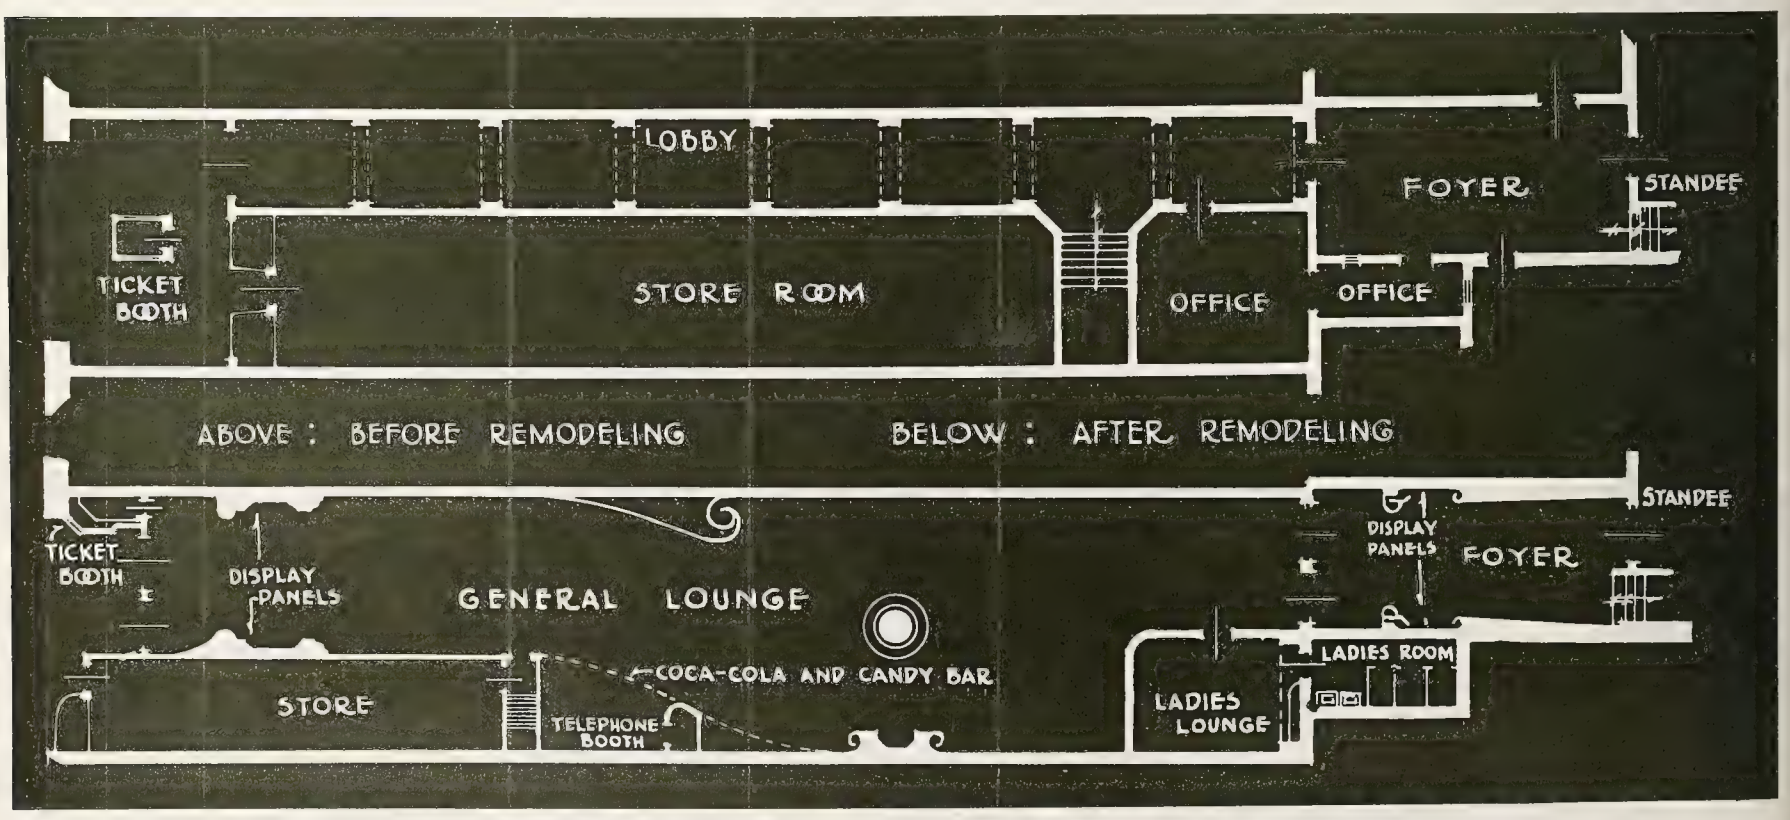
The marquee, in modified V-shape, is of porcelain enamel, and contains ample space for changeable Wagner silhouette letter copy. Theatre name is neon lighted. Twenty-three horizontal lines on a flasher are used in an imposing center nose with eight additional tubes on each side wing at the building line. Colors are red, yellow, and white.

At both sides of the doors are painted panels; immediately behind are glassed-in display cases, and behind the glass brick enclosed case on the right is another case, this one for the storeroom. At the left is an imposing panel of genuine walnut; balance of wall is paneled with combed plaster.

Two murals in oil appeal to civic pride. The theatre being located in the heart of the coal mining district, one mural depicts the actual mining of black diamonds, behind a portrait of a rugged miner. The second, modern in spirit, shows by inference the utilization of coal for trains and dramatizes railroading, which is Bluefield's second largest industry. The right wall is alternately covered with combed and smooth finish in plaster.

Width of the lobby, at its smallest point, is approximately 14 feet; at the widest point, 22 feet, 9 inches. In the center of the wide portion is an immense mushroom plaster column springing from a hexagonal settee in white, seat being 6 feet, 6 inches in diameter, the "stem" varying from 2 feet, 9 inches to 8 feet, 5 inches at the top. Directly in front of the settee, in the right wall, is a fireplace, framed with glass blocks on the corners. Above the fireplace is an oil mural of a stage dancer. The space back of the storeroom is taken by a refreshment stand and telephone booth.

Design on the Puritan rubber mats outside the theatre is carried throughout the lobby, colors being white, tan and blue. The rubber flooring, set in 3/8-inch recess, is surrounded by chrome metal edge and a black rubber cove base. Floor in front of the fireplace is carpeted.



Color scheme of the lobby called for burgundy red ceiling and light cardinal glaze over light yellow walls. Lighting comes from imbedded features in the front, a trough in the rear, trough being a portion of the umbrella design.

Lounge and Inner Lobby Arrangements

The powder room is 15 feet, 3 inches by 10 feet, the toilet room 13 feet, 9 inches by 6 feet, 3 inches. Features of the former are emphasized by a full-length 40x72 mirror, and a second one, 48x24, over the powder shelf. Toilet room has two lavatories and three stalls with marble partitions. Floor of the latter has a dark red verona terrazzo field, center being yellow verona terrazzo with metal division strips.

The second foyer is 13 feet wide by 27 feet, 8 inches long. Doors to lobby are 2 feet, 8 inches by 7 feet slab with glass ports; doors to auditorium are glass, 3 feet by 7 feet. There are drinking fountains and display cases on either side, red velour framing them in the plaster background. Walls are plaster in a succession of projecting waves that extend along them horizontally.

The remodeling of the Colonial illustrates the possibilities of most any outdated theatre, how the almost-impossible can be accomplished. Final success of the project is shown by the assurance of Mr. Matz that "business has increased substantially" since the remodeling.

What You Need for Efficient Vacuum Cleaning in Theatres

THE VACUUM CLEANER is to the theatre what the tooth brush is to the human being—it must be used every day to get results . . . it must be used properly to get results . . . and it must be kept in good order and itself kept clean to obtain the desired results.

It is hard to conceive a theatre without a vacuum cleaner listed among its items of equipment, because there is no other way of removing the dirt from theatre carpets. It is unfortunate that so little attention is given to this important piece of equipment. It can be said without much fear of contradiction that the old reliable vacuum cleaner gets less attention and care than any other item of equipment in the theatre. Most of the time nothing is done about the cleaner until it lays down, gives up and quits, when it is sent back for repairs with many times a not-so-silent complaint about the way it was made in the first place.

If we consider the vacuum cleaner in the class of mechanical equipment, it would probably get more nearly its share of maintenance attention, and it certainly would receive more attention at the time of its initial selection. Application engineering is a distinct function of general engineering—it means applying the right piece of equipment to the right job.

Therefore the theatre manager must know the requirements of the work to be performed in order to select the equipment to do the work.

Appraising Your Job

The following outline indicates the job to be done:

1. There are (whatever the amount in your theatre) square yards of carpet on stairs and landing to be cleaned nightly.
2. There are ..... square yards of carpet on floors and aisles to be cleaned nightly.
3. There are ..... square yards of carpet in office, women's lounge and other miscellaneous spots to be cleaned nightly.
4. With a good cleaner a man can clean about 1200 square feet, or 133 square yards, of carpet per hour, therefore it requires .... hours running time each night.
5. If a portable machine is being considered, then the number of times it must be carried up and down stairs from level to level, and in the balcony for the cleaning of balcony steppings, must be calculated. The elements necessary for suction and depositing the dirt should not weigh over 50 pounds if one person is expected to transport it.
6. The location of convenient outlets must be considered with relation to the carpet to be cleaned, to be sure to have enough safe extension cord, and to decide about the length of vacuum hose.
7. The characteristic of the electric current is of course a factor.
8. Realizing that mechanical equipment must be kept clean, and the nature of a vacuum cleaner is that dirt is to be handled, you must consider what, if anything, has been done by the manufacturer to protect the moving parts, motor, bearings and fan from dirt.
9. Mechanical equipment must be lubricated. What facilities has the manufacturer provided for proper lubrication?
10. How much air does the vacuum cleaner under consideration move per minute?
11. How much vacuum does it pull in inches of mercury?
12. Is there any other action of a mechanical nature to help loosen the dirt from the pile of the carpet?
13. The nature of the dirt to be removed—sand, loam, mud, dust—has a tremendous influence on the selection of the right cleaner. Therefore decide the nature of the dirt to be removed from the theatre.
14. What by analysis is the part of the equipment most likely first to give away or cause trouble?

Vacuum Requirements

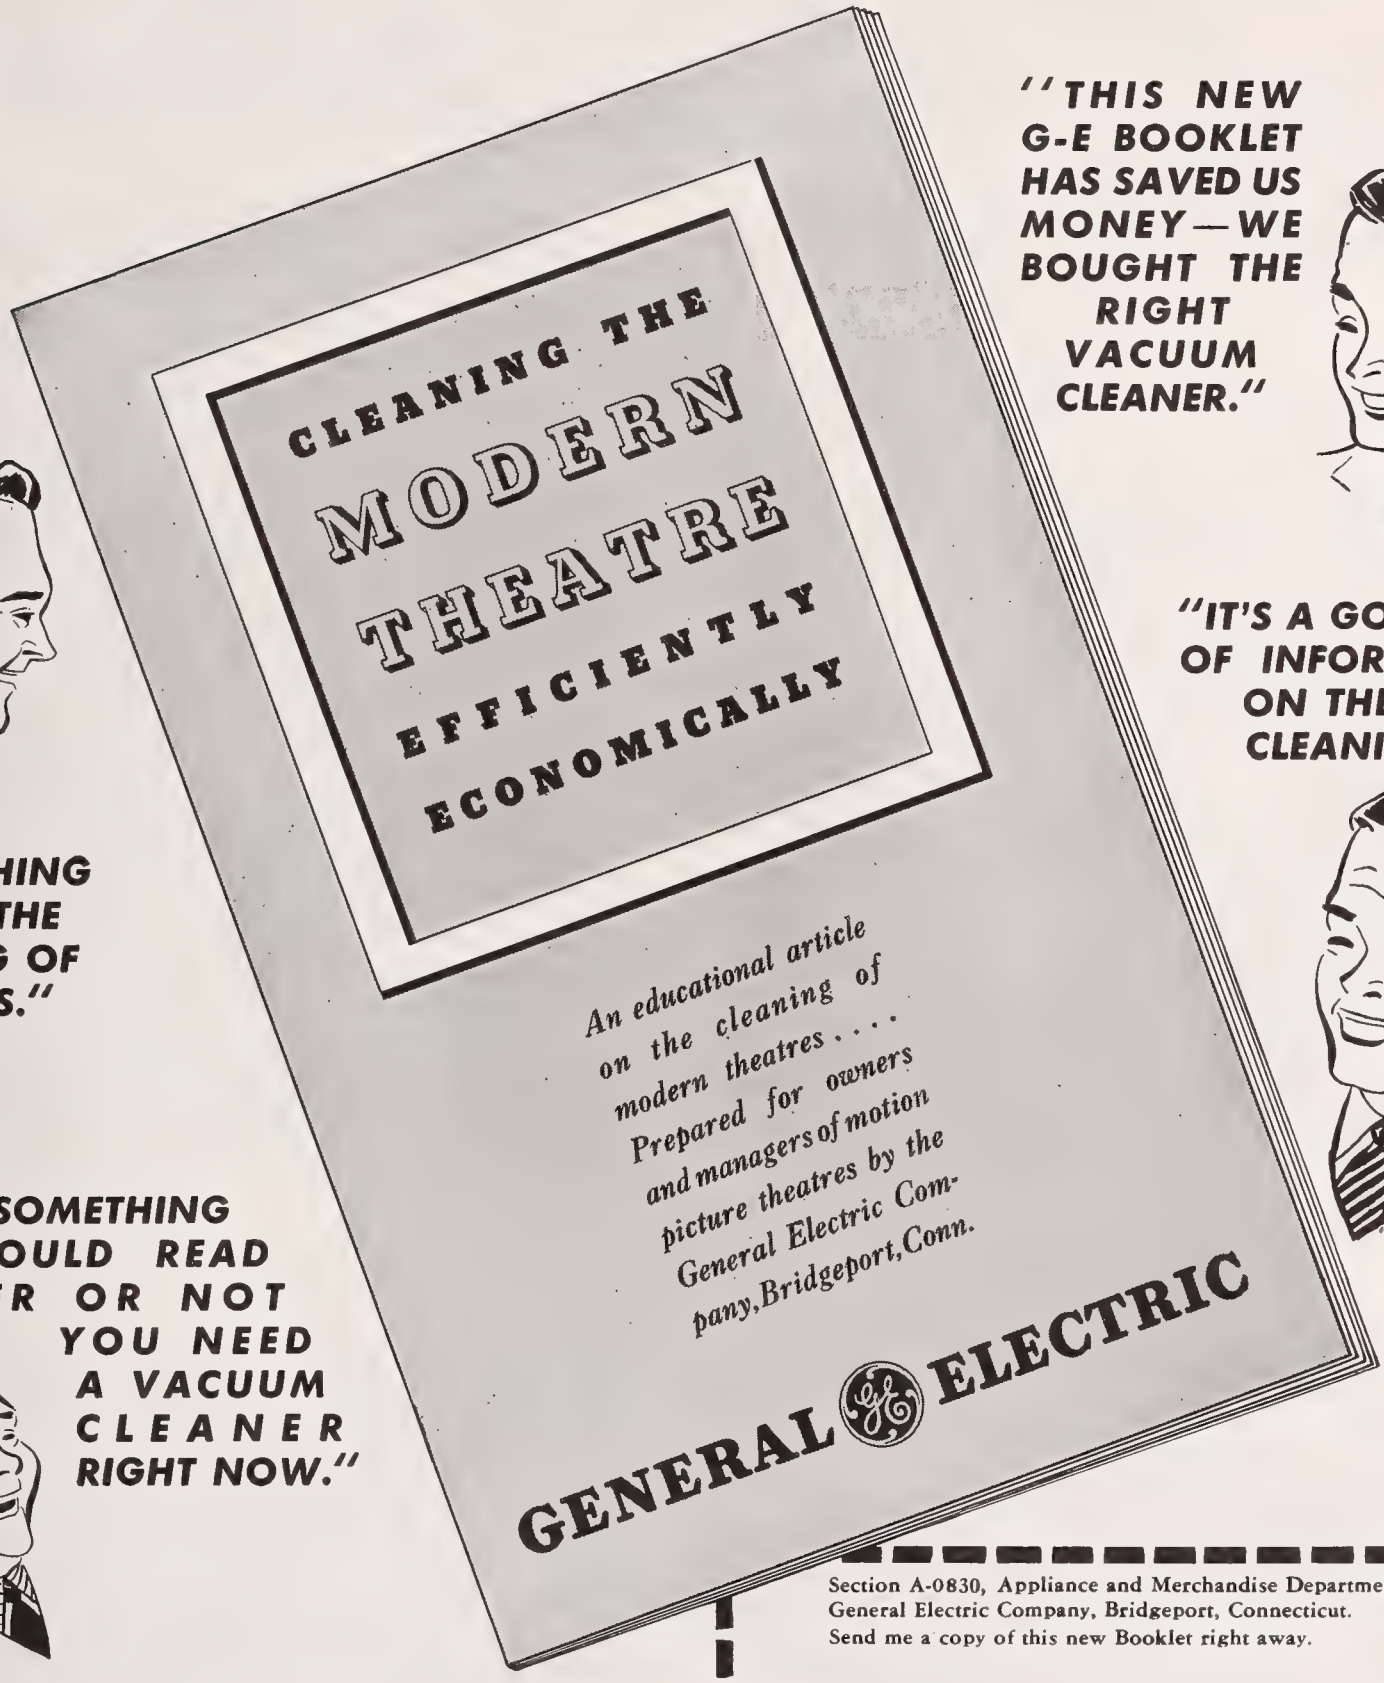
A vacuum is a reduction of pressure below normal atmospheric pressure. Atmospheric pressure may be taken as 14.7 pounds per square inch—it of course varies under changing climatic conditions. Vacuum is generally measured in inches of mercury; a perfect vacuum is represented by 29.9 inches of mercury. In the case of the vacuum cleaner, the vacuum, or pull, of the cleaner in terms of inches of mercury is only an indication of the difference of pressure at or in the throat of the cleaning tool. It does not indicate cleaning capacity. Only when combined with the total air passing through the throat does it become a measure of cleaning capacity.

Now it is the air movement that picks up the dirt and carries it from the carpet into the dirt receptacle. Upon the kind of dirt to be removed depends the selection of a cleaner in respect to the inches of vacuum it will pull, and the amount of air to be passed through the system—as an example, a theatre located on the seashore and much beach sand is tracked into it: beach sand is heavy and sharp and resists being picked up and becoming entrained in a stream of air.

Another theatre, located downtown, let us say, where people walk on paved streets for several blocks before coming into the theatre and therefore only track in the very fine street dust, requires a machine that pulls less vacuum (inches of mercury) and handles more air.

Because of the nature of surfaces cleaned with the vacuum cleaner in a theatre, 6 inches of mercury vacuum is absolutely the highest that can be recommended. For all around theatre cleaning, a cleaner that handles from 50 to 60 cubic feet of air per minute, with 3 to 4 inches of vacuum, is very satisfactory.

In order to maintain a vacuum, a tight system is implied. On the suction side of the motor and blower equipment, all joints and the hose connections and the hose itself, must be as nearly air-tight as possible. Even the smallest leaks on this side of the equipment reduces the vacuum and also the total volume of air passing through the cleaning tool itself, thereby reducing the overall efficiency of the cleaner.



Performance Tests

In buying a vacuum cleaner, do not be too greatly impressed with the usual type of demonstrations, such as scattering a handful of dirt from the dirt receptacle back on the surface of the carpet and then running the machine over it, or tearing up bits of paper to be sucked in by the machine, or even seeing it pick up paper clips. Such demonstrations mean little or nothing and come in the category of parlor tricks.

Every reputable manufacturer of mechanical equipment, and the manufacturers of vacuum cleaners are no exception, have run many controlled, rigid and destructive tests on their equipment, just as the automobile manufacturers run new model cars to destruction. To be able to see and examine the results of one of those tests is worth more than all the demonstration tricks that they can show.

As with all mechanical equipment regardless of the care in its selection, it must be maintained, which means cleaned, oiled and adjusted and kept in repair.

CARPET Selection & maintenance

Foyer and lounge floors, and stairways, are always conspicuous—keep them well groomed.

Variety in Modern Floor Coverings

That modern patterns do not necessarily mean geometric mazes and bizarre flights of the colorist's fancy is well stated in these diversified and successful selections, all of them for theatres definitely modern in interior treatments:

Mezzanine lounge of the Gordon theatre, Lucas & Jenkins house in Atlanta, Ga. The carpeting is a Bigelow-Sanford Delwood Wilton in a Victorian hook weave, traditional in feeling with self-color scheme in brown to beige.

Modern, yet definitely of classic Greek inspiration, is this Alexander Smith Crestwood Velvet in the otherwise plainly treated, modern-lined lobby-foyer of the Tyson theatre in Philadelphia. (Note carpeting is on a ramped floor.)

Faint of pattern, against richly grained and muraled walls, is the scroll design of the Bigelow-Sanford Delwood Wilton in the foyer of Lucas & Jenkins' Columbus theatre in Columbus, Ga. The coloration is from beige to tan.

Another lobby-foyer, this in the Hyattsville theatre, Hyattsville, Md., in which is used a Crestwood Velvet in a modern interpretation of a time-honored floral device, large in scale in contrast with small-figured overall wall pattern.

cluding farm homes on the R.F.D. routes, it is mailed.

Newspaper advertising is used in all the towns where there are theatres. These papers have very small circulations, however, while the "Theatrical and Shopping Guide" has a total distribution of over 35,000. All editions are printed by the local newspaper in Washington, headquarters town of the circuit. The advertising of the merchants, plus that of the theatres, which are "charged" at regular rates for their space, not only consistently covers the cost of printing and mailing, but usually produces a small profit.

Operating Policy

With respect to program policy, Mr. Sloan pointed out with some emphasis that no premiums or prize contests are used to attract patronage at any time.

"If the motion picture business cannot sell motion picture entertainment to the public," commented Mr. Sloan, "then the public doesn't want it—either that or we don't know our business. It is our policy to book the pictures that our people are most likely to enjoy, then give them perfect projection and reproduction, in theatres that are comfortable and as attractive in appearance as one can expect in communities like ours. We have air-conditioning already in several houses, seating is kept as close to a deluxe standard as possible, and our projection is strictly maintained to meet an ideal that we have set for ourselves throughout the entire group of theatres. The theatres that we did not build ourselves have been remodeled. While we don't have all the fancy fixings, although we are improving things right along, we don't allow shabbiness to persist, and our managers are very fussy housekeepers."

"If a tube starts to flicker," Mr. Sloan continued in explanation, "that tubing is replaced immediately. As soon as a burned out lamp is noticed, it is replaced. Shabby or ripped carpeting is repaired or replaced at once, not some time later. Particular attention is given to cleanliness in the toilets. Our toilet fixtures are modern, therefore are relatively easily maintained. Floors, some of which are linoleum, are mopped daily, and the walls, where they are not tile, are repainted frequently. Our walls are white. We have found that a perfectly clean while wall is seldom subject to vandalism. But you allow just one name or initial to remain on it and there will be a dozen more within a week.

"Country people are willing to overlook the absence of city theatre finery, but they have a right to expect a clean theatre, comfort while viewing the show, and absolutely top standard projection and sound."

That the people of northwestern New Jersey respond to such a policy is demonstrated in the growth and prosperity of the St. Cloud circuit. For example, throughout the past summer, when most exhibitors were crying panic, business was consistently good over the St. Cloud circuit. Without premiums or contests! And except for a "bargain night" once a week at two of the theatres, the policy holds strictly to single-feature programs!

Projection System

Mr. Sloan spoke of the right of even small town theatre-goers to "top standard projection." This is insisted upon, no matter how small the theatre or the town. Projection is under the general supervision of a man of broad training and experience in motion picture engineering. But every projectionist—all the men are members of the IATSE & MPMO—is expected to be proficient in the care as well as the operation of his equipment. It is the duty of the general supervisor to help them increase their ability to meet maintenance conditions themselves. Further than that,

Types and Sources of Unit Heaters

• The second and concluding installment of an article begun in the September 21st issue, describing the advantages of unit heating in its application to theatres

By J. T. KNIGHT, JR.

WE HAVE seen how the development of unit heaters, for attachment to steam systems, or self-contained, have provided a new and economical means of meeting certain heating problems in the theatre, those resulting from only occasional need for heat, from areas constantly exposed to outdoor air, from auditorium cold spots, etc.

If you are one who is annoyed by inadequate heating or bad distribution of heat in your theatre, it might be well for you to consult with the local representatives or agents of one of the following manufacturers of unit heaters. Most all of these manufacturers maintain a competent engineering advisory service and are glad to help not only on estimates, but in laying a scheme to fit your specific needs.

THE BRYANT HEATER COMPANY in Cleveland, manufacture a gas-fired type of unit heater. These heaters are the ductless type for suspension from the ceiling. Heavy gauge sheet metal or cast iron combustion chambers are available, and they come in single, double, or triple assemblies, with output ratings (in equivalent square feet of steam radiation) of 294, 588, and 882.

THE BURNHAM BOILER CORPORATION, Irvington, N. Y., manufactures an especially quiet-operating unit heater; some models have multi-speed motors on the fans. These heaters are for connection into a steam system. There are some fifteen sizes to select from, delivering from 65 square feet of Equivalent Direct Radiation, up to 1,00 square feet of equivalent direct radiation.

THE CARRIER CORPORATION distributes a gas-fired type of unit heater, both in the direct type and the duct type. These unit heaters are sold completely equipped with all necessary controls. They have three sizes—a single unit, a double and a triple unit. The output ranges from about 300 square feet, to almost 1,000 square feet E. D. R.

THE CLARAGE FAN COMPANY of Kalamazoo, Mich., makes unit heaters of the propeller fan type, for connection into a steam system. They are built in 21 sizes. This company can provide an especially designed unit heater for use in a hot water heating system.

THE SURFACE COMBUSTION CORPORATION of Toledo, manufactures "Janitrol" gas-fired unit heaters, which are a self-contained, automatic unit generating heat by the burning of gas. With this type of heater no heating plant or boiler connections are required, no water is used, no firing attention is necessary, and naturally no fuel storage is required. There are fourteen models in this line of equipment, ranging in output from 150 square feet, to 1,400 square feet E. D. R.

GRINNELL COMPANY, INCORPORATED, Providence, has a line of unit heaters for connection into a steam heating system. They manufacture these units in three types—Industrial, Factory and Deluxe, all in a range of output capacity from 150 square feet to 1,225 square feet E. D. R. Any of the three types can be used in theatre work.

UNIT HEATER & COOLER COMPANY, Wausau, Wis., has developed a unit primarily for industrial use, but as I have tried to explain, all types have their specific theatre application. The unit is distinct in that the heating sections are entirely of cast aluminum. This unit is for connection into a steam system.

THE YOUNG RADIATOR COMPANY of Racine, Wis., manufactures a complete line of very handsome steam unit heaters. There are 28 different models, some single, others double fan units. They range in capacity from about 75 square feet to about 2,500 square feet E.D.R.

THE BUFFALO FORGE COMPANY heaters burn natural or artificial gas. Automatic temperature control provides economical gas consumption. For sake of safety, the fan shuts off in case of gas failure and it must be manually started again. These units are available in a wide variety of sizes and range in output from 300 square feet to about 2,000 square feet E.D.R.

THE L. J. WING MANUFACTURING COMPANY, New York, N. Y., manufactures a very interesting line of steam unit heaters. They have a unit known as a "revolving discharge featherweight," which is a ceiling type, also a line of utility unit heaters of the ceiling suspended type. They are industrial in design but most certainly have theatre application. Output capacity ranges from 35 square feet to 4,100 square feet E. D. R.

THE ILG ELECTRIC VENTILATING COMPANY of Chicago, manufactures unit heaters for steam or hot water, also an all-electric type. The fine Ilg propeller fan is part of these unit heaters. There are many sizes and types to choose from, in output capacities from 77 square feet to 2,200 square feet E. D. R.

THE MODINE MANUFACTURING COMPANY of Racine, makes unit heaters of the direct suspension type for connection into a steam system. They have a patented feature on all their units called the "velocity generator." This provides great heat throw and distribution of heat without increasing the power requirements. There are some seventeen models to select from, with output capacities from 76 to 2,000 square feet E. D. R.

THE ROME-TURNEY RADIATOR COMPANY, Rome, N. Y., has specialized in lightweight copper-connection radiators and they have added to their line unit heaters.

THE RIZNOR MANUFACTURING COMPANY of Mercer, Pa., has a fine line of unit heaters. These units are gas-fired with either natural or manufactured gas. They also have units for firing with Butane and similar liquefied petroleum gases. They manufacture a suspended type, a floor type, a type for concealed installations, and a duct type. This line does not go into the very large output capacities, but in every respect is highly adaptable to theatre installations. The output range is from 190 to 520 square feet E. D. R.

THE TRANE COMPANY of La Crosse, Wis., manufactures a very complete line of steam unit heaters for practically every purpose and location. They have a ceiling type "projection" heater that is unusual and has many exclusive features. The calibre of Trane engineering and the quality of their workmanship cannot be questioned. This company has made several installations of unit heaters in theatres.

THE AMERICAN BLOWER CORPORATION manufacturers of Sirocco blowers, with which many theatre operators are very familiar. They also manufacture unit heaters for steam or hot water. This company is equipped to handle most any heating problem with unit heaters. They have made extensive studies of air distribution and the connection of units to outside air supply.

THE GENERAL GAS LIGHT COMPANY, Kalamazoo, Mich., makes the "Humphrey" gas-fired unit heater. These units are made up with either the propeller type or the centrifugal blower type fans. The units are sized to fit any situation—ceiling hung, floor type, concealed type, etc. Output ratings are from 225 to 1,400 square feet E. D. R.

THE AUTOMATIC GAS STEAM RADIATOR COMPANY of Pittsburgh, makes a complete unit, consisting of a special non-corroding metal tube radiator, a fan, a small motor and Bunsen type burner. They are manufactured in three sizes, at 250, 440, and 565 square feet E. D. R. They are all of the suspended ceiling type.

You have time now, before the cold weather, to find the solution for those cold spots in your theatre. I am sure that once you have experienced the comfort and the ease of operation of unit heaters, plus the additional circulation of air, you will agree that they have a place in our theatres.

Framing and Maintenance Reduced by New Diffuser

IT HAS BEEN often said that an air-conditioning system is only as good as the method of air distribution used or employed. This thought can be carried one step further, and we may say that an air distribution system is no better than the type of diffusers used to introduce the air into the conditioned area. It therefore logically follows that the selection of diffuser outlets is of very great importance.

Because of the physical nature of theatres, the ceiling type of diffuser is the most satisfactory one to use. In the earlier days of air-conditioning, plain flat plaques were used extensively, and the air from the duct was just dumped into the auditorium and mushroomed against this plaque and noisily found its way out into the auditorium in a very inefficient and ineffectual manner.

The Anemostat Corporation of America developed and made available to the air-conditioning industry the first truly efficient and attractive type of ceiling diffuser outlet. There are three types of Anemostat ceiling diffusers and one side wall type from which to make the selection for any specific job. These types of ceiling diffusers are known as Types "A," "B," and "C," each type having its correct application, depending upon the space to be conditioned. Now we have an improved Type "C" Anemostat, but before describing this type I think some pertinent description of the Anemostat in general is in order.

The principle employed in handling air through the Anemostat is the creation of a multiplicity of air currents traveling in planes, or blankets, at a variety of angles to each other, together with the creation of a multiplicity of counter currents. This principle is directly opposed to that of a single plane discharge along the ceiling, which is the principle of all forms of ceiling plaques.

The Anemostat consists of hollow flaring members placed in scientific relationship within each other, or in front of each other, and by virtue of this construction draws 35% of the room air into its hollow members, where the room air mixes with the cooled or heated air before the latter is discharged into the auditorium. Two of the flared members act to inject air into the auditorium, while two act in the dual capacity of injectors and ejectors. This process is termed aspiration and causes what is called secondary air motion.

This air-mixing effect of the Anemostat causes the predetermined room temperature to be established at a point well above the breathing level, which permits the use of greater temperature differentials between the air introduced into the conditioned space and the final temperature as precalculated for the conditioned space.

This in turn results in smaller volumes of air to be conditioned, which means smaller duct sizes, and the higher velocities which may be employed because of the characteristics of the Anemostat and draftless diffusion at the breathing line, results not only in reduction of duct sizes, but in simplification of duct layouts.

The Anemostat is very attractive in appearance and lends itself admirably to use with any type of interior treatment and especially to modern styles of decoration.

The improved Type "C" Anemostat is like the former type "C" in that it is practically flush with the finished ceiling line. The diameter of the outer cone has been reduced from a dimension approximately three times, to a dimension approximately two times, the neck diameter. This results in a smaller opening in the ceiling to receive the diffuser, which in turn means less expense in structural framing for the opening. The outer cone is finished with a moulded edge, which prevents smudging and streaking of the ceiling. This moulded edge is not conspicuous, nor does it detract from the flush ceiling appearance, as it is only ¼-inch in the smallest type, to 1 inch in the largest.

The reduction in size, plus this edge moulding, adds strength and sturdiness to the unit. Additionally, in making this unit smaller, the gauge metal used has not been reduced, therefore the ridged sturdiness has in this way been increased. The stays that hold the several flared units in position have been slightly increased in diameter, thereby contributing very materially to greater strength and sturdiness.

The improved Type "C" Anemostat is made in 16 standard sizes, designed to handle air velocities from 500 feet per minute up to 3,000 feet per minute, and air quantities from 50 c.f.m up to 23,500 c.f.m.

The Cost of Delay In Making Projector Repairs

• It isn't always that one faulty part can go wrong at a critical time, and cost a lot to repair—but it may insidiously injure other parts

By AARON NADELL

UNDER CONDITIONS of practical theatre operation, an indicated repair to the projector, like other expenses, is considered in relation to the budget. Both managers and projectionists are likely to be under some degree of pressure to ask themselves whether the cost of the work in question, even when quite small, must really be undertaken at once, or whether it can be postponed for a while with complete safety. Several factors enter into the decision. One of the most important, unfortunately, is too often overlooked.

That even slight imperfections in projector functioning can menace the safety and quality of the show is known to everyone. That small damage in any mechanical contrivance will often grow into a large fault if left unrepaired, is also well known and sufficiently obvious. What is not always clearly realized is that in motion picture projectors a delayed repair can act as a cause of other deterioration (as a "focus of infection," so to speak) generating new and different damage in other parts of the mechanism.

Multiplying Trouble and Cost

The result may be to make two repair jobs grow where only one grew before. Sometimes three or four additional repairs will blossom out of one neglect. Sometimes (as will be seen) results of delay are even more serious.

A simple and inexpensive case would be one of worn or otherwise imperfect upper magazine spindle, which no longer turns as freely as it should. The excessive tension places undue wear on the teeth of the upper sprocket. Sooner or later the spindle will have to be replaced or repaired; meanwhile its unremedied condition has materially hastened the need of replacing a sprocket.

Slightly more complex would be the case of a worn upper magazine spindle throwing the film slightly to one side in such a way as to cause it to exert undue pressure on one side of the roller, cutting into the steel. This will throw the film to one side of the upper sprocket teeth and make that side do double work. Here the neglected repair to the spindle involves premature replacement of both roller and sprocket.

How Defects Progress

Similar conditions of course exist in relation to the take-up, the take-up spindle, and the lower sound-head sprocket.

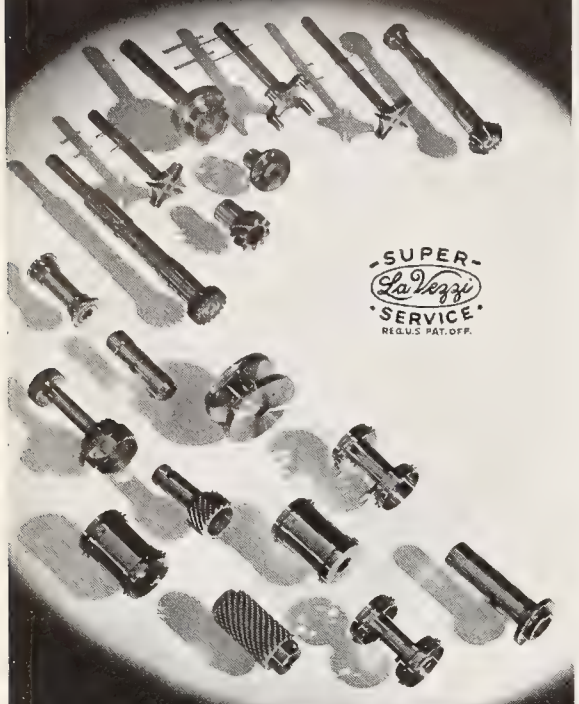
Or gain, in the case of a somewhat worn intermittent movement, it becomes necessary in order to keep the picture steady, to increase tension at the aperture. This throws a greater load on the entire mechanism, hastening the deterioration of all sprockets, gears and bearings, and producing increased wear on gate parts.

Details of course vary with different makes and models of projectors, but the principle that improper functioning of one part, left unrepaired, places excessive wear upon, or directly damages, other parts, does not vary.

In many projectors the fire shutter slides in grooves which allow it enough play, but not too much. The fire shutter may become warped, particularly if the dowser has been left open in the course of maintenance work or through accident. A slightly warped fire shutter will lift properly, because it is drawn up by the power of the governor, but when it falls, to give protection against fire, it falls only by its own slight weight. If warped even to a small degree, it may catch in the grooves and fail to fall. The result of neglecting prompt replacement of a slightly warped fire shutter will sooner or later be an aperture fire and—disregarding all other fire risks—the least that can happen will be weakening of the temper of some parts, carbonizing of lubricants in some bearings, and corrosion or loss of lubricant, or both, if a fire extinguisher is used.

If a shutter is bent or burnt through some accident, it will revolve irregularly, causing the shutter shaft to pound and create an uneven load that produces oscillation and undue wear through the entire gear train.

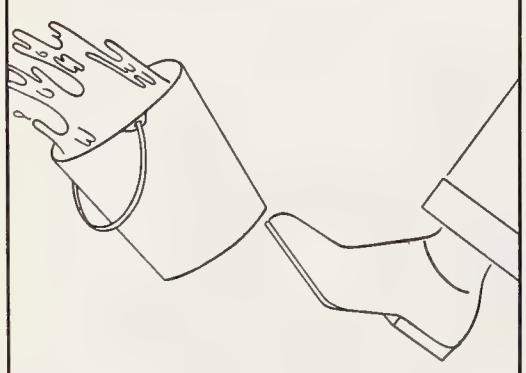
If a worn or out-of-round bearing causes one gear to wobble gears meshing with it will also run out of true and wear their own bearings out of round.



Failure to replace oil-soaked or "set" rubber supports in common types of drive motors, leaves the drive motor out of true alignment and again produces needless wear on bearings.

In some common projector types the governor flyweight pins become worn, the flyweights throw out too far and strike the governor housing. The mechanism is stopped instantly, stripping gears, springing shafts and damaging bearings—all for delay in replacing a flyweight pin!

Undercut sprocket teeth sometimes drag the film up under the stripper where it winds around the sprocket, jamming and stopping the machine. Whenever a projector is jammed, it may be saved by motor fuses or other protective devices (if the devices have not been "boosted"), but if these do not work quickly enough, gears strip, shafts spring, bearings are distorted. And this happens, not infrequently, through delay in replacing an undercut sprocket.



In the same class with postponement of a needed repair is postponement of all re- lated parts of the same repair. For example, where steel gears mesh with composition gears, the composition wears first, and commonly is replaced alone. When this has been done once or twice, however, the steel teeth have also become materially worn. They may be good enough to work with complete safety, but their worn condition places undue wear on the meshing gear. The composition gear, which may have lasted a year and a half when the steel gear was new, may last only two or three months when meshed with "worn but good" steel. At such times it is obviously more economical to replace both gears, but often it is not done.

Inspection and Overhaul

Similarly, when a projector head has been overhauled, the old soundhead drive pinion is not always replaced. The new projector gears are driven by the old, worn part and are worn down themselves far sooner than they should be.

Thoroughgoing, periodic inspection of the projector to discover worn parts, including those which may damage others, whether or not they can cause a breakdown themselves, is a self-evident necessity of good and economical operation. Since the projectionist's inspection cannot reach to all parts (for example, flyweight pins in some models) sending the head to the manufacturer's representative for occasional overhaul is likewise sound operation and essentially an economy.

Overhaul approximately once in two years, oftener if the theatre runs long hours, is good practice. As for giving the projectionist repair parts promptly on request—and the projectionist's duty is to request them promptly when his inspections turn up any fault—the cost must in every case be balanced not only against the safety and quality of the show, or the chance of the same fault becoming worse, but also against the chance of the fault generating other and more expensive troubles—the chance, for example, of a hooked sprocket, which is so cheaply replaced, causing a film jam that may strip the whole mechanism.

Progress at a Profit in Rural Operation

his principal task is to make surveys and keep records which permit him to advise on equipment purchases and transfers according to the developing needs of the circuit.

The selection of equipment is left, however, to the choice of the individual projectionist who will ultimately be called upon to operate it and may have preference for some given manufacturer's product because of past experience with this particular equipment. When questions of technical nature arise in any projection room, they are forwarded to the supervisor, who solves the individual problem and specifies the type of equipment necessary, listing the names of manufacturers supplying this equipment. A copy of this is then forwarded to the home office and to the projectionist himself. The solution to the problem is in the form of a detailed report in which the steps toward reaching a satisfactory solution are given with equations, methods, etc., upon which they are based, so that if future problems of a similar nature confront a projectionist, he is in a better position to cope with them by referring to the former solution.

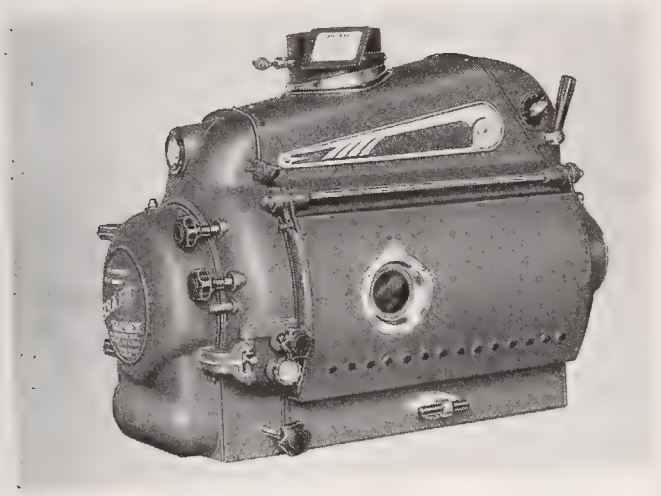
How System Works

This system functions basically in the following manner: Every theatre has a specification sheet for its projection room outlining the equipment used, the comparable efficiency of this equipment, the power consumption in relationship to the efficiency obtained, the age and eccentricities encountered in any of this equipment, the manufacturer's name, and that of the dealer from whom it was purchased.

The number of hours of operation of this equipment may readily be compared with its record of efficiency and is a direct guide for comparison of the various products used. Copies of these specification sheets for all theatres are in the home office and in the files of the projection supervisor, the projectionists, and the manager of each theatre, and whenever a piece of equipment is replaced or repaired, an auxiliary sheet is issued to all of these persons. This sheet is filed with the original specifications, so that a continuous record of the equipment function is available for immediate reference.

Screen Light Standardized

For example, it has been found highly desirable to standardize screen illumination for all theatres in accordance with the standards of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers for screen brightness and distribution, etc. Let us suppose that by examination of the specification sheets, it is found that four of the theatres are below standard in these characteristics, while four more are above average, and four others are correct. The sub-standard theatres, therefore, require correction which may take the form of new lenses, lamps, reflectors, power supply or other component parts in present operation. Working on a standardized basis, the general manager and the projection supervisor study the specifications for the sub-standard theatres, and equipment is selected which will produce a screen intensity and distribution of the standardized characteristic, which is 15 foot candles at the center of the screen.



The list of manufacturers from whom this equipment may be obtained is then compiled and the projectionist selects, individually, the make of equipment for which he has preference. The equipment is purchased which will most economically produce the standard results. It may of course turn out that replaced equipment can be applied to other theatres where certain conditions are on the plus side. Thus distribution of equipment throughout the circuit often balances out, with a minimum number of purchases.

Basically this standardization has several advantages. It eliminates the competitive feeling usually existent between projectionists and managers in relation to their various theatres, for they know that each has an equally well illuminated screen. Periodical photometric readings are taken of this condition and any deviation is noted and its cause corrected.

Projectionist Selects

Each projectionist and manager is supplied with a blank form on which he writes in his own words the equipment or changes he feels would be advantageous to the individual theatre in which he is employed. This is forwarded to the supervisor, who visits the projectionist and discusses it with him, defining his preference as to make and type. From this information the supervisor compiles a survey of the requirements outlined in these sheets and discusses them with the general manager, who decides upon purchase and the amount of expenditure to be undertaken for that particular theatre. The projectionist then has the responsibility of these suggestions and directly is a vital part in the scheme of maintenance and replacement. All installation of projection equipment is carried out either by a projectionist of that theatre, or by a designated projectionist among the theatres.

Larger sound systems than are normally required for each theatre are used so that the gain is run well below peak for optimum quality, and frequently these systems are replaced long before it is absolutely necessary in order to obtain the advantages of advanced engineering found in the newer models.

Equipment Replacement

"Equipment is redistributed periodically in a progressive manner," explained Mr. Sloan. "The key houses obtain the latest equipment as soon as it is available and their former equipment is progressively distributed throughout the circuit. The smallest house, operating the least number of hours, receives the oldest equipment, but still functioning within the standards set up. In this manner, investments in new equipment which is progressively distributed throughout the circuit produces a very high standard for all theatres within the circuit and still obtain the full service from each piece of equipment. No equipment, however, is retained in any theatre if it cannot be economically made to produce up-to-standard results."

That high standards in all the essentials of modern motion picture exhibition can be made to pay in rural communities as well as in our cities and their suburbs, is demonstrated by the success of this growing "country circuit." And surely the continued position and prestige of the motion picture as a popular source of entertainment, needs observance of such standards everywhere.

F. H. Richardson's COMMENT

Projectionists Should Take Care of Prints

IN ALTOGETHER too many projection rooms I find but little attention paid to prevention of damage to the prints (particularly those of minor nature). Too often projectionists seem little, if at all, concerned by the fact that the prints must thereafter be used by other theatres; that they must supply entertainment for many thousands of theatre patrons, the excellence of that entertainment being essential to the highest degree of prosperity of the motion picture industry and—to bring the matter a bit nearer home—the profession of projection itself.

Each film service contract presumes prints delivered by the exchange to be in as nearly perfect condition as their service age will permit; certainly a condition in which projection may be carried forward with safety—for example, no loose splices, ripped or missing sprocket holes. It also presumes they will be free from oil smear and at least sufficiently free from dirt to make the projection of a presentable screen image possible. True, the contract does not stipulate these items in detail, but nevertheless it may be safely assumed that any court of justice most certainly would hold them to be implied in the contract.

Incidentally, theatre managers who, without protest, permit delivery of films to their theatres so badly smeared with oil, perhaps generously intermixed with dirt, that projection of a good screen image cannot be accomplished, are not dealing justly and honestly with either the producer, the artists appearing on their screens, or the patrons of their theatre.

There is no excuse for such delivery except the desire to take the easier, less expensive way, which statement also holds true of the theater manager who refuses to maintain his projector mechanisms in proper repair, the projectionist who floods bearings with oil because it is too much trouble to use care, and the exchange manager who permits the oil smear without taking proper action.

To return to our main topic: While prints are presumed to be delivered to theatres in mechanically safe condition for projection, nevertheless in self protection, upon receiving them the projectionist should subject them to careful inspection, making note of every mechanical fault and making all repairs necessary to safety in projection; also to note as to their condition with regard to oil and dirt.

Mechanical faults and the presence of oil and dirt in objectionable amount should be made in written duplicate, the original delivered to the theatre manager, and the copy retained on file in the projection room. However, since making repairs to prints received from an exchange is no legitimate part of the duty of a projectionist, if repairs of considerable amount are necessary, the theatre should, in common fairness to itself, bill the exchange, for the service.

There are many minor damages inflicted upon prints by careless work in theatre projection rooms. For example, there is the matter of rewinding prints at high speed, with a rewinder that is out of line, and with flimsy reels, the sides of which are bent. If we are going to present motion pictures in a manner to build, rather than tear down, our public, we must have the equipment necessary, and the brains and conscientiousness required to operate it properly.

Screen Image Size— A Matter for Compromise

B. R. WALKER of Minneapolis, writes, "My manager, who owns the theatre, has suggested a question. We both read your articles with much interest, while your Bluebook is our bible. Here is the question: The installation of a new light source is under consideration. What type of light source would you consider best and why? The seating space is 33 feet, 7 inches wide by 89 feet front row to rear row. The manager is beside me as I write and suggests that I ask what size screen would serve best."

As I have previously pointed out, good projection now demands 15 foot-candles at the screen center, which makes the average illumination approximately 10 foot-candles. While this is perhaps just a bit too high for the first few rows when black-and-white pictures are being projected, it is desirable for those farther back, while it is impossible to get satisfactory results from color films with less. The light should of course be white—definitely of high-intensity quality.

For seating space of such size, a screen image 16 feet wide is ample, in my opinion; at that size one should be able to get an average of 10 foot-candles at reasonable current cost, provided your screen surface is in good condition. This size, rather than a greater one, would provide suitable viewing conditions for patrons at the sides of the auditorium, particularly those in the front half of the house.

The distance from the screen to the last row that Friend Walker's dimensions indicate, is a little too much for a 16-foot image according to the way some people figure these matters; but I incline toward a small image rather than a large one, so as to keep eye-strain and distortion at a minimum in the forward rows and at the sides. The distance from the last row to the screen in this case is probably a little over a hundred feet, which could reasonably call for an image width of 18 feet. Still, I think I would stick to 16 feet, using a semi-diffusive white screen, and "suprex" carbon arc lamps.

ACCOUNTING SYSTEMS

SIMPLIFIED bookkeeping systems especially designed for the convenient and practical handling of daily and periodic accounts, provide for receipts and expense records, tax data, film service costs and insurance figures.

One system, covering a year, makes special provisions for all classes of taxes now affecting theatre operation.

In addition to the keeping of accounts by individual theatres, some circuits have found it in the interests of efficiency to maintain an account book of this kind at the home office, for each theatre in the circuit.

ACOUSTICAL PRODUCTS AND ENGINEERING

THE MOTION PICTURE theatre auditorium is a part of the sound transmission system, therefore acoustic considerations enter into the problem of design. The designer is limited, however, by other considerations, notably of site and capacity, which usually deny him a free hand in dealing with acoustics. The science of acoustics readily meets such situations with the studied application of sound absorbing materials, which are available in many types and absorption characteristics.

Such materials may be divided into two general groups: Materials which are concealed, and those which have decorative qualities of their own. Acoustic treatment properly takes note of the entire range of available sound frequencies, hence the use of more than one type of material is sometimes advisable, since some are more efficient as absorbents of low frequencies than of the high frequencies, while others have contrary characteristics.

These materials are available in various forms and substances. Those most frequently used in motion picture theatre auditoriums are vegetable fiber and mineral tiles, rock wool and felt blanket, pressed wood veneers, and acoustic plaster (which latter may be tinted in mixing so as to eliminate painting). Ornamental fabrics are commonly applied over those materials which (like rock wool) are not decorative, but perforated tiles may also be used. Before painting any materials, the manufacturer, or competent acoustics engineers, should be consulted so as to make certain that the absorption efficiency be not too reduced.

The decorative acoustic materials are also well adapted to the finishing of foyer and lounge areas that are immediately off the auditorium, where noise reduction may be importantly indicated.

AIR-CONDITIONING AND VENTILATING EQUIPMENT

THE EXTENSION of air-treatment facilities generally referred to as air-conditioning, to stores, restaurants, hotels and other classes of enclosures, has vastly increased public expectation of such facilities, particularly summer cooling, in most motion picture theatres. At the same time, this growth has resulted in technological and industrial developments making equipment for such purposes accessible in cost to theatres that formerly could not afford comparable apparatus. Additionally, such equipment today offers a variety of methods to choose from accordingly as specific financial, structural and climatic requirements dictate.

Properly, air-conditioning facilities must consist in means of controlling automatically the temperature and relative humidity of the air, and of distributing the air so that it reaches all breathing zones at a temperature, percentage of relative humidity, and rate of motion representing comfortable and healthful atmospheric conditions for normal people. Dust, pollen and other particles suspended in the fresh air should also be filtered out before it is introduced into the distribution system.

For summer air-conditioning, such facilities may be confined to the adjustment of temperature and relative humidity to meet comfort requirements during periods of warm weather, and may not necessarily include a heating plant and humidification provisions as integral parts of the air-conditioning system. All-year air-conditioning of course signifies equipment providing mechanical control of temperature and relative humidity of the distributed air no matter what the condition of the air may be outdoors.

SUMMER AIR-CONDITIONING

For summer air-conditioning, some measure of mechanical refrigeration is usually indicated; however, in areas of low relative humidity, a cooling-tower evaporative system may be employed, while well water (rarely water from city mains) may be used as the cooling agent for coils over which the air is passed, if a sufficient quantity of water at a low enough temperature (maximum 55°) is available.

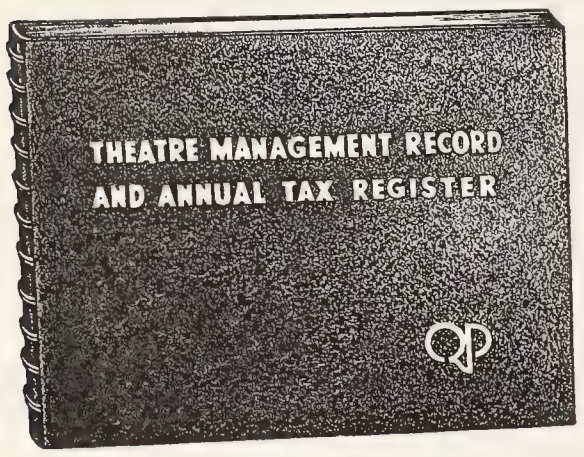
A method designed to reduce the mechanical refrigeration capacity that would otherwise be necessary, is that of storage refrigeration, by which a relatively small compressor is operated a large part of the day to "build up" the air-cooling agent to a quantity sufficient for the load during performance hours.

The self-contained units of the general type used in stores and similar spaces (filters, mechanical refrigeration plant and fan equipment housed in a cabinet) are adapted to the summer air-conditioning of small auditoriums and several units of suitable capacity can be combined to serve medium-sized auditoriums, though it is commonly found that the distribution requirements of the latter advise other methods.

AIR DISTRIBUTION

Distribution systems for the air-conditioning of theatres practically always consist in ducts with fans of proper capacity, and outlets, or grilles, providing control of air motion. It is of the utmost importance for the efficient air-conditioning of a theatre that the distribution system be designed by engineers of superlative skill and conscientiousness, and preferably by engineers who have had experience with enclosures presenting structural and operating conditions similar to those of the motion picture theatre. Fans—those of the multi-blade ("squirrel-cage") type are regarded by engineers as usually preferable—must be of a capacity and design to move the required amount of air against the resistance of the duct system, with the least expenditure of electric current, and without transmission of noise to the auditorium and other rooms. Air outlets should be of a design to assure thorough mixing of cooled air with room air before it is allowed to descend to the breathing zone.

AIR CLEANSING



Filtering equipment, which is installed as part of an air-conditioning system but which usually needs to be replaced from time to time, is of various types. Some filters use spun-glass fibers, some steel wool, others paper, hogs' hair, wood shavings, etc. The filtering material is held in a frame which is inserted into the duct or intake. Filters of this type are thrown away and replaced with a new one as the accumulation of dirt requires. Also available, however, is a self-cleaning type of air-filtering device, but it is seldom adapted in price to theatre installation. (See also Air Purification, Electric.)

CONTROL EQUIPMENT

Efficient operation of an air-conditioning plant requires dependable automatic control specifically adapted to the operating characterists of the plant. Control equipment available ranges from a simple cut-in for a single compressor to a motor-operated monitoring cabinet inter-relating all operating elements of the system, including the heating plant.

Two accessory instruments of value in theatre operation should be cited here. One is the recording thermometer, which provides continuous temperature readings automatically transcribed on paper, thus permitting the development of a "log" for guidance in determining load requirements and other operating factors.

The other is an "Effective Temperature" thermometer (marketed under the trade name of "Therhumiter"), which ingeniously combines response to the temperature of the air, moisture in the air, and the motion of the air so as to give a direct reading of their relative and aggregate effect upon the comfort conditions of the air, which reading is that of "Effective Temperature" —that is, the true temperature from the point of view of comfort. It thus eliminates the calculation necessary with dry-bulb and wet-bulb thermometers to determine what the Effective Temperature is, and it also provides a simple means of determining the percentage of relative humidity.

[The functions of air-conditioning and air distribution equipment and systems, their critical factors and operating considerations, etc., form too broad a subject for comprehensive discussion here; they have been, and are being, constantly dealt with in special and departmental articles in BETTER THEATRES.]

SIMPLE VENTILATION

Simple ventilation of theatres requires blower equipment of suitable capacity to draw in the fresh air and propel it through ventilators (normally located adjacent to the proscenium arch or screen opening), plus any direct draft exhaust fans and duct contacts with the outside (as from toilet rooms) that the structural plan of the building may require. The blower equipment of course is of importance; it should be of a capacity to ensure the required supply of fresh air, be durably built, and be quiet in operation.

A simple ventilation system may provide air cooling for an auditorium by passing the outside air through a cold-water spray chamber (air washer evaporative cooling). This also cleanses the air.

AIR PURIFICATION: ELECTRIC

THE MOST effective method of removing dust and bacteria from outside air upon its introduction into the theatre ventilating system is by electrostatic precipitation. This is effected by special equipment consisting, essentially, in an electrical power pact and collector cells of the specific capacity required by the amount of air handled. This method also is highly efficient for the removal of the irritating and odoriferous particles of tobacco smoke.

A simple and relatively inexpensive method of reducing odors in the air is that of ozone generators. Ozone is a specific, unstable form of oxygen which, upon breaking down, oxidizes impurities in the air, including many forms of bacterial life. Ozone generators for theatres, which are of electrical discharge type, are available in various sizes, suited to lounges, toilet rooms and to installation in air ducts.

AMPLIFYING TUBES

THESE ARE electronic relays in the amplifier of a sound reproducing system by means of which the weak electric currents created by a photocell, phonopickup or microphone, operate to control a stronger current, moulding it to an exact, but more powerful duplicate of the original. This process is continued through a train of tubes until a duplicate of the original sound current is obtained, which is strong enough to operate the loudspeakers. (See Amplifiers.)

AMPLIFIERS

AN AMPLIFIER, as part of a sound reproducing system, is the arrangement in an electrical unit (panel or cabinet) of electronic relays (see Amplifying Tubes) with suitable controls.

Amplifiers today contain their own power supplies, needing only connection with an a.c. or d.c. power line, and dispensing with all auxiliary batteries, generators or rectifiers; and in addition commonly supply polarizing voltage to photocells, and sometimes current to exciter lamps and loudspeaker fields. Modern pre-amplifiers and monitor amplifiers commonly draw this operating power from some other amplifying unit of the sound system.

Very small, low-power amplifiers may be mounted on the projector or on the wall of the projection room, deriving their operating power from the main amplifier. They provide preliminary amplification of the weak photocell current before it reaches the main amplifier.

Amplifier arrangements in a small theatre may consist in a single, compact, combination amplifying and power supply unit mounted on the projection room front wall, between projection ports; or alternatively, of such a combination unit plus a small pre-amplifier which receives the initial current from the photo-cell. In larger systems, a number of amplifying network and power supply units are mounted on a steel rack or frame, or in a steel cabinet, which is located at the rear or one end of the projection room, or occasionally built into the wall dividing the projection room from another room of the projection suite. Medium and large-size systems today include a separate monitor amplifier-speaker cabinet, often suspended from the projection room ceiling by steel straps. The monitor amplifier is sometimes self-powered; sometimes, like the photo-cell amplifier, derives its operating currents from the larger system amplifier.

Volume control and sound changeover equipment is today commonly associated with the photo-cell pre-amplifier.

Modern amplifiers or amplifying racks are often equipped with decibel meters for accurate measurement of sound output and quick servicing. Emergency amplifiers may be exact duplicates of the normal amplifying system, or smaller, less elaborate apparatus, and in some systems the monitor amplifier is utilized to supply sound to the audience in an emergency.

ARCHITECTURAL MATERIALS AND DESIGN SERVICE

PROGRESS in chemistry and in manufacturing technique have made available a wide variety of decorative materials to supplement or supplant the familiar marble, stone, brick, ceramic tiles, etc., to which facade architecture was formerly largely restricted. Glass and the plastics known as phenolics are now obtainable in a great variety of colors, and also in patterns.

Porcelain-enameled metal is now well adapted to the creation of colorful fronts; it may be obtained in plates for facing, or attached to concrete masonry blocks. Concrete blocks are also available with facing of architectural glass.

Architectural glass can be had in both facing tiles and structural blocks. The tiles offer a complete selection of colors and a number of patterns (some of them simulating marble). Glass blocks are also available in colors and patterns; they are not only adapted to the construction of architectural features like towers and window effects (admitting light, but assuring privacy), but also to interior partitions. Translucent, glass blocks lend themselves to interesting luminous treatments.

Pressed wood veneers are another contribution of modern industrial methods and are eminently adapted to theatre interiors. (See Acoustical Products and Engineering.)

Also available for friezes, medallions, etc., are plastic figures and bas-reliefs reproduced from authentic works of art.

plied with either brush or sprayer. A variety of colors are obtainable. A pint of the lacquer-enamel will cover about 600 square feet.

The radiant energy required for "black light" effects is not the true ultraviolet used, for example, in the tubular fluorescent lamps developed for illumination purposes, but is near the visible blue portion of the spectrum.

Mercury discharge lamps are best for "black light" effects. The type of lamp most proper depends upon the nature of the application. The latest types of lamps of capacity usually required for theatre applications are the Mazda 100-watt projector spotlight (Ch-4) and the Mazda 100-watt projector floodlight (EH-4), for which fixtures have been especially designed for various conditions of mounting, as a unit, including transformer. Inasmuch as the portion of the light spectrum utilized also produces some visible light, the fixture provides for a filter (Corning No. 587—generally recommended).

Ultraviolet sources usually give off some visible light also; the visible light should be screened out with plates, sleeves or roundels of some filtering glass such as nickel-cobalt.

Special types of lamp equipment for the application of "black light" sources are available in designs adapted to ceiling and wall decoration, and to fluorescent carpeting (see Carpeting).

BOX OFFICES

ISLAND BOX offices, as well as those built into one side of the vestibule or lobby, are commonly built "on the job" from specifications of the architect or other designer of the front and entrance area; however, box offices may be obtained ready for erection, in styles, colors and materials to harmonize with the vestibule or lobby treatment. Architectural glass, glass structural blocks (which may be interestingly illuminated from behind), porcelain-enamelled metal, and some of the phenolics (synthetic materials), are prominent among the materials used today, often with chromium or stainless steel mouldings, and these materials are procurable cut to specifications.

CABINETS, FOR FILM AND CARBONS

REALLY FIREPROOF cabinets for film storage are essential accessories of the projection room if the protection required either by law or theatre operator's responsibility is to be provided both projectionists and patrons. With the 2,000-foot reel standard in the American film industry, film storage facilities should accommodate this size of reel in metal compartments that at least prevent the spread of fire from one compartment to another and reduce the effect of heat as a cause of combustion to a minimum.

The desired safety is provided by a sectional cabinet of relatively thick (approximately 1½ inches) steel walls insulated with fireproof material. Such cabinets are obtainable with or without vents (vents required by fire regulations in some communities) and with or without sprinkler heads inside.

A cabinet for carbons (wherever no suitable compartment is otherwise provided) is a convenient place to keep carbons. The carbons, while drying out, are out of the way so that breakage tends to be reduced. One cabinet will hold several hundred carbons (according to trim) and also provides a handy compartment for small tools.

Colors brilliant and contrasting give this front attention-arresting flash. The entire treatment, including marquee and sign elements, was recently designed and installed by the Artkraft Sign Company for Americo Castelli, owner and operator of the Park, which is in Library, Pa. The front is finished in porcelain enamel. The marquee, also of porcelain enamel (including the attraction frames) is 25 feet wide and has a 7-foot, 4-inch projection. Changeable silhouette letters are Artkraft 5-inch units. Poster frames are of extruded aluminum. Colors of the building facing are two shades of green, two shades of brown, and cream. The marquee colors are red, black and ivory.

CARBONS, PROJECTION

MOTION PICTURE projection carbons are required for projection in most motion picture theatres (all except those using incandescent projection lamps). The type and size of carbons required depends upon the type of arc, and in this connection the reader is referred to the several articles in The Buyers' Index on projection lamps.

CARBON SAVERS

THESE DEVICES, which permit use of carbons down to a very short stub, consist in a metal rod that is clamped into the carbon jaws of the lamp house, one end of the rod being provided with means for holding a stub of carbon that is too short for use in the normal way. There are several methods of attaching the stub to the carbon saver, some of them permitting use of the carbon down to one inch.

carpet of special shape is absolutely required), Patent-Back (a special type consisting in Broadloom sections cut into desired shapes and colors and cemented in a pattern to a backing), Velvet (pattern dyed) and Wilton (pattern woven). The last two are the weaves most widely used in theatres because of their beauty of pattern, durability and relatively moderate price.

Carpeting today provides more than "softness under foot." It is an integral part of the interior treatment of the theatre, a critical element of the entire decorative scheme and the stimulating environmental effect sought. Dominant colors of the carpet should have a direct relation to the influential tones of the general color scheme of each carpeted division of the theatre. Pattern has similar references to the general decorative scheme, harmonizing with it in style, strengthening it in configuration. Traditional patterns are frequently as well adapted to modern-style interiors as patterns specifically modern (or modernistic); many traditional decorative devices, in fact, have been used in modernized versions to effect carpet patterns adapted to both modern and traditional designs.

Theatres are frequently carpeted in a single pattern, but consideration should be given to the advisability of using another design, or a plain Broadloom, or the same design in a smaller scale, for areas like lounges, which differ greatly in size and function from foyers and standee areas.

Carpeting which goes considerably beyond the usual function of carpeting is that in which are used dyes having a high degree of luminescence under near-ultra-violet light (see Black Light Materials and Lighting Equipment). All or part of the pattern may be so woven with luminescent yarns so as to glow, when properly lighted with invisible "black light." In aisles, fluorescent carpeting, as it is called, not only contributes to the visible decorative scheme during the performance, but provide an illuminated aisle without the use of aisle lights in chair standards. Additionally, fluorescent carpeting is well adapted to standee areas, and here the pattern may be given a directional effect, guiding traffic to the aisle heads, and also to lounges if the latter are immediately off this area. In weave and in maintenance, fluorescent carpeting does not differ from non-fluorescent carpeting adapted to theatres (see Black Light Materials and Lighting equipment).

Also available is a floor covering of knitted rayon. This is woven so as to be given a nap surface, and the fabric is vulcanized to a backing of Du Pont "Velvetex" (cellular rubber substance).

CARPET LINING

THEATRE CARPETING should always be laid over pads made for the purpose. Such lining does not merely add to the resilience, therefore the feeling of luxury, of the carpeting; it definitely reduces the wear of the carpet, thus representing a substantial saving in carpeting costs.

There are three general types of carpeting lining: (1) All-jute, or vegetable fibre; (2) hair and jute combined; and (3) All-hair. The latter is made of animal hair, which will not burn (it will singe only), is very durable (a well made all-hair lining will usually outwear the carpeting itself), and does not deteriorate from the effect of moisture. The hair-and-jute type is serviceable according to the amount of hair in it, while the all-jute type is the least desirable in the theatre.

Also available is rubber composition carpet lining, and it has had some application in theatres.

CHAIR FASTENING CEMENT

THE METAL pieces to which theatre chairs are bolted are firmly fastened to the floor by special cement made for that purpose, which hardens in approximately ten minutes. In reseating a theatre, the old chair bolts are removed from the floor, and new ones inserted and recemented. (See Anchors for Chairs.)

CHAIR CUSHIONS OF FOAMED LATEX

CUSHIONS FOR auditorium chair seats and backs (or other chairs, settees, etc.) are obtainable in a porous material made from the milk of the rubber tree and referred to as foamed latex. Such cushions take the place of padding and coil springs, the fabric being fitted directly over them.

This material may be moulded to fit any chair dimensions or design formation. Except for hollow cores, the cushion appears solid, but actually has access to air throughout its structure (there are over a quarter of a million interconnecting air pores to the cubic inch), thus the cushion is completely self-ventilating. Foamed latex cushions are vermin-repellent.

For foyer and lounge furniture, foamed latex cushions are available in standard sizes calculated to fit nearly all chairs, settees, etc. They may be obtained through upholsterers or from jobbers.

oped specifically to meet the conditions encountered in film theatre operation. Prior types were modifications of the "opera chair" of the stage theatre. Today's motion picture theatre chair comprehensively represents new designing to provide luxurious comfort, protection of person, quiet hinge operation, durability under severe usage, and beauty of line, strenthening the whole seating assembly in its contribution to the decorative character of the semi-dark auditorium — achieving these qualities, furthermore, within a price range making all of them essentially accessible even to small, low-budget theatres.

Chairs may be obtained with seat cushions of box-spring or spring-edge type; or with no-sag springs, alone or in combination with coil springs (the no-sag springs absorbing the shock of initial tension imparted to the coils). The backs may of course be either of spring or padded type, and here it should be noted that the choice affects the row spacing, spring back cushions being substantially thicker than padded backs. Also available is a type of chair having a retracting, or push-back, seat, designed to facilitate passage between rows. While end standards may be obtained in special designs, regular models offer a wide choice of patterns, which may be readily executed in colors suggested by the color scheme of the auditorium. Arm rests may be of wood or plastic, in "blonde" shades enhancing visibility.

Acoustic considerations (each chair should represent approximately the sound-absorption of a person, so that the capacity factor affecting volume is fairly constant) demand a fully upholstered chair.

Today there is extensive adoption of soft fabrics (mohair, velour, corduroy), which is often confined to the backs, simulated leather being employed for the seats (except possibly the sides of the seat cushions).

To meet the higher standards of comfort applied today, 20 inches may be generally regarded as minimum for chair width. While widths of 24 inches have been used on occasion, it is probably true that widths of 21 or 22 inches provide better support for the average person and therefore are actually more comfortable for most people. CHANGE MAKERS

OCCUPYING little space in the box office, modern change making machines prevent annoying errors in offering change to a patron and loss to the theatre through mistakes. The correct change is automatically determined upon manipulation of the proper keys, and is delivered into a metal cup, from which it is easily scooped. Not only greater accuracy, but greater speed in handling a line of patrons make change-makers a box office requisite.

For attachment to change makers without such provisions, where admission taxes in pennies are added to the regular price, a penny chute is available. It is clamped to the side of the change-maker and holds about 150 pennies.

CHANGEOVERS

THESE electro-mechanical devices for switching in one projector, and its corresponding sound mechanism, while switching out the other, are obtainable in a number of models, including one with shutter type cut-off in front of the lens, as well as a dowser. All perform their synchronized operation at the touch of a button.

A changeover time indicator is available to supply a warning (bell) at any desirable time prior to changeover, without any connection with film or equipment, the device being essentially a clock with dial provisions for presetting the alarm.

Also available is a marking device for placing a cue signal on the film without mutilation.

CLEANING MATERIALS AND IMPLEMENTS

CLEANLINESS throughout the public areas of the theatre, and at the front exterior as well, is of course imperative at all times, and to reduce the time and labor cost of maintenance are many cleaning and sanitation aids (see also Cleaning Mechanisms, and Deodorants and Perfumes).

The list of such products is a long one; to be regarded as more or less essential for the convenient and effective maintenance of the theatre are a variety of brushes, including those adapted to the cleaning of corners, behind projecting structural elements, etc.; corn brooms, mops and mop pails with dryers (a rubber mop is also available with a squeezing device incorporated in the design); soft dusting and polishing rags, deck brushes for washing rubber mats, terrazzo, etc.; neutral soap and detergents, sweeping compound for floors beneath seating, wood and metal polish, carbon tetrachloride, and gum remover. So that patrons themselves may help to keep the theatre clean, sand urns for cigarette butts, gum wrappers, etc., should be judiciously distributed throughout the lobby, foyer, lounges and standee area.

In connection with cleaning compounds, care should be used to assure use of a compound which requires the least amount of time and will not injure the surface.

For the partial or complete cleaning of carpeting and other fabrics from time to time (that is, dry shampooing, as distinguished from daily vacuum cleaning), a soapless lather is available, which may easily be applied with a rubber mop or similar implement; drying requires but an hour or two. A powder is also obtainable for carpet and fabric cleaning; this is sprinkled on small areas at a time and brushed in, then after a few hours, when the fabric is entirely dry, the residue can be removed with a brush-type vacuum attachment.

For keeping sidewalks free of snow without manual removal, calcium chloride may be sprinkled over the sidewalk when the snow begins to fall. This is available under various trade names.

Safety ladders are also to be considered among cleaning as well as equipment servicing accessories (see Ladders, Safety).

It is here used in a marble pattern across the standee rail and for wainscoting. Manufactured by the Marsh Wall Products, Marlite is available in a variety of textures, patterns and colors. The Park theatre was built by M. M. and J. B. Mohler of Canton. It seats 800.

CLEANING MECHANISMS

ECONOMICAL AND safe cleaning of theatre carpeting, drapes, seating fabrics, etc., require regular and frequent application of vacuum cleaning equipment. Carpeting, for example, should be vacuum-cleaned daily. Vacuum cleaners may be used for other cleaning jobs around the theatre, such as blowing dust from out-of-the-way places, drying wet floors and carpeting, and so on.

Theatres really require heavy-duty vacuum cleaning equipment. Ordinary domestic type cleaners are useful as auxiliary equipment, particularly in theatres not having a central system piped to all areas, but they have neither the endurance nor the suction demanded by theatre cleaning.

Of the heavy-duty equipment, two types may be regarded as specifically adapted to theatre work. One is the central system, with pipes leading to outlets so placed as to provide access at least to all public areas of the theatre. The other is a portable type, with power plant, suction mechanism and dirt disposal equipment on rollers, to which equipment the hose is attached. Portable models are available with motor and suction devices detachable, to be used as a hand unit. Theatres require a hose length on portable models of not less than 20 feet, and this may be provided in two sections, if desired, 10-foot lengths being connected by a brass coupling. Nozzles and brush attachments are available with both central and portable types for every kind of dry pick-up, and also for wet pick-up.

CONDENSERS (LENSES)

THE PROJECTION condenser is located between the lamp house and the projector, and serves to focus the light on the aperture. It serves a similar purpose in spotlight projection. The condenser is a single glass lens, unmounted, made in various shapes—moon shape, plano-convex, bi-convex and meniscus. The diameters of projection condensers range from 2¼ to 7¼ inches; of spotlight condensers, from 5 to 8 inches. Focal lengths for theatre work runs from 6½ to 9½ inches.

(These lenses should not be confused with electrical condensers, which are used in amplifiers and other portions of the sound equipment, and are not lenses, but pairs of conductors spaced by insulation and mounted in a suitable case.)

CUPS, SANITARY FOR DRINKING

INDIVIDUAL PAPER cups should be provided for patrons even though a bubbler fountain is installed. Some patrons much prefer cups for hygienic reasons. Mothers particularly often instruct their children to avoid bubblers (few people are acquainted with the existence of bubbler guards). Cup dispensers therefore should be located within reach of young children, and the cups should be of a shape (flat-bottomed as opposed to cone shape) easily held in small hands.

In many locations, penny dispensers of drinking cups will not be resented by patrons, and in such cases paper cups are a source of some small additional revenue.

CURTAIN CONTROL

SMOOTH AND silent opening and closing of curtains are effected, either from backstage or from the projection room, by automatic machines that operate at the touch of a button. The curtain may be stopped at any point along the stage, or its motion reversed as desired.

The equipment consists of a motor, a steel track and a cable, and snaps to which the curtain is fastened. The motor may be placed in the grids, which makes it possible to fly the entire mechanism, curtain and all. Special models for small theatres are available at relatively low cost.

Also obtainable is a slack-rope takeup de-

CURTAINS AND STAGE DRAPES

CURTAINS USUALLY required for motion picture theatres in which stage performances are not regularly presented, are of the traveller type made up in such fabrics as velour. Asbestos fireproof proscenium-opening curtains are required in some States and all the larger cities in theatres having full stage facilities.

Drapes are commonly indicated for the sides, and across the top of the proscenium opening; the extent to which they are needed is of course dependent upon the design of the proscenium area. Velours are indicated for such drapes also, but rayon-cotton mixtures and similar fabrics are also suitable.

Companies capable of supplying these naterials are also excellent sources of lrapes for other parts of the theatre.

DEODORANTS AND PERFUMES

IN THEATRES not having facilities for contending with sources of disagreeable odors that cannot readily be eradicated, the use of perfumes especially prepared for such conditions is often indicated. Among products of this type available are liquid perfumes to be sprayed before and between performances; powders that may be placed in ornamental wall holders made of porous material; and also highly aromatic pellets, which are placed in a small receptacle that clasps on an incandescent lamp, the heat from the lamp evaporating the perfume oil in the pellet.

DIMMERS

THESE electro-mechanical devices for controlling stage and auditorium illumination permit fading out of any desired set of lights and fading in of others. They are necessary to the gradual changing of color tones in auditorium lighting, and to the production of stage lighting effects commonly desired; in addition, they are highly desirable for raising or lowering house lighting before and after performances.

Dimmers are available in a wide range of capacities and types, from small portable spotlight dimmers to multiple banks controlling a large number of circuits, interlocking and fitted with master controls.

DISPENSING EQUIPMENT FOR CONFECTIONERY

MANY THEATRES have found the sale of pop corn, candy and gum a worthwhile source of extra revenue, and as a result suitable equipment, as well as confectionery distribution organizations, have been developed with theatre requirements prominently in mind. Although the corn popping equipment adapted to theatres reduces odor to a minimum, it is nevertheless advisable to provide partially enclosed space off the vestibule, or outer lobby, for pop corn dispensing. Candy counters may be placed in a foyer if this division of the theatre is completely separated from the auditorium so that seated patrons will not be disturbed.

Models of pop corn equipment are available mounted on wheels, with storage as well as popping provisions, and attractive finish in chromium-plated metal and white porcelain metal.

Candy counters and cases are available in many styles and sizes—for dispensing from the rear or the front, complete showcases and cabinet-finish shelves, in relatively narrow vertical models and horizontal ones, to fit into almost any space that may be conveniently available.

DISPLAY FRAMES, POSTER

POSTER FRAMES built to desired size and in plain or moulded styles, are available in extruded aluminum, in decorative natural wood finish, and in metal-on-wood (kalamein). Extruded aluminum frames cost most (about 75% more than natural wood), but they require practically no maintenance, are not affected by normal settling of the building wall, and last indefinitely.

All-wood frames are obtainable in natural grains (such as walnut and bleached mahogany), with or without a protective coat of clear lacquer; and in common wood lacquered in desired color.

Kalamein frames may be had with finish in stainless steel, chromium, aluminum, bronze and other metals, also in a phenolic, such as Formica.

Recommended lamping is that which is concealed behind the frames, with distribution such as to prevent shadows on the poster. The most efficient type of lamp for the purpose is the lumiline (see Lamps, Incandescent for Theatre Lighting). It is preferable to place them entirely around the poster in cases 40x60 inches or larger; otherwise, the lamps should extend along the edges of greatest dimension.

Poster frames of all types are available complete with frames mounted on veneer case ready for installation in wall recess (the most desirable method) or on the surface of the wall.

EFFECT MACHINES

PATTERNS AND scenic effects with or without animation (such as moving clouds, flames, etc.) are ingeniously obtainable with these special light projection machines, essentially stereopticons, employing various types of effect slides and gelatines.

Backgrounds for stage shows, in color, can be projected and changed at pleasure, or the opening of a feature picture be framed in color or given a superimposed, changing pattern.

Simple and relatively inexpensive spotlights, with color wheel attachment, are also available in models for both short and long throws.

EXPLOITATION MECHANISMS

VARIOUS DEVICES are available for the presentation of scenes from a current attraction or special advertising stills or motion pictures in the vestibule or lobby of the theatre, or in stores and other locations for which suitable arrangements can be made. The simplest type provides for the automatic display of a series of stills or advertising cards.

More impressive is the showing of motion pictures by means of an automatic projector mounted for the rear projection of advance trailers or other advertising films on a small screen. Such equipment may be obtained either with or without sound reproduction facilities.

Posters can be quickly and conveniently made, often by persons of little or no training in poster art, with the aid of a poster projector, which enlarges exploitation material, such as that in press books and other accessories, on the poster sheet, in the original colors, and the image may be readily sketched or painted in.

New FEDERAL AMUSEMENT TAX creates new CHANGE MAKING PROBLEMS

The change making problems created by odd cent admission prices, brought about by the new Federal Amusement Tax, vanish with the installation of the Model 201 Brandt Automatic Cashier. This machine instantly delivers accurate change in any amount from 1c to 99c inclusive by simply pressing ONE KEY! For instance, if the admission is 33c, the cashier merely presses key 33 and the correct change is instantly delivered directly to the patron. There is no delay and no chance for errors as is possible when change is made by hand or with a device requiring the depression of more than one key to deliver change including pennies.

This sturdily constructed Model 201 Brandt will take care of your change making problems for years and years to come. If admission prices should be changed in the future, Model 201 need not be replaced because it will deliver change by pressing one key, regardless of what the admission may be. Brandt Automatic Cashiers are guaranteed for ten years. Actual records show that Brandt's far outlive the guarantee period—some have been in use for from twenty-five to thirty years.

Why not let a Brandt prove itself on the job in your box office? A coupon is provided below so that you can easily arrange for a trial without cost or obligation.

FIRE EXTINGUISHERS

THERE ARE several types of fire extinguishers suitable to theatres—the carbon tetrachloride extinguisher, the soda-and-acid mechanism, the foam type and the portable carbon dioxide hand type. They should be distributed throughout the theatre in accordance with the directions of fire department officials, care being taken that any extinguisher likely to be used in the presence of electrical apparatus is safe for that purpose, and not capable of electrocuting the man who uses it.

FIRE PREVENTION DEVICES, PROJECTOR

THESE ARE automatic dowsers and film-cutters that cut off projection light from the film and also sever the film when any of several controls installed on the projector sets the device into operation. The actuating elements is usually a fusible link, which melts upon ignition of the film.

International Projector Corporation, 88-96 Gold Street, New York City.

FIRE SHUTTERS, PROJECTION ROOM

FIREPROOF shutters for projection room ports isolate the projection room in an emergency (by melting of fusible links in case of fire), operating either automatically or manually. They minimize the chance of panic and lower insurance rates, and are practically always required in theatres by fire regulations.

A special switch is available for tripping the port shutters by electro-mechanical action, instead of by means of fusible links, and at the same time actuating an exhaust fan to draw the fumes into the projection room ventilation duct.

FLASHERS

THESE AUTOMATIC "switch" devices for interrupting intermittently the flow of current to light sources, supply attention-arresting animation to electrical displays that is commonly desirable for marquee decorative schemes and exterior signs, and especially so when the theatre front has to compete with electrical displays immediately surrounding it.

There are three principal types of flashers: drum type (which has been generally superseded by the following later types), mercury contact type (which was found to be especially effective for marquee and sign travelling borders), and the induction disc type, which is regarded as readily adaptable to any type of display.

FLOOR SURFACING MATERIALS, COMPOSITION

FLOOR SURFACING materials suited to lobbies, certain foyer areas (sometimes in conjunction with woven floor coverings), men's lounges (on occasion, also for borders in women's lounges, laid flush with a centrally placed rug) toilet rooms where terrazzo would be too expensive and similar parts of the theatre, are available in several composition substances and forms. The base of the composition may be cork (linoleum) or rubber or asphalt.

Such materials are obtainable in a variety of patterns or in solid-color tiles to be laid in patterns, unless it is preferred to have the flooring in one color.

Composition flooring, preferably in a battleship grey without design, is usually recommended for projection rooms, being less tiring to the projectionists than a painted concrete floor.

FOUNTAINS

MODERN PRACTICE with respect to both design and operating costs give no place in the theatre, ordinarily, to the purely decorative fountain (which once was a part of statuary displays, effecting "garden pools," etc.). Theatre fountains today are essentially drinking fountains, though they may be and commonly are decorative enough. The simplest types are white or tinted porcelain-finished pedestals or wall bowls. The wall types may of course be incorporated into a built-in decorative feature of tiles, or architectural glass, or a mirror; indeed, such ornamental fountain schemes are available in stock designs, complete with decorative lighting provisions, and they are procurable as well complete with bubbler or faucet, and even with so-called "magic-eye" mechanism (See Photoelectric Cell Mechanisms for Doors and Fountains).

It should be noted that old-style bubblers, without a guard preventing the lips from touching the bubbler itself, is not compatible with the sanitation expected in the theatre; in fact, it is good practice to have, perhaps in addition to a protected bubbler, a faucet or spout, with individual paper cups in an ornamental holder, since some patrons (particularly women with small children) fear contamination from any kind of bubbler.

FURNITURE FOR FOYERS AND LOUNGES

FURNITURE durable enough to be practicable for theatre foyer and lounge areas is obtainable today in a variety of styles, in both metal and wood.

Metal furniture, which is markedly durable, is available in chromium, stainless steel and aluminum, with dull or glossy finish. Chairs and settees may be of very simple design, and accordingly very in expensive; or they may be of the fully upholstered type, with coil-spring cushions (feather or down cushions are not indicated for theatres because they do not return to shape). Metal tables, having burn-resistant composition tops (or tops of glass or some phenolic like Formica) are particularly indicated for cosmetic rooms, along with small chairs to match. Neither these, nor metal occasional and end tables are necessarily out of place in a room otherwise having non-metallic furniture, especially when the wood furniture is of definitely modern design (like so-called "Swedish modern").

Wood furniture may of course be selected from the better-built pieces adapted to home living rooms, but to be really practicable these should be merely of wood construction, with the frame fully covered in durable fabric (eliminating armrests, feet, etc., in woods like walnut or mahogany). Moderately priced wood furniture of sturdy construction which is suited to theatres quite as well as to homes is that of birch and maple, which may be obtained in novel "modern" designs, and also in rustic or Early American styles, with "wheat" (pale yellow) or the darker maple finish.

HEARING AIDS

THESE RECEIVING instruments (phones) either of air conduction or bone conduction type, to assist patrons whose hearing is impaired, may be regarded as standard equipment for motion picture theatres today, with from five to ten outlets (two seats served by one outlet) usually considered sufficient. The receivers are plugged into suitable outlet boxes permanently mounted and wired in selected seating locations. Individual volume controls which the patrons can adjust at will, may be provided either on the outlet boxes or on the cord leading to the receiver.

Sound may be taken from the main theatre system, either directly or through an auxiliary amplifier, or may be picked up via microphone from the screen speakers and passed through a low-power amplifier that is part of the hearing aid system. Because of the relatively large number of people who do not hear well, and their varied influence on theatre attendance, group hearing aids are to be regarded as regular equipment for the motion picture theatre.

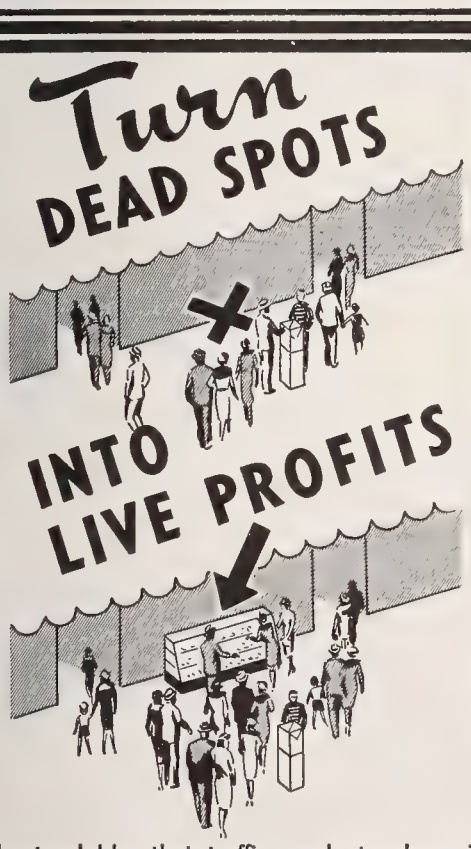
HEATING SYSTEMS AND ACCESSORIES

HEATING SYSTEMS used in the theatre present different requirements from those of other public buildings because of the concentration of occupants in the auditorium, and the wide variation in the number that may be present at any given time.

Heat distributing systems are of two general kinds, those using standard steam radiators or convection type units, and those circulating masses of warmed air through a ventilating system. The latter may of course be part of a complete air conditioning system (see Air-Conditioning and Ventilating Equipment).

Oil and gas are preferable as the fuel where automatic control is provided in the system and when their cost is comparable to that of coal. With coal, automatic stokers reduce labor and insure efficient use of fuel.



It is a measure of economy in some theatres having air-conditioning for the auditorium, possibly also for the foyer, or a ventilation system for the auditorium, to use unit heaters for other divisions, such as lounges and toilet rooms, lobby, manager's office, etc.

Unit heaters are obtainable for connection to existing steam systems, or they may be individually heated by gas. Also, they are available for exposed installation as well as for concealed locations.

INTERCOMMUNICATING HOUSE PHONES

TO INSURE the manager's control over every department of theatre operation, and efficient co-ordination of the activities of different departments, suitable methods of signal or communication are indispensable. The simplest are mere buzzer systems, as sometimes used, for example, to advise the projection staff that a change in sound volume is necessary, but the limitations of the buzzer do not allow different departments to report to the management or permit communicaiton of any but the simplest instructions.

House phones for more effective inter-department contact are used by most theatres. They range in design from simple, two-station communicating lines to elaborate dial systems by which any station can make contact with any other.

Loud-talking systems, consisting essentially in distant-pickup with any other microphones and miniature speakers are also adapted to theatre intercommunication.

INTERIOR DECORATION SERVICE AND MATERIALS

MODERN STYLES of interior treatment have eliminated much of the ornamentation formerly characteristic of theatres (most of it expensive), but they have advanced their own devices, such as geometric and abstract patterns in paint, metal, phenolics, etc. Fabric (usually cotton-rayon damask) is frequently used to conceal sound-absorbing blanket. Wall paper of the more durable types (such as Tekko and Salubra) merits consideration for limited areas, as do leatherette and linoleum. Then there are the tiles, wood veneers, and so on, many of them to be considered for their acoustic values as well as decorative qualities (see Acoustical Products and Engineering; also refer to Curtains and Drapes).

Lighting today is a principal source of decorative effect, by means of either built-in sources (coves, troughs, etc.) or fixtures, possibly employing several colors (commonly amber, blue, red or green, in addition to white) with circuits controlled to permit gradual mixing (see Dimmers). So-called "black light" also permits interesting decorative effects, such as glowing figures in darkened niches, or ornamental patterns picked out in fluorescent paint (see "Black Light" Materials and Lighting Equipment; also see Lamps, Incandescent for Theatre Lighting, and Lighting, Architectural and for Public Areas).

Statues and bas-reliefs based on classic, patriotic and other themes, are available in stock reproductions, many of them relatively inexpensive and well adapted to theatres of modern as well as traditional style.

LAMPS, AC ARC

THE TYPE OF light source here referred to is a modern application of alternating current to motion picture projection employing a special means of modifying 60-cycle current for the purpose of eliminating current alternation as a cause of flicker. Screen illumination levels and operating costs are such that the equipment is marketed as a high-intensity light source adapted to the small and medium-sized theatre.

Current modification is provided by a rotary transformer that is excited by the line frequency but delivers 96-cycle alternating current, or at a frequency exactly twice that of the shutter. The trim is 7-mm. x 14 "Suprex" positive carbons, unrotated.

LAMPS, HIGH-INTENSITY

PROJECTION ARCS of high-intensity characteristics for operation on direct current are of two general classes—condenser and reflector types. The high-intensity reflector types in turn are divided into two classes—the type generally known as Hi-lo, and the so-called low-voltage high-intensity arc. The Hi-lo type may be regarded technologically today as having been superseded (except for existing installations) by the low-voltage high-intensity arc, which employs a relatively new type of copper-coated carbon of small diameter and with a core of rare-earth elements, and is further distinguished by the horizontal position of both carbons and non-rotation of the positive.

Further development in carbon manufacture and lamp mechanisms has resulted in a d.c. lamp designed to supersede also the low-intensity arcs used in the smaller theatres, so that all theatres today can have the advantage of white projection light, equal in quality to the light of the larger theatre which uses condenser type high-intensity equipment operated at 120-130 amperes and 65-70 volts. (See also Lamps, A.C. Arc).

Low voltage high-intensity arcs adapted to medium-size houses are operated at currents ranging from 35 to 65 amperes, and 31 to 40 volts at the arc. Carbon combinations are 6 mm. positive, 5 mm. negative for from 35 to 40 amperes; 7 mm. positive, 6 mm. negative for from 42 to 50 amperes; and 8 mm. positive, 6.5 or 7 mm. negative for from 56 to 65 amperes.

Designed to replace the low-intensity arcs formerly manufactured for the medium to small-size theatre are the new intermediate capacity high-intensity D.C. lamps, utilizing a cored negative carbon specifically made to give smooth operation at very low current densities, and operating at 40 amperes, 27-27½ volts, or about one kilowatt at the arc.

LAMPS, INCANDESCENT FOR PROJECTION

INCANDESCENT lamps for theatre motion picture projection are characterized by a high degree of source concentration and relatively high wattage. The most effective lamp for this purpose—namely, the 2,100-watt, 60-volt T-24 bulb lamp—is designed for lower voltage to secure additional source concentration. Hence a transformer with voltage-regulating characteristics is required. This lamp provides relatively acceptable illumination on screens up to 16 feet wide and throws not to exceed 100 feet.

There are also available 1,000-watt prefocus base, and 1,500-watt bipost base, 100-120 volt, T-20 bulb lamps employing the biplane filament construction. This construction makes possible relatively high source concentration for lamps operating at ordinary circuit voltages and thus saves the cost of auxiliary apparatus.

That's the case of many of your patrons. To secure desired screen brilliancy with today's dense black and white pictures and proper projection of colored films, a snow white light is required . . . twice as much light as is possible to project by any low intensity lamp.

The 1,000- and 1,500-watt lamps are frequently employed in projectors of the semi-portable type.

For portable 35-mm. motion picture projectors there are the 500-watt monoplane-filament, and the 750-watt and 1,000-watt biplane filament lamps in T-20 bulbs with medium-prefocus bases. The 750-watt and 1,000-watt require forced ventilation.

A newer type of 1,000-watt projection lamp is designed to burn base down and as a result of a new method of internal construction and of burning the filaments at higher temperature the lamp increases by 50% the light available from incandescent sources of this wattage. Because it maintains screen illumination at so high a percentage of the original intensity, this lamp does not require the inclusion of anti-blackening electric grids internally.

For stereopticon projectors there are the 500-watt short T-20, medium-prefocus base projection lamp, and the 1,000-watt long T-20 bulb, mogul-prefocus base lamp. Both are of the 100-120-volt type and employ monoplane filaments.

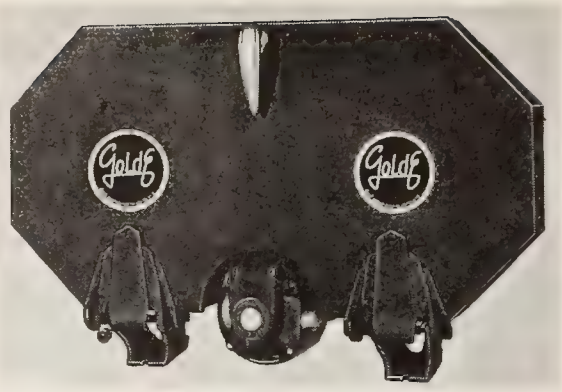
LAMPS, INCANDESCENT FOR THEATRE LIGHTING



GENERAL SERVICE lamps —available in sizes from 15 to 1,500 watts —serve the majority of lighting applications in and around theatres. Except for the tubular bulb bipost lamps, all are designed for burning in any position; all are available with inside-frosted finish to diffuse the light, to eliminate filament striations, and to produce a smoother lighting effect. The frosting absorbs little light—in fact, inside-frosted and clear lamps (clear lamps are regularly available in sizes above 100 watts) have the same rating in light output.

Inside-colored lamps for sign and decorative service: The general service lamps mentioned above are suitable for enclosed lamp signs and luminous displays where protected from rain and snow. For outdoor exposed applications, a line of vacuum lamps from 6 to 50 watts is available in frosted and inside-colored types.

Outside-colored lamps: Several sizes of outside-colored lamps are also listed in round and flame-shaped bulbs.

Lumiline lamps: Available in colors and in 30 and 60 watts (length 17¾ inches) and 40 watts (length 11¾ inches), these tubular lamps have, by their physical shape, introduced new concepts of decorative lighting design. They may be used exposed or in narrow reflecting and shielding equipment. The standard colors are white, straw, orange, moonlight blue, emerald and surprise pink.

Also on the market is a filament tubular lamp which differs from the "lumiline" in that it plugs in along its length instead of at the ends, thus permitting an interrupted line of light. These lamps are also available in higher wattages—up to 200 watts. Lengths of units are 6, 12, 18 inches, etc., up to 36, and there are three diameters. They may be obtained in sprayed colors, sprayed white and opal glass. A feature of this filament lamp is that it may be bent to most any desired shape for architectural and fixture effects.

Fluorescent lumiline lamps: These are much more efficient than the filament-type lumiline lamps, and are particularly recommended for color lighting, since the color is not created by the glass of the bulb, but in the light itself. The lamp is of the electric discharge type, using mercury vapor as the medium for sustaining the arc. Ultra-violet radiation is produced in the tube, which acts upon certain chemicals (the nature of which varies according to the color or tone of white light desired) with which the interior of the bulb has been treated. The reaction of the chemical to the electronic bombardment produces visible light. These lamps are available in three lengths —18, 24 and 36 inches, and in two diameters. Being arc lamps, they require a special control unit. Nominal wattages are 15, 20, and 30.

Reflector incandescent lamps: These are of a special type adapted to display lighting, having a pressed glass reflector and light-redirecting cover lens as part of a funnel-shaped bulb. It is available with two types of cover lenses, one for wide beam, other for narrow. It fits the regular sockets.

LAMPS, LOW-INTENSITY DC ARC

LOW-INTENSITY projection lamps are reflector type projection light sources operated at from 15 to 42 amperes, direct current. This arc is relatively inexpensive in both carbon and operating cost and produces illumination which has been regarded as sufficient in intensity for small theatres, but crater burning characteristics are such that the light has a yellow tint, instead of being the snow-white light produced by high-intensity type arcs. In fact, a high-intensity arc may be regarded as necessary to the satisfactory projection of color films in theatres.

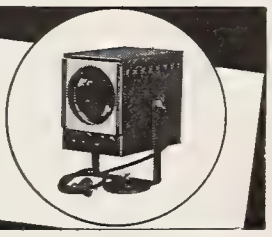
LENSES, PROJECTION

THERE ARE two general classes—the condenser lens, which focuses the projection light on the aperture (See Condensers); and the objectives. The latter are commonly referred to as the projection lenses; they focus the light upon the screen. They are made in four standard diameters, with focal length as determined by the size of the screen image desired, and its distance from the projector.

Knowing these factors, the supply dealer or the lens manufacturer readily determines the focal length required. In ordering projection lenses, one should also name the type of light source, projection angle and the make and model of the projector.



Stock focal lengths are usually in quarter sizes from 3 to 7 inches, 7½ and 8 inches.

In addition to the regular optical glass projection lenses corrected for color and flatness of field, so called "coated" lenses are available. They differ in that the optical components have inner and outer surfaces chemically treated so as to effect a certain disintegration of surface and a re-

LETTERS, ATTRACTION BOARD

SINCE THE MARQUEE of the motion picture theatre (with rare exceptions) functions mostly as an advertising medium, the attraction display space is a dominant feature, and equipment developments now permit the handling of copy in a typographical method not unlike that of printed advertising. For such typographical treatment, the silhouette letter with lighted panel, designed for interchangeability of different sizes of letters, is necessary. The only interchangeable attraction board letters other than those of silhouette type are glass block letters with opaque grounds, emitting light through the letters themselves.

Silhouette letters are of cast aluminum, practically eliminating breakage. They are available in interchangeable sizes of 8, 10, 12, 16, 24 and 30 inches. Also obtainable are 4-inch letters which are mounted in their own frame, which in turn is mounted on the panel where desired. Six-inch letters are obtainable but are not interchangeable with the others.

Panels of opal glass, with the necessary lamp box mounting, may be of any dimensions (see Marquees). For flexibility of copy arrangement, and legibility, a panel height providing for at least three lines is necessary (this permits a vertical variation covering five lines). Panels may be had with rounded glass corners allowing a continuous attraction board around the marquee or elsewhere.

To avoid monotony and illegibility, at least three sizes of letters are recommended. These will be determined by the size of the panel and local needs, but fonts of 10-, 16- and 24-inch letters have been found to meet average conditions.

The panels, set in metal frames with steel rods on which the letters are mounted, are installed in movable sections (entirely removable, sliding or hinged) to provide convenient access to the lamp box.

LIGHTING, ARCHITECTURAL AND FOR PUBLIC AREAS

IN ADDITION to the part that sign and marquee play on the architectural effect of the theatre facade, light may effectively contribute to the front design, maintaining its daytime values after dark, or even adding to them, by flooding the entire upper front, or parts of it, by means of reflector sources on the roof of the marquee; by outlining architectural features with neon or lumiline lamps; by creating panels or stripings of light by means of neon or lumiline or regular lamp sources concealed behind architectural structures, and so on to the limit of the ingenuity of the designer.

For the public areas of the interior, lighting facilities are to be divided into two

THE B&L SUPER CINEPHOR f:2

WITH 25% MORE LIGHT TRANSMISSION

Bausch & Lomb now offers the f:2 Super Cinephor which actually delivers 25% more light on the screen. Light lost in previous lenses by surface reflection (4-6% at each air to glass surface) is made to do useful work. A new process of treating lens surfaces minimizes reflections and makes this f:2 lens have a light efficiency that hitherto would have been possible only at f:1.79.

Not only is there 25% more light on the screen, but also a gain in contrast and crispness. Shadow detail is not diluted by distributed light. Color films, too, have greater purity and brilliance.

general classifications—(1) built-in sources, and (2) fixtures.

Built-in sources include coves and troughs, recessed light boxes (usually having a diffusing device, like concentric louver-rings, or covered with flush-set panels of translucent glass, with or without diffusing ribs), and so-called downlights, consisting in ceiling reflectors or projectors behind tiny apertures in the ceiling, with the light beam directed to cover precisely a prescribed area.

Both classes of light sources are suited to modern interior treatments; indeed, even though built-in sources be used in the auditorium, or perhaps the foyer as well, fixtures may serve the needs of the lobby, or the lounge, more economically. Either method, of course, may well be used throughout the interior, for each embraces a vast array of practicable devices for efficient illumination and effective decoration.

Modern fixtures are available in stock designs of great variety—bracket or pylon luminaires, flush-type ceiling drums and boxes, suspended troughs, ceiling bowls, wall urns, etc., constructed of metal or glass or both, variously ornamented in the same materials, in direct, indirect and direct-indirect types, or with light emission through decorative louvers, in sizes to suit every location, and at prices to make modern luminaires accessible to theatres of the most modest budgets. Specially designed luminaires are obtainable at relatively moderate cost.

While incandescent lamps (as distinguished from the gas tube sources generally referred to as neon) are more flexibly adapted to theatre interior illumination, and also have maintenance advantages, neon has its interior applications, confined largely to cove and trough lighting.

MARQUEES

A MARQUEE is to be regarded as essential to the motion picture theatre. There are exceptions, due to location and form of building, but not many. Its function as a means of protection for patrons from rain and snow has become of less importance than its function as an advertising medium. It advertises the theatre and the program, by distinguishing the building from other commercial establishments on the street, by the theatricalism of its lighting, by advertising the program.

Marquees today have become more closely associated with the general architectural form of the theatre front than they originally were. They are frequently constructed according to specifications supplied by the architect, who has designed the marquee itself, along with other display and sign elements of the front, as a part of the facade.

Another later development is unit construction of marquees, providing prefabricated marquees to fit most any theatre entrance, complete with all attraction board equipment, and also with theatre name sign (vertical or otherwise), if desired.

Most marquees have been rectangular in shape, but because the greatest amount of announcement space on such marquees cannot be read up and down the street, particularly on the side on which the theatre is located, other shapes have come into vogue, notably one combining rectangular with triangular forms.

Marquees are generally of sheet metal construction, painted, or with porcelain enamel finish in desired colors, with soffits of metal or glass illuminated by incandescent lamps or lighting troughs. There are, of course, many variations in pattern and illumination; however, the design should provide for attraction advertising panels with changeable letters (see Letters, Attraction Board) as integral parts of the structure.

MATS, RUBBER FOR ENTRANCE AREAS

HEAVY-DUTY corrugated rubber mats for vestibules, or corrugated rubber mats for the entire entrance area, are to be regarded as standard equipment for the average theatre, if not all theatres, since they are the principal means of reducing to a minimum the amount of dirt carried into the theatre on the shoes of patrons. These mats give needed service in dry as well as wet weather. Mud may be especially noticeable and therefore detrimental to appearance, but the dry dirt, much of it consisting in sharp, hard particles, is what cuts the carpeting.

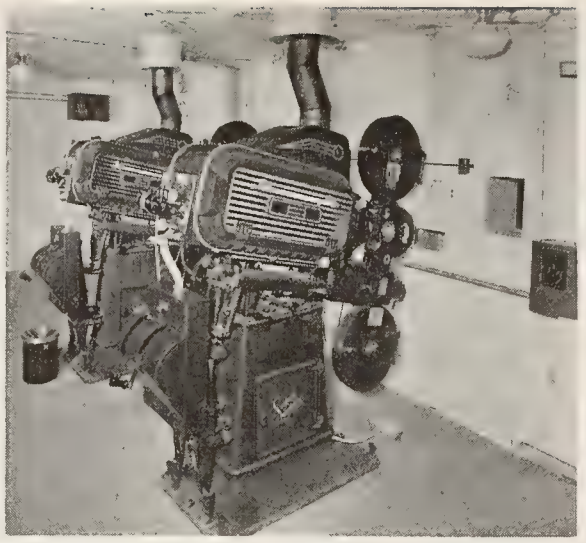
Lobby mats, as they are generally called, should cover all of the floor of the immediate entrance area (as far as the point where carpeting begins, unless there is an especially long inner lobby) that constitutes traffic lanes. In entrance area of moderate width or less, the traffic lanes will extend within a foot or so of the side walls. The rubber mat may be laid on top of a floor of terrazzo or tile, but preferably it should lay in recess, flush with a border of terrazzo or ceramic, stone or asphalt tile.

It is also desirable to place lighter rubber mats (not necessarily of the link type, but preferably so) just inside the entrance to the carpeted area, laying it flush with the pile of the carpet.

Lobby mats are obtainable in a variety of standard colors, but special mats may be made up in colors as desired and also in interesting patterns, which may be given directional lines guiding traffic (of particular value when an inner lobby or foyer is at right angles to the sidewalk), and also be designed to incorporate an emblem symbolizing the name of the theatre.



Metal link mats, thicker and more rugged than regular lobby mats, are available for use in vestibules and lobbies during wet weather.

PUBLIC ADDRESS SYSTEMS

PUBLIC ADDRESS and sound-re-enforcement systems may provide any one or all of various services. They can be designed for amplifying stage sound, for managers' announcements, for ballyhoo.

In the theatre the public address system may consist of microphones suitably connected to the standard sound installation, or an entirely separate system, with its own amplification, wiring and also speakers, may be employed. Hearing aids may be used in association with any type of theatre public address reproduction.

Separate record-playing devices for reproduction of standard phonograph discs, through the sound or public address system, are available for exit music, pre-show or lobby entertainment, or attraction music outside the box office.

RECTIFIER TUBES

VACUUM AND gas-filled tubes used to convert alternating current to direct current are made in many ratings. The smaller sizes are commonly thought of as being in the category of radio or amplifier tubes. But while there is no distinction in principle of operation, the larger sizes, having current capacities of from 2½ to 30 amperes, are by custom classified separately.

These are often described by their best-known trade name as "Tungar" tubes. In the theatre such tubes are used to provide rectified direct current to arc lamps and to sound exciter lamps.

RECTIFIERS AND POWER UNITS

RECTIFIERS are devices that employ rectifying tubes or copper compound rectifying assemblies (dry type) for the purpose of converting alternating current to direct current. The larger sizes are fan-cooled, and supply direct current to the projection arc.

The smaller sizes are of somewhat different design electrically, incorporating electrical filters to insure smooth d.c. output, and to supply power to exciter lamps, speaker fields, tube filaments and other parts of the sound system.

REELS

REELS NECESSARY for takeup magazines of projectors and also otherwise constantly utilized in the projection room, are available in a number of sizes and types of construction. The standard reel in the United States (since September 1, 1936) has a diameter of 14½ inches, and a 4½-inch hub for the accommodation of the film lengths up to 2,000 feet. Reels are also available in the former American standard size (diameter 10 inches, hub 2 inches) while another available size adapted to the standard American film length of 2,000 feet has a diameter of 15 inches. Reels of this size are available in aluminum and in stamped steel construction as well as in the cheaper (and far less durable) types. (See Takeup, Film.)

REFLECTORS FOR INCANDESCENT LAMPS

METAL RECEPTACLES for incandescent lamps, having a reflecting inside finish and with a curvature calculated to make most efficient use of available light, are obtainable in several types adapted particularly to marquee trim and soffit lighting, to sign letter lamping, sign borders, display lighting, and similar uses.

There are several types and sizes of reflectors designed for low-wattage lamps, equipped with a glass roundel, or cover, which not only protects the lamp and reflector, but provides color if desired without use of colored lamps. These reflectors produce effective illumination equivalent to 25 watts with 7½-watt lamps, and to 40 watts with 10-watt lamps.

Other types of reflectors have swivel mounting, readily permitting reflection of the light in any direction.

REWINDERS, FILM

FILM REWINDERS are available in two general types, open and fireproof enclosed. The open type is offered in a number of different models, either as a single unit or as two separate units that are clamped to the rewind table, or bolted in place. The enclosed type is a single unit.

Both open and enclosed types may be hand-driven or motor-driven, may have sleeve bearings or ball bearings, may accommodate either 1,000- or 2,000-foot reels, or both, and may have either one or several driving speeds.

Some of the motor-driven types incorporate accessories by means of which the same motor can be used for general machine work, such as grinding and polishing.

Rewind tables of metal provide a fireproof work bench especially adapted to projection room needs and are available with tool drawer, rack for film cabinet, and clamping blocks accommodating any type of rewinder.

SCREENS, PROJECTION

THE SCREEN, an integral and vital part of the projection-sound systems, is properly selected according to the dimensions of the auditorium, including the distance from last row to screen, and to its sound transmission characteristics (attenuation factor of the perforations).

Technically, screens are of three general types: Diffusive, for auditoriums having a ratio between width and depth of approximately 3½ or more, to 5; Semi-Diffusive, for auditoriums tending toward the narrow; and Specular, for auditoriums definitely elongated. Another type of screen is Translucent, used with rear projection.

In surface treatment (which is more or less associated with the critical materials used in general fabrication) screens are "white," plastic, "silver" (metallic) or "beaded" (glass). Specular screens are either "silver" or "beaded."

Ignoring the solid screen (unperforated), screens may be further divided into those consistently perforated throughout the image area; and those variably perforated (perforated only at speaker area, with holes of receding diameters).

Plastic screens are the latest development in this field. They are fabricated of a special composition (differing according to manufacturer) which, forming the essential body of the fabric, supplies the reflective surface as well. The type was developed in large part for the purpose of reducing the rate of surface deterioration and of increasing reflection power.

SIGNS (ELECTRIC) FOR THEATRE NAME

ELECTRIC SIGNS (metal framework with illumination provisions) are available in a wide variety of designs more or less closely associated with the architecture of the theatre front. While they are commonly especially designed by the architect or sign construction company, there are also stock designs adaptable to the theatre front. Gas tube (neon) and incandescent lamp illumination have been found effective for these signs in combination as well as alone, and either type of lighting can be flashed.

Horizontal name signs have normally been more closely associated with the marquee than the vertical sign has, but often the vertical sign can be effectively related to the marquee and entrance by continuing the sign illumination scheme down to the marquee and even across its soffit. It is to be noted that a prefabricated type of marquee is available complete with theatre name signs either vertical or horizontal and all electrical facilities.

SIGNS, DIRECTIONAL

DIRECTIONAL SIGNS, including exit signs, those designating men's and women's rooms, lounges, balcony stairs, etc., are now available in a wide range of stock designs, while they may be made up in special designs at relatively low cost. Instead of being more or less confined to plain metal lamp boxes, such as were particularly employed at one time for exit signs, stock types now are obtainable with decorative shapes, fluted chromium finish, etched glass, etc., in colors and also with appropriate figures.

SLIDES, PROJECTION

SLIDES FOR the projection of song lyrics, advertising and effects are made either of glass or other material suitably transparent. The more elaborate slides, carrying pictorial matter or designs, are usually of glass, while a flexible transparent material permits the ready preparation of an announcement slide on a typewriter, the blank material being kept on hand and, when written upon, inserted into a frame.

SPEAKERS AND HORNS

TO CONVERT the electrical product of amplification into audible sound, speaker "units" are available in considerable variety. The practice now is to use two types of speakers to reproduce different bands of sound frequencies.

Speakers are available in a.c. types, in a great variety of d.c. types, and in the new permanent magnet types that need no field excitation.

Baffles are required with every speaker. The simplest is flat board, behind which the speaker is mounted, large enough to provide baffling for the lowest frequency to be reproduced. In many auditoriums, however, the "folded" baffle provides a longer sound path, and therefore better "loading," for the low-frequency speakers. Directional trumpets or baffles are used for high-frequency speakers or tweeters, consisting of clusters of small trumpets operated by a single tweeter being favored. These arrangements secure better distribution of the high frequencies, which have a normal tendency to travel in straight lines, over-supplying some seats and missing many others entirely. Clusters of directional baffles applied to the tweeters correct this tendency.

TEST REELS

FOR MEASURING and checking projection and reproduction, both mechanical and acoustic, various test reels have been developed. A set of test reels always available in the theatre permit convenient checking of conditions periodically, to detect defects before they have developed to a critical degree, as well as to ascertain causes and to make adjustments after faults have become apparent. Reels covering projection include material and calibrations for optical system alignment, definition, film weave, and many other factors. Sound test reels cover reproduction characteristics at various frequencies and volume levels, acoustic measurements, etc., etc. Prices vary according to purpose and calibration.

TICKET REGISTERS

AUTOMATICALLY registering ticket dispensers facilitate the handling of box office peaks, and impart the impression of efficiency, cleanliness and business-like methods; they eliminate all excuses for errors on the part of the cashier (some type of dispensers make the usual errors impossible); and they may be regarded as necessary to any real assurance that box office losses are not occurring through cashier-doorman collusion. They are obtainable in motor-driven and manually operated types.

The most elaborate system for keeping ticket sales under control of the management embraces both the ticket issuing mechanism and the ticket itself. The cashier, when going on duty, turns a knob to a specific number assigned to her, at a time clock, then releases a ticket from each unit, and these tickets, with her code number and time printed on them, are pasted on her report form. A special water-marked ticket paper is used, of a precise thickness to which the machine is exactly adjusted, preventing substitution.

Additionally, ticket rolls are designed for issuance and tearing in a special manner calculated to prevent dishonesty, while other refinements introduce similar safeguards.

Also available is a device for attachment to the ticket register which, by electrical connection to the mechanism for releasing tickets, automatically flashes on an indicator board suspended in the box office window, the total price that the patron is to pay for the tickets.

TOILET ACCESSORIES

THE PROVISION of soap paper towels, etc., for the use of the public, is not to be regarded as merely a service to patrons; such provision, maintained constantly, contributes to the cleanliness of the toilet rooms, thus reducing maintenance work of the theatre staff. These supplies do represent a service, of course, the absence of which can create considerable ill will toward the theatre.

The soap should be preferably of liquid-type, available from a handy dispenser. Built-in dispensers with only the spout visible above each lavatory, are preferable to the glass bowl type in that they are neater and are theft-proof. Paper towel dispensers should be as accessible, supplied with towels of at least 32-pound stock.

Toilet paper should be of at least 10-pound stock and dispensed by holders using either flat folded sheets, or issuing two sheets at a time. These may be obtained in chrome-plated metal or in synthetic materials to match compartment color.

For greatest cleanliness and acceptance by patrons, water closet seats should be of the incomplete rim, rather than the full-rimmed, type. Rubber composition seats obtainable in this shape are particularly durable. Also available is a chrome-metal seat with only supporting blocks of wood at the sides.

Theatre Seat Covering

YES, there is a colorful, easily-cleaned leatherette that offers you both low original cost and maintenance economy.

U. S. NAUGAHYDE'S famous resistance to scratching and rubbing assures you year-after-year upkeep savings. Naugahyde is the upholstery School-Bus people prefer because it's tougher than scrappy school kids. You get the same rough-and-tumble wearing quality in the most exquisite theatre-seat shades.

TEMPERED AGAINST ABRASION!

Naugahyde does not depend, for its abrasion-resistance, on a separate "finishing coat." Instead, extra toughness is chemically "tempered" right into the composition. "Tempering" provides a wear-defying surface, yet leaves the material completely flexible. That's one reason why Naugahyde, for all its rugged wear, feels so luxuriously soft and supple. Another reason is that Naugahyde combines pliable, resilient RUBBER with strong fibres of GENUINE LEATHER.

UNIFORMS

THEATRE PRESTIGE emphasized through service, is greatly enhanced by costumes worn by attendants.

Uniforms should be made to individual measurements to assure perfect fit and neatness at all times. Catalogues are available containing appropriate suggestions as to proper styles for each class of personnel, and also as to summer and winter fabrics.

Collars for ushers are obtainable in reversible type so that when one side gets dirty the collar may be turned with other side out thus doubling the time that a single collar may be used before laundering.

UPHOLSTERING MATERIALS

UPHOLSTERING materials are of importance in theatre operation, first in relation to auditorium seating, second as coverings for foyer and lounge furniture. They may be divided into two general kinds—(1) soft fabrics, and (2) simulated leather.

The soft fabrics regarded as suited to motion picture theatre auditorium chairs are mohair, velour and corduroy, and these are of course available in various grades. Because of the hard usage to which theatre auditorium seating is subjected, and the liability of the theatre management for discoloration of clothes due to unstable dye, the cheaper grades should never be used.

There are two general classes of simulated leather, that having a coating of rubber-base type, and that with paroxylin-base

DOES YOUR AMPLIFIER NEED AN ICE PACK?

Overheating and overloading of sound equipment and amplifiers are often traced back to voltage variation in the A.C. power source—a condition automatically corrected with Raytheon Voltage Stabilizers. These low cost units keep voltage constant, insure audience satisfaction by preserving the recorded sound levels, prevent shortened life of tubes and parts due to overloading.

Tests show 5% voltage variation causes unpleasant changes (up to 7DB) in sound level. Get a "smooth show" and protect your equipment with Raytheon Voltage Stabilizers. Write today for bulletin DL48-71BT.

coating. Each is available in different grades, according to weight or thickness. The rubber-base type is the more expensive, but it is also regarded more durable under stress of flexing. Leatherettes are obtainable in a large variety of standard colors and off-shades, and also in "antique" finishes having a worked leather pattern effect.

One of the makes of simulated leather of auditorium seating quality is also available in a so-called "ventilated" type. It derives this classification from the presence of tiny apertures, approximately the size of pin-holes, which are effected, not by piercing of the fabric, but by separation of the threads in manufacture, and the aperture edges are seared, making them permanent. In all but the extremely light colors these holes are normally unseen when the fabric is applied to a cushion. The purpose of the apertures is to provide outlet for air upon compression of the cushion. (See also Chairs, Auditorium.)

Simulated leather is suited to foyer and lounge furniture. Here, however, and particularly in women's lounges, soft fabrics are often preferred for their suggestion of luxurious comfort, and also for the colorful patterns available. Of the soft fabrics, those most often used for lounge and foyer furniture are the cottons and wools, or cotton-rayon mixtures, having a firm texture and minimum of nap.

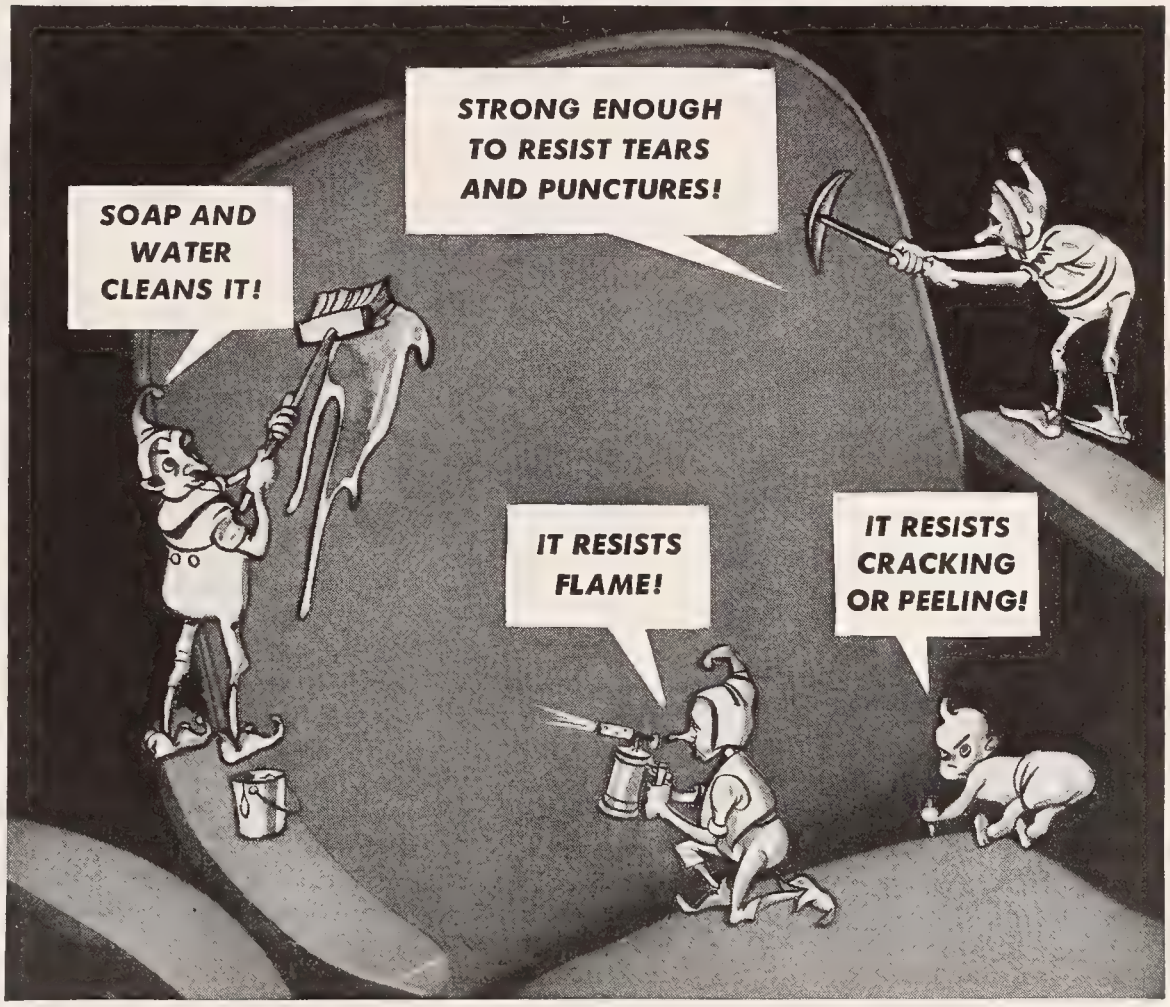
VOLTAGE REGULATORS



WHILE ELECTRIC power companies are supposed to maintain their lines at approximately established voltage, they cannot be depended on to do so in some communities. This is true of some industrial areas, but the condition is most often found in small cities and villages, particularly those receiving their power from distant points by high-tension lines. Resulting fluctuation of voltage, which may be pronounced at certain times of the day, has its most critical effect on the sound system. Only slight variation in voltage can produce noticeable fluctuation of volume, and greater variation, particularly when the period of aberration is prolonged, can injure components of the sound system.

Voltage regulators of inexpensive type, but fully automatic, are available for the control of such line fluctuations. For stabilizing current to all of the sound system except the motors (and the motors do not ordinarily need to be included), capacities of from 500 to 1,000 watts cover theatre requirements.

● The increase in light with Simplex E-7 can be seen with the naked eye, and the improved definition adds to the patron's enjoyment of the picture. This improved light is due to the Simplex E-7 Synchronized Front and Rear Shutters which give more light and a cleaner, sharper picture without extra cost for current.

OTHER IMPORTANT ADVANTAGES OF SIMPLEX E-7 WHICH ARE MONEY-SAVING FEATURES AND ALSO ADD TO THE ENTERTAINMENT VALUE OF THE PICTURE.

INTERMITTENT MOVEMENT — Readily removable. Intermittent oil cushion permits closer tolerance between cam ring and star wheel, and increases shock absorption. Reduces Vibration.

ONE-SHOT OILING SYSTEM — Automatically supplies the correct amount of filtered oil — under pressure — and eliminates faulty lubrication.

DEMOUNTABLE FILM TRAP — Only two screws to loosen and film trap comes out. Greatly lessens the possibility of film scratching.

AUTOMATIC FIRE SHUTTER SAFETY TRIP — Releases fire shutter when film remains stationary. Cuts off light and heat at aperture. ABSOLUTE FIRE SAFETY.

REMOVABLE FILM GATE — Readily demountable for cleaning and adjustment.

FILM GATE STUDS — Gate wobble eliminated. Help steady the image. Proof against wear.

CONE-SHAPED PAD SPRINGS — Pad keeps both edges of film under equal tension. Reduces sprocket wear.

OVERSIZE DRIVE GEARS — Place pressure of operation where it causes least wear. Longer life — easier maintenance.

SHUTTER SYNCHRONIZING DEVICE — Prevents backlash and travel ghost caused by wear in shutter assemblies.

STUDIO TYPE GUIDES — Prevents side sway of film.

ILLUMINATED, WHITE INTERIOR — Dirt can be easily seen and promptly removed.

REAR SHUTTER COOLING FINS — Insure much cooler film path.

RING TYPE GOVERNOR FOR FIRE SHUTTER — Bind-proof, silent.

INTERMITTENT MOVEMENT OIL SYSTEM — Reservoir can be filled from either side.

AIR DEFLECTOR AND APERTURE COOLING UNIT — Stabilizes arc; reduces heat at aperture.

The Editorial said that you're the King of Hold-Overs (You've held me over for 16 happy years, angel!) And then it went on to say: 'Mr. Exhibitor, you'll remember November because every week M-G-M delivers a Sockeroo! (I think that's what they called them) starting with Norma Shearer, Bob Taylor in 'ESCAPE'; Jeanette MacDonald, Nelson Eddy in 'BITTER SWEET' in Technicolor; Judy Garland in 'LITTLE NELLIE KELLY'; Clark Gable, Hedy Lamarr in 'COMRADE X'— and then they said 4 More Big M-G-M hits in December.' "DICTATOR" REVIEWS

NOT for many a year, if ever, has a motion picture enjoyed so variable, animated and various critical attention from the reviews of the public daily press as Mr. Charles Chaplin's "The Great Dictator".

The reviewers, east and west, disagree not only with each other, but also with themselves, having advanced completely contrary opinions of the product, its weight, artistry and significance within single pieces of copy. One young New York tabloid writer reviewed the picture twice, and in his second review decided to denounce any of his contemporaries who did not entirely agree with his measure of the colossal nature of the occasion and production.

A careful, analytical examination of all the reviews would leave any objectively minded reader with the impression that if he were to find out about the picture he would have to go see it. That, probably, will be considerably to the benefit of the box office—but not to the status of the art of reviewing. All that has been attained so far is to make a considerable announcement that there is, after five years, a Chaplin picture. This dither of reviews seems to be unanimous that the picture is a screen document, that Mr. Chaplin was laden with a message.

It would seem appropriate, also, to add at this time that there are also a number of laughs in it. Mr. Chaplin has not concealed the fact that he is a comedian.

TRENDING

MORE than commonly the distribution operations of this belated, not to say confused, selling season, and concomitant exhibition reactions, point up the eternal importance to the theatre of a continuity of supply of attractions.

The last fortnight has seen a flow of daily headlines of selling issues among the circuits, with more than the usual flurry of threats, or promises, to "sell away". And this is October.

As exhibition knows, and insists, it must have pictures all the time, a flow, a program. It may be true in many, or most, locations that the profits all come from the hits, but the house must keep open, under continuous overhead, the weeks between.

Production knows, and insists, that only the better pictures pay, and tends ever to try to make them pay more, with that growing policy of longer runs for "advanced prices". More and more the endeavour is toward making every important motion picture a separate and special enterprise from studio to screen.

The problem of the theatre, then, is to get those hits coming along like beads on a string. There are several inertias in the way.

The stage, called legitimate, prospered long, and survives, in its fashion, yet, on a now-and-then policy, with dark interludes. It plays to upper brackets.

Vaudeville, and its antecedent, variety, prospered on continuous performance through the season. Its steady customers came from the middle and lower brackets, in the main.

The motion picture, entering through vaudeville, has taken over all but a wisp of vaudeville's domain, and almost that much from the stage.

Incidentally and parenthetically, a certain parallelism with some aspects of the motion picture industry is depicted in a book entitled "American Vaudeville" reviewed in this week's issue. Its author holds that regimentation and specialization made vaudeville especially vulnerable to competition, doomed it to downfall.

CLEARLY, but perhaps yet distantly, classification of theatres, for the upper and the middle and lower brackets of patronage, must come. But now the aspect is complicated, obfuscated, and altogether messed-up by the confusions of the intermediate phases of the evolution.

The conflicts of this evolutionary period are in a degree illustrated by the parallel offerings of the "Gone With the Wind" on one price and presentation policy at the Capitol and another, the reserved seat basis, for the upper brackets, at the Astor, both on Broadway, New York. Again, now appears a like dual policy presentation in the two theatres with "The Great Dictator".

This is but a part of the process by which the motion picture explores its future career.

It is to be remembered that once upon a time many a motion picture company had two policies, one "program" and the other "feature". It is even true that for a brief interlude, more recently, every motion picture company had two very separate policies, standing pat on "silent" and experimentally galloping into "sound". The fact is that the course has always been to "follow the trend", with the difficulty that too often the trend has not been manifest until after it has trended.

Certainly, again, the motion picture is trending.

SMPE LOOKS WEST

THE election of Mr. Emory A. Huse, West Coast manager for Eastman Kodak's film department, to the presidency of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers takes the executive leadership of that technological organization to Hollywood for the first time in many years. Once upon a time all the engineering and technology in the industry came in the film cans from Rochester. And for long through the period of invention and evolution in sound the East was dominant in science and technique, with external concerns, conspicuously the Telephone Company and General Electric Company, doing the job.

Now the motion picture is tending more and more to assume its own labours of research; the gravitation toward the production center is becoming apparent. This development has been marked, too, as these pages have so often noted, by the rise of special significance for the Research Council of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Science, indigenous to Hollywood.

This Week in the News

Allied Joins Fight on Decree

ORGANIZED exhibition unanimity against the pending form of consent decree settlement of the Government's trust suit came late Wednesday when the board of directors of national Allied States Association, meeting in Pittsburgh, instructed Abram F. Myers, its general counsel, to attack the settlement as proposed, for its provisions to enforce picture selling in blocks of five after advance trade showings.

The meeting had been arranged in conjunction with the annual convention of the eastern Pennsylvania state Allied group (see page 15), and came within a few hours of an announcement by Department of Justice Attorney Robert Sher that the Government and film companies had finally reached "complete accord" on the decree.

Colonel H. A. Cole, of Texas, national Allied president, in a statement wired from Pittsburgh to New York, Wednesday, declared that the attack on the proposed decree would be made also on "other provisions which either by omission or commission tend to perpetuate the monopoly in exhibition, distribution and production of motion pictures."

Allied States Association has, for years, been the principal industry proponent of anti-block selling legislation in Congress, enlisting outside aid, and is generally conceded to have been a principal factor in the launching of the Government's suit.

Its action in formally attacking the form of the suit settlement, as taken on Wednesday in Pittsburgh, appears to be a reversal of the stand taken earlier by its board chairman and general counsel, A. F. Myers, who, at New Jersey's Allied state organization meeting, in Atlantic City, last month, declared that, while the decree was not all that could be desired, exhibitors should give it a trial. That convention, in resolution, approved those sentiments.

Kennedy Coming

"HIS GENIAL, stimulating presence would be sadly missed in England," said the august London Times this week as Joseph P. Kennedy, American ambassador started for Lisbon to fly home to America.

The London press differed, and the American press was guessing as to whether or not Mr. Kennedy would resign or return to his post. The Ambassador was not answering questions. There were however many official farewells and the kind of tributes that are made on saying goodbye.

Mr. Kennedy was accompanied, said the United Press, by Jack Kennedy, secretary. That is the Mr. Kennedy, not a relative, connected with the foreign department of RKO, who has been with the embassy through Joseph P. Kennedy's incumbency.

In political sectors there was much speculation as to possible significances, if any, politically, in Mr. Kennedy's return in such proximity to the national election, all being mindful that with the situation, national and international being what it is, he might have influential words to say—in any direction he might choose. Then too, rumors of motion picture possibilities, often whispered, were revived.

Foreign Dollars

FOREIGN film chiefs in New York, Wednesday, said they were awaiting the return from London of Joseph P. Kennedy, Ambassador to the Court of St. James's, and former film industry executive, to learn of negotiations being conducted for renewal of the currency export agreement which the film companies have with the British Government. The present pact, which allowed the withdrawal of about $17,500,000, or half the total revenue, from England during the past 12 months, expires on October 31st.

Mr. Kennedy was instrumental in arranging the first agreement and it was thought by some executives in New York his absence from London might delay progress of the negotiations. The British Government has made a tentative offer of permission to export $5,000,000 during the coming year. That same figure was the first proposal made a year ago. The American companies argue that they must be allowed to withdraw a sum large enough to make the difficulties of carrying on business in England worthwhile. The English Government on the other hand wishes to conserve all the foreign exchange possible for war purposes.

Will H. Hays, MPPDA president, will endeavor to meet Ambassador Kennedy immediately on the latter's arrival from London in a few days to discuss and possibly decide whether to accept or reject the British proposals for a no currency withdrawal agreement.

One possible solution to the question of getting profits out of England, suggested in New York, was that no settlement be made until after the U. S. election, November 5th, on the expectation that immediately thereafter, the Johnson Act barring loans to debtor nations will be repealed and plenty of American dollars be made available to the English Government in the form of loans. If this happens, it was said, the American companies probably will be allowed to export all of their British profits.

Now Cain Will Try

JAMES M. CAIN, author of "The Postman Always Rings Twice" and other books, has been assigned by Darryl F. Zanuck to the writing of "Lucky Baldwin," five years on the 20th Century-Fox production agenda and in writing custody of Frank Nugent, former cinema critic of the New York Times, since his employment by the studio. Mr. Nugent, inquiry reveals, has been commissioned to "read some books and plays which Mr. Zanuck is considering for purchase." Many writers have had a fling at the Baldwin story.

When Mr. Nugent departed for Hollywood, it was understood that he had an arrangement that he might return to the Times upon notice by a given date. That date is now said to have passed. An inquiry at the editorial offices of the Times drew the response that the post of motion picture editor and critic "is now officially" held by Bosley Crowther.

"Quick Run"

NO local clearance will be given by RKO on the New Deal's Rural Electrification Administration's film, "Power and the Land," because the REA has requested that the picture be given as quick a run-down as possible, reputedly to make it available quickly for circulation to schools and other groups, according to Harry J. Michaelson, RKO short subjects sales manager. Priority, however, will be given to important first run houses. The documentary, which has a running time of 36 minutes will be supplied gratis to theatres.

Aid Red Cross

BETWEEN 8,000 and 9,000 motion picture theatres will participate in the Annual Red Cross Roll Call, starting November 11th, Major L. E. Thompson, of RKO, chairman of the drive's theatres committee, announced in New York, Wednesday.

Working directly with their local Red Cross Chapter, the exhibitors will participate in one or another, or all of the following prescribed forms: decorations in lobby and out-front, using flags, banners and posters furnished by the Red Cross; showing a special 400-foot short subject produced and distributed by the film industry, and booked through local film exchange coordinators; showing the 100-foot official trailer supplied by the Red Cross and distributed through the local chapters; stationing uniformed Red Cross workers in the theatre lobby to answer questions (but not to solicit funds); developing other publicity for the campaign.

Taxes Cue Upturn

APPLICATION of the lower admission tax exemption, last July, from 40 to 20 cents, brought collections from the Federal levy in September to $5,851,655, compared with $4,407,097 in August and $1,852,256 in September, 1939, it was reported Tuesday by the Internal Revenue Bureau, at Washington.

As a result of improved business early in the year and the subsequent lowering of the exemption, collections for the first nine months of 1940 totaled $23,076,687, against $14,055,201 in the corresponding period of a year ago, the bureau announced. In the Third New York (Broadway) District, collections jumped to $936,486, compared with $549,592 in August and $545,092 in September, 1939, it was disclosed.

Critics' Critiques

TO select the outstanding feature made from a book 19 motion pictures adapted from books and released during the year are being viewed by 12 New York literary critics. The winner will be announced Tuesday. Its producer will receive the Film Award of 1940, to be presented at the Book Ball at Manhattan Center, New York, on November 8th.

Members of the committee, after agreeing to serve, discovered that there were gaps in their movie education, which they proceeded to remedy by attending special showings of the pictures they had not seen.

Elected chairman at the first meeting of the year of the New York Film Critics, on Tuesday, was Bosley Crowther of the Times, succeeding Kate Cameron of the News. Herbert Cohn of the Brooklyn Eagle was chosen secretary, to succeed Leo Mishkin of the Morning Telegraph.

The critics will start balloting on their annual films awards in December, with January 5th set as the date for the presentation of the awards.

Joseph Wood Krutch, professor of drama at Columbia University and dramatic critic of the Nation was elected president of the New York Drama Critics Circle at the annual election at the Hotel Algonquin, New York, Monday, succeeding Burns Mantle, of the News.

Monogram Producing

W. RAY JOHNSTON, president of Monogram, in answer to reports that the company was changing its status to that of a distributing organization, announced Friday that Monogram was not discontinuing its production nor depending entirely on outside producers for pictures.

"Monogram is producing 19 of its 26 feature pictures and is financing them entirely," Mr. Johnston said. "We are also financing the series of eight Tex Ritter westerns. As in the past Monogram will continue to finance at least 90 percent of its releases."

The outside product being released by Monogram includes only the "East Side Kids" films being made by Sam Katzman and eight "Range Busters" produced by George W. Weeks, Mr. Johnston pointed out. "All production activity is centered in the hands of Scott R. Dunlap, in charge of stories, casting and production," he said.

"Land of Liberty"

"LAND OF LIBERTY," the feature contributed by the organized industry to the New York World's Fair and San Francisco Exposition, and shown, without charge under Federal auspices, will be distributed nationally by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, commencing November 12th.

Metro and the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, which sponsored the production, have agreed to make it available on a non-profit basis. Rentals will be charged, but the net amount derived from the release will be turned over to welfare work among soldiers and sailors by the American Red Cross, and similar organizations, it was disclosed Wednesday, in New York, by the MGM home office.

In chronological order the picture tells the history of America from the days before the coming of the white man up to the present. It is composed of scenes from scores of feature pictures released down through the years.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer plans a special pre-release engagement in Williamsport, Pa., November 12th.

Few Plays for Films

WITH some of the motion picture companies, the League of New York Theatres stage producers and the Dramatists' Guild about to sign an agreement which will again make possible the backing of Broadway plays by film companies, the perennial question of the importance of the stage as a source of motion picture material arises.

Of the more than 3,000 story properties purchased for American motion pictures by the major companies in the past five years only 10 percent have been plays and only 16 percent of the plays were current Broadway productions. The Broadway stage supplied in that period only 1.2 percent of the total story properties purchased.

The few Broadway plays that win prizes and have long runs are regularly bought by the film companies and adapted for motion picture use. The list of MOTION PICTURE HERALD'S Box Office Champions, through the years, however, includes surprisingly few films based on contemporary plays.

A Rockefeller Praises

THE cooperation of the motion picture industry in the new efforts to improve relations of the United States with Latin American countries was acclaimed by Nelson A. Rockefeller, Federal coordinator of commercial and cultural relations between the American republics for the U. S. National Defense Council, at the annual New York Herald-Tribune Forum at the Waldorf-Astoria on Wednesday.

CONSENT DECREE FIGHT ENDS, ALMOST, AS TRIAL GETS 13TH POSTPONEMENT

Last Final Draft Goes to Jackson for Approval Before Submission to Court; Federal Judge Will Name Arbiters

At precisely 8:15 last Tuesday evening, on the north side of the second floor of the old Bar Association Building, on 44th Street, New York, two large, panelled mahogany doors hinge-squeaked to open on the tired figures of a dozen lawyers.

"Gentlemen of the press," solemnly announced a spokesman, "we are in complete accord. The negotiations have ended."

The lawyers were from both the United States Department of Justice, plaintiff, and the "Big Five" motion picture companies, defendants, in the Government's key anti-trust action. The announcement of the accord told that the consent decree settlement was finally ready, after 20 weeks and 12 trial date postponements. The spokesman was Robert E. Sher, special assistant attorney general.

Court Is Promised Final Draft

Earlier in the day Judge Henry W. Goddard had agreed to postpone the trial for an other week, to next Tuesday, October 29th, following an hour-long conference in his chambers during which lawyers explained that the negotiations were about over and the final draft of the consent decree would be ready for submission to Robert Jackson, U. S. Attorney General, on Thursday. The Judge was told that the decree probably would be submitted to him next week.

Balaban & Katz and Fox West Coast consent decrees and minor details of the arbitration rules and regulations were the last subjects agreed upon by Government lawyers from the anti-trust division of the Department of Justice and representatives of five motion picture companies consenting to the decree.

B & K Approval Obtained

Mimeographing of the final consent decree document began Tuesday night. Wednesday morning Mr. Sher said no decision had been made on when the draft would be released. He added that Thursday morning he and James V. Hayes, special assistant attorney general, would determine whether copies would be made generally available before Judge Goddard received the decree and if so the day and hour.

The Balaban & Katz consent decree was the last important point settled by the negotiators. Paramount home office officials agreed to a proposed settlement Monday, subject to the agreement of B. & K. executives in Chicago. Tuesday that approval was obtained. Balaban and Katz, according to the compromise agreement, with two subsidiaries will pay fines aggregating $10,000 after entering a nolle contendere plea in the Chicago case. The Chicago decree will then, with certain exceptions, be made to conform with provisions of the New York decree.

Under the revised B. & K. decree the "rule of five" by which circuits of more than five houses are not allowed to ask arbitration of clearance complaints in the New York decree will be suspended for the Loop area. Throughout the rest of the city the rule will not apply for first and second neighborhood runs only and in other areas serviced by the Chicago exchanges it will apply for all but first runs.

With regard to the Fox West Coast consent decree the "rule of five" for requests for arbitration will not apply to first and second runs in Los Angeles, to first runs in the suburbs and in Southern California. The Government agreed to drop the contempt proceedings against Fox West Coast.

"The Big Five" also will be dropped from anti-trusts suits in the field, such as the Schine, Crescent and Griffith cases, it was agreed.

The final draft of the decree was reported to contain no admission of violation of the trust laws or conspiracy on the part of the five companies. Likewise, the companies will not be barred from expanding their theatre properties where it is necessary to protect their interests, it was said.

Other changes in the decree from the previously published draft include a provision that exhibitors who have filed complaints on runs to the Department of Justice within the past five years may request arbitration. This also makes possible hearings on complaints made to the old NRA boards. Clearance complaints on existing franchises and franchises between defendants may also be arbitrated.

Although the arbitration rules may not be submitted to the court until about a week after the decree both the Government and the defendants are in agreement on procedure. The clause establishing the arbitration set up which will be under the direction of the American Arbitration Association was finally approved last Friday.

The arbitration machinery will include local boards in all the exchange districts and an appeal board of three men sitting in New York. The American Arbitration Association has been going over its list of available arbitrators and selecting a panel of about 10 men for each exchange district. Every member of the panel must be a person who has no present or past connection with the industry. Local arbitrators will be paid on a per diem basis. It is expected that from 5,000 to 10,000 requests for arbitration will be made to the local boards during the first year of operation.

The three members of the board of appeals for arbitration will be appointed directly by Judge Goddard. Neither the Government nor any of the defendants will make any recommendations to the Judge, it was reported. Men of high reputation, on a par with that required for Court of Appeal Judges, will be selected, it was said. The salary will also be equivalent to that paid to high court judges, about $20,000 a year.

The Government places great reliance on the arbitration machinery hoping that it will help to solve many of the problems in the industry. Confidence in the work that can be done by arbitration was reported to be one of the reasons that the Government had in agreeing not to press its original demand for theatre divorcement at this time.

At the same time the consent decree is submitted to Judge Goddard a new and revised bill of complaint, eliminating the five defendants which agreed to the decree, and changing certain clauses which deal with theatre ownership will be filed against the "Little Three," Columbia, United Artists and Universal. The Government will ask for an early trial.

United Artists and Universal have already decided not to oppose the consent decree when it is presented in court. Columbia is still considering the matter and may take a similar position, it was indicated. A study of Federal court procedure has shown that non-consenting companies usually get little more than an opportunity to record their objections and not time to explain their position.

Judge Goddard is expected to assign a date for a hearing on the decree after it is submitted for his approval. Exhibitor organizations and others may be given an opportunity to express their opinions. There has been widespread protest against the blocks-of-five clause in the decree.

A Department of Justice spokesman said Wednesday the Government was anxious to release the final draft of the decree so that exhibitors throughout the country would have time to study its provisions before the court hearing is held. However, ordinarily when the defendants and the Government agree to a consent decree the court almost automatically gives its approval, on the grounds that the Department of Justice is supposed to be acting for all parties, including the independent exhibitors.

REPUBLICANS ACQUIRING THEATRES FOR FREE FILM SHOWS FOR WILLKIE

First House Is in Tammany Stronghold on New York's East Side; Hollywood Group Asks "Information" Release

The first motion picture theatre to be used regularly as an adjunct to the 1940 Presidential political campaign, became a reality, this week, when the Republican National Committee signed a lease for the 14th Street Theatre, east of Second Avenue, New York, in the so-called "melting pot" sector that was built Democratic by Tammany Hall. Free shows will be given daily from 2 to 11 P. M. until Election Day. The show was inaugurated on Monday.

100,000 Tickets Distributed

Some 100,000 tickets will be distributed in the vicinity of the theatre and the lower East Side. Acquisition of other theatres is expected.

Gloria Swanson, former screen actress, who is waging a personal campaign for the election of Wendell L. Willkie, GOP presidential nominee, makes a personal appearance every hour between showings of "The Melting Pot," made especially for the campaign. Others will also make personal appearances.

The film depicts the United States as an international melting pot where people have come from foreign lands to enjoy freedom of religion, social equality and freedom of opportunity. It introduces, among others, former Justice Joseph Proskauer, William Weiss, noted attorney, and Edward Corsi, former U. S. Commissioner of Immigration, and others. A summary of Mr. Willkie's major campaign issues is the subject of another film.

During the morning, Miss Swanson uses the theatre to organize groups of women to work for Mr. Willkie's election. Her agent, Frank Burke, is handling arrangements through the publicity department of the Republican National Committee.

The theatre was conducted by Harry Harris, of Harris Theatrical Enterprises, an independent circuit, until it was closed some time ago. It seats 900.

Democrats Use Billboards

The Hollywood for Roosevelt Committee has made arrangements to cover every conspicuous spot in the movie colony with giant 24-sheet billboard stands bearing large size autographs of stars, who are members of the committee.

The Democratic National Committee makes public the fact that 2,000 bookings had been made in 11 farm states of a 16 mm campaign film, prepared by the committee, which is being shown in schools, halls, auditorium, parks, etc.

The films distributed by the Democrats in the rural areas, contain seven subjects, which are being integrated into a complete show, running about 45 minutes.

The show opens with a cartoon, is followed by a one-reeler, "Defense of America," a speech by Henry A. Wallace, vice-presidential nominee; then by "On the Record," a resume of the farming situation since 1932; "Electricity on the Farm" follows; then a speech by President Roosevelt, especially made for the film and closes with a patriotic montage and rendition of the "Star Spangled Banner."

William Nelson and Guy Bolte, of the publicity staff of the Democratic National Committee, produced the shorts in New York.

Charles L. O'Reilly is chairman of the Motion Picture Division of the National Committee.

Politics collided with film distribution last week when the "We, the People Committee" of the local Hollywood Willkie campaign organization demanded that either RKO release the second "Information, Please" short featuring Wendell Willkie now "or bring into the open any threat or valid reason for not issuing it."

In a letter to George Schaefer, RKO president, the committee, headed by Robert Montgomery, presently a star on RKO payrolls, and other film personalities, said in part:

"We are disturbed because as a business man, rightfully alert to all legitimate opportunities to make money for your company, you have jettisoned a venture of proved profit-making capabilities. It is our understanding that the first 'Information, Please' short in which Mr. Willkie appeared was enormously successful and that exhibitors in most sections of the country have been clamoring for the promised second appearance of Mr. Willkie in the series. The root of our concern lies in the fact that successful business men such as yourself are not prone to abandon a proved profitmaker unless some kind of pressure has been exerted. It is undebatable that motion pictures as an agency for the dissemination of human thought should be as free and untrammeled as are the press and radio. . . . We look with alarmed suspicion upon this cancellation of Willkie's second screen appearance. . . ."

Dewey On the Air

Thomas E. Dewey, New York district attorney, will be cast in the role of a prosecuting attorney in a political fantasy to be written and produced under the auspices of the Republican National Committee and to be broadcast over a national hookup on October 28th or October 29th, it was disclosed this week.

Walter O'Keefe, chairman of the amusement division of the National Committee, is collaborating with John de Meyer, novelist and author of two volumes, "F. D. R. and the President's Club," and "Ben Franklin Calls on the President," both of which will form the basic pattern of the proposed broadcast.

The material from the two books is now being whipped into shape for the broadcast by Messrs. O'Keefe and de Meyer. Part of the proposed program is a fantasy in which Benjamin Franklin returns to the White House in 1940 and comments upon the vast changes that have come over it since his generation.

Aside from Mr. Dewey, the balance of the cast would be professional actors. The broadcast would run for 30 minutes.

PARAMOUNT PARTNERS SET BALABAN DRIVE

A testimonial business drive for Barney Balaban, president of Paramount, will be conducted by the 1,200 theatres affiliated with the company during the period from Thanksgiving to Christmas. The drive is in observance of Mr. Balaban's fifth year as head of Paramount.

The conduct of the drive will be in the hands of individual circuits and their operators. Special booking, advertising and exploitation plans for the period of the drive are now in preparation.

Scrap 'Pact' on Critics' Ratings

Major company advertising and publicity directors this week indicated that the unwritten agreement, adhered to for more than four years, not to use any critic's "star system" of rating motion pictures in the advertising of films in New York no longer was in force.

Used in Advertising

The apparent end of the unwritten pact devolved from the use by Paramount in a newspaper advertisement of the four stars awarded "Arise, My Love" by Kate Cameron, motion picture critic of the New York Daily News. Robert Gillham, Paramount advertising and publicity director, pointed out that prior to Paramount's use of the critic's rating the Rivoli theatre had prominently displayed advertisements on Walter Wanger's "The Long Voyage Home" calling attention to the four-star rating given that picture by the same reviewer.

Lynn Farnol, advertising and publicity director of United Artists, distributor for the Wanger production, said the company had no control over or responsibility for the Rivoli's ad copy, contending that it was prepared independently by the theatre management.

Howard Dietz, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer advertising and publicity director, said MGM would resume the use of the star rating immediately if the practice was not ended by the Rivoli and Paramount at once. S. Charles Einfeld of Warners, Charles E. McCarthy of Twentieth Century-Fox, Lou Pollock of Universal, and S. Barret McCormick of RKO are said to have taken the same position as Mr. Dietz.

Lester Thompson, head of the Advertising Advisory Council of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, is investigating the matter.

The unwritten agreement grew out of the conviction that the star rating of pictures should be discouraged because it was frequently unfair to individual pictures and placed too much power in the hands of individual reviewers.

Offering $15,000 for "Little Men" Campaigns

Theatre managers of this country and Canada, who play RKO's "Little Men," will receive $15,000 in money, for the best showmanship in campaigns for the picture, RKO announced last week. The Borden Company, milk distributors, is cooperating with RKO in the awards.

On the awards board are:

Also, editors and publishers of other trade papers.

ENCOURAGE INDEPENDENTS, DO NOT RAISE ADMISSIONS, WARNS COLE

Kuykendall Hits at Myers, Declining to Answer His Questions Over Objections to Proposed Consent Decree

Exhibitors, because they are "the fountainhead," must make up the film industry's loss of foreign revenue, Colonel Henry Albert Cole, president of the National Allied States Association, told the opening session, Monday, of the Western Pennsylvania Allied's annual convention at the Roosevelt Hotel, Pittsburgh. He also asked exhibitors to cooperate with the provisions of the consent decree now forming, in the Government's New York anti-trust case.

Later at a meeting of National Allied's board of directors it was decided to place the organization on record as opposed to the consent decree settlement of the anti-trust suit. (See page 8.)

Kuykendall Attacks Myers

Almost at the same time, Edward L. Kuykendall, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, refused to answer queries put to him recently by Abram Myers, Allied counsel, on his complete objections to the consent decree, which National Allied is accepting.

Meanwhile, New York's independent exhibitor leader, Harry Brandt, president of the Independent Theatre Owners Association, issued a statement defining his stand on the consent decree, answering Mr. Myers' queries. He set forth objections, and remarked: "We would like to ask Myers why he doesn't query Allied units on why they object to the decree, which, in practically every case, they do."

News of other organizations includes the petition to the Department of Justice by the Arkansas, Tennessee, and Mississippi MPTO, to reject the consent decree; the formation of a Kansas Independent Theatre Owners Association, auxiliary to the Kansas-Missouri Theatres Association; expected action, shortly, by the MPTO of New York, to line up independent theatre owners, to make a state-wide organization; the reelection of officers of the Allied Theatres of Massachusetts.

Colonel Cole told the Western Pennsylvania Allied convention that exhibitors probably would have to reimburse the film industry for the losses sustained in foreign markets, and he asked producers to encourage the opening of more theatres and the operation of more independent exhibitor enterprises. He objected to difficulties claimed to have been caused independent operators by distributors, and also to "suggestions" from producers that exhibitors increase admissions.

He advocated exhibitor cooperation with the provisions of the consent decree.

Richey on "Boom Town"

Henderson M. Richey, assistant to William F. Rodgers, MGM sales manager, asked the assembled exhibitors for instances where they had been hurt by showing his company's "Boom Town" at advanced prices. He also said MGM would do "what it can to try to make the consent decree work."

Fred Herrington, secretary of the unit, said its protests against the consent decree had been sent to Robert H. Jackson, Attorney General, and Thurman Arnold, assistant in charge of anti-trust prosecution. He also reported what action had been obtained from Pennsylvania officials, to close 16 mm shows operating in violation of labor and sanitary regulations.

Among other speakers Monday were Ira Cohn, Twentieth Century-Fox branch manager; and George Dembow, general sales manager of National Screen Service. There were more convention meetings Tuesday, and then meetings on that day and Wednesday of the National Allied's board of directors, with Abram Myers, general counsel, presiding. The Western Pennsylvania unit's convention officially closed Tuesday night with a testimonial banquet to M. A. Rosenberg, its retiring president.

Officers elected were Eddie Beedle, president; Harry Walker, vice-president; Mr. Herrington, secretary; Joseph Gellman, treasurer. New directors are Mr. Rosenberg, William Walker and Carl Poke.

Kuykendall Issues Statement

Because his attitude assertedly has been reported many times in the MPTOA organization bulletin and in the trade papers, Mr. Kuykendall in a statement released on Monday, in New York City, refused to answer the queries from Mr. Myers.

He added that his attitude and that of his organization had been presented to the Department of Justice.

He continued: "My personal opinion is not important; but the widely expressed objections to certain clauses of the decree, by thousands of exhibitors, are important; and Mr. Myers knows how they stand, as well as he knows that his own organization is almost entirely opposed to some of the decree's provisions. Is it possible," he asked, "that Mr. Myers has worked himself into such a position by endorsing the consent decree, that he now seeks to becloud the real issue? I cannot forget that this is the same Mr. Myers that dragged in outside reformers to besmirch the industry at the Neely Bill hearings; and, not being convinced of the sincerity of his purpose in this instance, I feel no inclination to answer any of his demands."

The Independent Theatre Owners Association of New York will attempt to have Congress pass remedial legislation, if the operation of the consent decree harms the business of its members, Harry Brandt, organization president, declared last week, in accompaniment to a statement listing his objections to the decree, as now planned. Mr. Brandt, like Mr. Kuykendall, hit at Mr. Myers by asking him why he did not question individual Allied units on their objections to the consent decree, instead of leaders of other organizations. Nevertheless, he listed his objections as follows, and added his recommendations and comment, as follows:

Brandt Lists Objections

"1. Forcing of shorts—The language of the decree on this subject is too equivocal and may provide distributors with a loophole. An exhibitor's complaint of shorts forcing should be sufficient to make his contract immediately inoperative, pending arbitration.

"2. Cancellation for cause—The date of availability rather than date of execution of a contract should determine the time after which notice of rejection of a film on moral grounds may be made by the exhibitor.

"3. Arbitration of clearance disputes—Boards should be empowered to eliminate all clearance, rather than to maintain "some" clearance.

"4. Remedy for discrimination against independently operated theatres—There should be a clear, simple statement that any exhibitor has the right to demand a better run and to submit the matter to arbitration. The present language of the decree and the conditions imposed may preclude arbitration in 90 per cent of affected situations. A clear and simple definition of an independent exhibitor should be substituted for that now employed and other definitions and conditions should be altered. The entire provision suggests a lack of good faith."

Tri-State Unit Hits Decree

A petition to the Department of Justice, asking it to reject the consent decree, has been sent by the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Arkansas, Tennessee, and Mississippi, which convened in Memphis last week. The organization also objected to a rise in admissions.

Mr. Kuykendall, addressing the unit, said that if the decree was adopted, turmoil was inevitable, and he said its selling-of-pictures-in-blocks-of-five provision would be onerous.

Y. Frank Freeman, vice-president in charge of Paramount production, told the Southern exhibitors fewer pictures would be made, but that there would be no reduction in quality.

R. X. Williams was reelected president. Other officers elected were: R. B. Cox, vice-president; L. F. Haven, vice-president; W. F. Ruffin, vice-president; W. S. Tyson, secretary-treasurer; and M. A. Lightman, chairman of the board.

New Kansas Unit

The Kansas Independent Theatre Owners Association will hold its first regular meeting in Kansas City, Kansas, November 14th. It was formed as an auxiliary to the Kansas-Missouri Theatres Association. Officers are: H. F. Strowig, president; Merell Swank, vice-president; Ralph Larned, secretary; Mrs. Kate Blair, treasurer. Directors are J. E. Pennington, Warren Weber, Roy Culley, Ralph Winship.

Sam Pinanski, president, and other officers of the Massachusetts Allied were reelected last week for a fifth consecutive term. Other officers are: John Devlin, vice-president; and Joseph Brennan, secretary.

The annual meeting of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of North and South Carolina will be held on December 1st and 2nd at the Charlotte Hotel, Charlotte, North Carolina, Mrs. Walter Griffith, secretary, announced.

INDEPENDENTS SUE TO HALT GIVEAWAYS

Six independent theatre owners of Spokane have filed suit against the Evergreen Theatres, Inc., asking a restraining order to stop the practice at the Orpheum theatre of giving away cash, books, candy bars and jewelry as an attendance stimulant. Also named as defendants were E. W. Barker, Evergreen city manager, and William Seale, Orpheum manager.

The complaint, filed by R. E. Lowe, counsel for independent exhibitors, charges that these acts violate the unfair trade practices act and asks for a temporary injunction during the pendency of the action.

Independents named were: Granada, Bandbox, Rainbo, Unique, Ritz and Empress theatres, owned respectively by Howard Amusement Co., W. E. Waverly, Harry C. Luft, A. P. Mitchell, Cecil D. Miller and H. A. Black.

Montgomery Says Industry Leaders Stifle the Art

Robert Montgomery, actor, speaking on Wednesday at the New York Herald Tribune Forum on Current Problems at the Waldorf-Astoria in New York City attacked the leadership of the motion picture industry and said the responsibility of the industry at the present time was entertainment, education and propaganda.

"Resources of the Arts"

The general topic of the third session of the Tribune Forum at which Mr. Mongomery spoke was "Resources of the Creative Arts" and other speakers included Somerset Maugham, author; Nelson A. Rockefeller; Francis Henry Taylor, Robert E. Sherwood, Carl Sandburg. Over 50 speakers, including Wendell L. Willkie and Franklin D. Roosevelt participated in the three day meeting.

"I am convinced the weakness of leadership under which, to my knowledge, this industry has been struggling is directly responsible for the poor quality of its average product in the past, and, will make it impossible for the industry to perform its function in national defense in the present crisis with any appreciable degree of success," Mr. Montgomery said. He pointed out that the motion picture has great influence, "In time of war its power is second only to that of a military power. In time of peace, its power is second to none."

Mr. Montgomery also said, "No one will disagree with the statement that the medium of the motion picture is an art, and a great number of people, a large majority of whom are employed in the industry, will subscribe to the statement that the industry control stifles and thwarts the creative elements which it employs in producing mass entertainment." He added, "I believe we can go so far as to say that any resemblance between the motion picture industry and creative art is purely coincidental."

"Goodbye, Mr. Chips" was cited by Mr. Montgomery as an example of a film containing, according to him, the three elements of entertainment, education and propaganda. The actor believed the picture mentioned had an element of propaganda because it brought to the audience "the courage, the sense of fair play and the finer qualities of the British people."

Theatre Equipment Corp. Shows $582,115 Profit

General Theatres Equipment Corp. and subsidiaries, report for the three months ended September 30th, consolidated net profit of $173,797, after provision for depreciation and estimated Federal income tax. This compares with $154,347 for a corresponding period in 1939. The report excludes Cinema Building Corp., an affiliate.

For the nine months ending September 30th, consolidated net profit of the corporation was $582,115, compared with $482,577 for a similar period in 1939.

Wedding Announced

Solomon Strausberg, executive vice-president of the Interboro Circuit, in Brooklyn, and son of Samuel Strausberg, president, has announced his engagement to Miss Joan Phyllis Horwitz. Wedding date is set for December 15th.

Bausch & Lomb Answers Attacks

Defending its 87-year-old record on national defense, the Bausch & Lomb Optical Co., Rochester, N. Y., largest maker of military optical instruments, issued a book this week containing laudatory letters from Secretaries Stimson and Knox of the War and Navy Departments. It answers attacks on the company's loyalty and patriotism engendered by the indictment which charged restraint of trade in military optical instruments.

Mr. Stimson said, "The relations between Bausch & Lomb and the War Department, extending over a long period of years, have been most satisfactory from every standpoint. At this critical time, the War Department has complete confidence in your company for excellence of workmanship, productive ability and patriotic cooperation."

Although the case was settled in July by common consent, recurrent attacks accusing the company and its officers of Nazi sympathies and ascribing sinister motives have continued, the statement asserts.

In the opinion of high military authorities, the company states, the agreement between Bausch & Lomb and Zeiss, made in 1921, was beneficial to the armed services of the United States. "The flow of engineering services was all from Germany" and not from the United States.

Knaut International Photophone Sales Head

Succeeding Van Ness Philip, who reported for active military service September 1st, J. M. Knaut has been appointed manager of the Photophone sales in the Radio Corporation of America's international division at Camden, N. J.

Jay D. Cook, RCA international division manager, this week also announced three other appointments. E. M. Roberts, formerly vice-president of the RCA Victor Company, of China, has been named vice-president and treasurer of RCA Victor Argentina, with headquarters at Buenos Aires; Dan Des Foldes has been given charge of recording and record sales for that company; and G. G. Connelly has been named manager of artists and repertoire.

Plea for Projector

Robert Wilder is the reporter who covers the waterfront for the New York Sun, with a column entitled "On the Sun Deck." In a recent issue he entered a plea with a piece saying:

"As sad a story as has come our way in a long time is the plight of the Seamen's Church Institute. We are passing it along in the hope that some one has a few odd pieces of machinery tucked away at home.

"Years ago the institute purchased a motion picture projector. This served well enough during the silent days, but then along came sound and the lads back from the sea, to say nothing of the barge residents at Coenties Slip, demanded sound. The institute then purchased a projector that would let every one not only see, but hear. That was 12 years ago. The machine began to wear out and the operator did his best to keep it in running order with odd pieces he could pick up here and there. Now, though, the projector is so out of date that parts of it are museum pieces. The institute is at its wit's end and they'd be mighty grateful for a new machine."

Roosevelt Host At Three Day 'Soundies' Party

Highlighting a three-day cocktail party demonstration, reportedly costing $25,000, James Roosevelt's nickel-in-the-slot 16mm. "Soundies" and Fred Mils' Panoram movie machines were shown to more than 2,500 in the "press, theatrical, radio, and musical fields," on Monday at the Starlight Roof of the Hotel Waldorf-Astoria, New York.

Many hotel, tavern, and bar owners, promoters, and Broadway personalities were present.

Showing Costs Dime

The Panoram machine's screen is 17 by 22½ inches, is translucent—the projection being from the rear—and is non-inflammable. It uses an RCA 16 mm projector, and RCA sound ("Soundies" are to be made on RCA recorders).

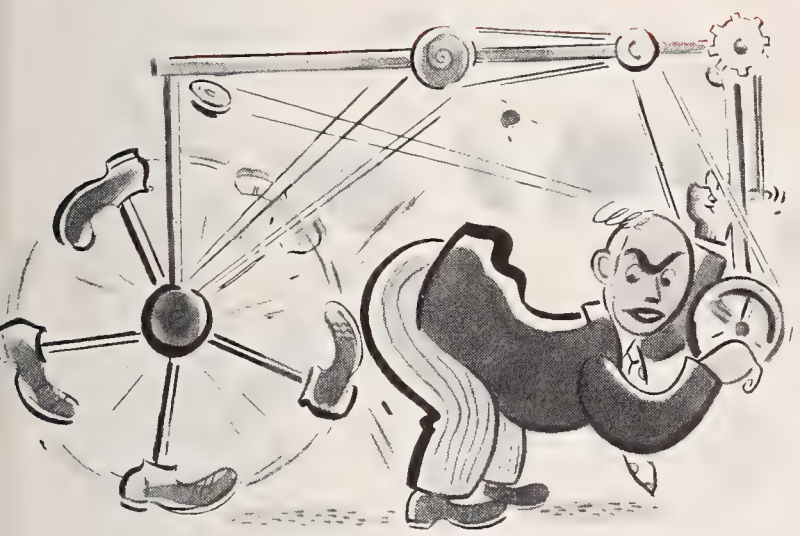
The machine differs from others in the new "coin-in-the-slot-movie" field in demanding dimes, not nickels. When not playing "Soundies" it directs varied colors on its screen, and, in an illuminated, travelling sign, above the screen, announces "Soundies" titles.

It is explained that the company "determines the minimum number of Panoram machines the franchise purchaser will buy, during the period of his license"; that the franchise holder may secure films "on a schedule of rentals which begins with a figure which reduces itself each week, so that at the end of four weeks, for example, the average rental will be about $10 per week"; that, if films are held longer than four weeks, the rental will be less; and that the films may be rotated from one location to another.

Each Panoram machine will list at $1,000. The distributor's discount is 30½ per cent. The wholesale price is therefore $695. The Mills company may grant the distributor the option of purchasing the machine.

Mills Novelty Company officials said, at the New York display of the machines, early this week, that the machines and Soundies would be ready for shipment to franchise holders by December.

Bronston, Roosevelt Split



Dissolution of the Samuel Bronston-James Roosevelt producing aggregation was disclosed on the Coast this week. Mr. Bronston had expected to release his "Martin Eden" through United Artists, because of Mr. Roosevelt's association with that firm. He said on Monday he would leave shortly for New York to negotiate for another distributor.

30 Film Pioneers Are Initiated

Because of the heavy advance reservations, the Fall Conference Dinner of the Picture Pioneers, which featured "Circus Night," was to have been held on Thursday night, at the Belvedere Room atop the Hotel Astor in New York, instead of the smaller North Ballroom, as previously planned. A circus sideshow was to be one of the features.

Some 30 initiates, representing the class of 1915, were to have been inducted into the organization in ceremonies supervised by Jack Alicoate, chairman of the initiation committee. Jack Cohn, house manager of the group, declared that it was the largest number of candidates ever initiated at one time. Marvin Schenck was chairman of the entertainment committee.

WARNING TO EXHIBITORS!

DON'T KICK YOURSELF later for not planning NOW to give Paramount's "ARISE, MY LOVE" EXTENDED PLAYING TIME. This picture is a great audience picture that builds amazingly. Look at our experience at the New York Paramount!

Audiences go absolutely overboard for the picture, writing such comments as: "One of the ten best pictures of any year," "Claudette's finest in years," "Best I've seen," "Enjoyed it immensely," "Best comedy in a long time." New York critics agreed with these comments, gave "ARISE, MY LOVE" the biggest raves given a picture on Broadway in months, including Four Stars from the Daily News. Most important, the reviews plus the word of mouth advertising pushed business up the second day over the first day smash . . . and business climbed the second, third and fourth days (at edition time on this adv. business is still rising).

So we ask you to test this picture for yourself by previewing NOW before an audience. The audience will tell you you'd better plan a long run for PARAMOUNT'S (and Hollywood's) TOP COMEDY ROMANCE SMASH!

SUNDAY FILM QUESTION AT POLLS NOVEMBER 5th

Local Referendums Scheduled for Many Pennsylvania Localities; Opposition Seen Strong

The November 5th election besides its importance nationally will have various local angles, including in some states and localities the voting on Sunday "blue laws." The nearness of the day has accentuated the fight on both sides, especially in Pennsylvania, where many communities will vote on the question.

Pittsburgh Area Affected

Eleven communties in the Greater Pittsburgh area, representing 119,000 population, will vote on the question. Sunday shows are now legal in three of the 11 boroughs: Carnegie, Castle, Shannon and Springdale. Other localities voting, now without Sunday films, are Brackenridge, Brentwood, Crafton, Harrison Township, Munhall, Tarentum, Turtle Creek and Wilkinsburg.

Sunday films are now lawful in 27 Allegheny County communities. There are 167 municipalities in Pennsylvania permitting Sunday pictures, since the 1935 referendum.

Under the state law passed in 1935, Sunday films are allowed only in communities where a majority of voters have approved and balloting on the issue is allowed only at five-year intervals.

Additional opposition is being fostered in northeastern Pennsylvania with the town of Berwick headed for a stiff battle over the question. Some of the opposition which has arisen includes a resolution denouncing Sunday films by the Berwick Lodge of Odd Fellows and similar resolutions by the Sunday School sessions of the Grace Lutheran and Trinity Lutheran churches and the Evan Owen Delta Chapter in the same community.

The Associated Group of Motion Picture Theatre Managers in Reading, Pa., this week started its campaign to retain Sunday films in the city by getting permission from the city to erect banners across city streets in the manner of political campaigns. It is the first time in many years that permits have been issued for such banners. In addition, the theatre group has placed display advertisements in the newspapers to boost continuance of Sunday film shows.

Rensselaer, upstate New York city where efforts have been made to legalize Sunday motion pictures for several years will at last get a chance to vote on the question.

The common council unanimously passed a resolution last week authorizing a vote November 5th. The council reversed its decision of a few days before.

Last fall, the election campaign in Rensselaer partially hinged about the former mayor's veto of a legalization ordinance for Sunday films. The present mayor, Marshall Rose, is represented as favoring pictures due to the loss of business to nearby Troy and Albany theatres on Sunday.

Newspaper Poll Conducted

A poll of local sentiment on Sunday films is being conducted by The Athens (Tenn.) Post Athenian. Herbert Hairrell, manager of the Strand in Athens has stated the readiness of his house to provide Sunday films if voted by the city council and to make a schedule that would not conflict with local church services.

The Bridgeton, N. J., city council has voted to place the Sunday film question on the November 5th ballot. Petitions for a similar referendum have been filed with the city council at nearby Woodbury.

Managers of four Hattiesburg, Miss., thetres are under $250 bond each to appear in county court Monday to face charges of violating the state "blue laws" as the result of the operation of shows in that city Sunday, October 6th. The defendants are H. D. Bowers, Tom Hartman and Harry Casles, managers of the three Saenger houses, and Robert Sigler, manager of the Royal, an independent. Affidavits were filed against the four when shows were held on Sunday for the first time in several years.

A recent survey had indicated sentiment of business men strongly in favor of Sabbath performances which they believe are now needed on account of the army base now under construction at nearby Camp Shelby. Resolutions opposing the Sunday shows and favoring strict observance of the blue laws were passed by the conference held the day following the shows by Baptist and Methodist ministers. Calling Sunday entertainment "a general letdown of morals," the resolution said that the opposition to Sunday shows "is not limited to motion pictures alone."

Sunday films have been defeated in Murfreesboro, Tenn., by a 440 to 226 vote after the city council had passed an ordinance on first reading permitting them.

Detroit Bans Red Signs

All future theatre signs in Detroit will be required to eliminate red and any flashing illumination, apart from high roof signs, and each sign will be subject to careful scrutiny of design, according to an action taken by the city council on a new sign for the Fox theatre, largest Detroit house. The present 10-story sign must be torn down by next June.

Billboard control legislation is to be sought by a new organization called Roadside Conservation Associates in New Hampshire, representing 18 non-political organizations. The Associates have compiled a chart showing 4,350 billboards along 3,000 miles of the state's main thoroughfares. Only 750 were erected by national advertising companies.

Theatre owners at Champaign and Urbana, Ill., are protesting the attempt to enforce a 9 p.m. curfew against children under 16 years of age.

The Marshfield, Wis., curfew law, passed in 1906, has been amended by the city council to provide for a 10 p.m. curfew for persons under 16 years. The original statute fixed the time at 9 p.m.

The city council of Kansas City has proposed an increase in the fees paid by music machines, pin ball and other amusement machines. The present fee for music machines is $3 and the proposal would increase it to $3.50. Pin ball machines would go from $3 to $5.

Selling Theatre Assets

Kyle Hayes, receiver of the New Orpheum theatre in North Wilkesboro, N. C., on Saturday, will sell at public auction all assets of the theatre, including projection machines, screen, sound equipment, seats, furniture and fixtures.

Williams Sells Interest

Bert Williams, president of Allied Film Exchange, independent Detroit exchange, has sold out his interest to H. Vinton Gilbert, who will continue as manager. Mr. Williams plans to open a new exchange in St. Louis.

B&K Gets Relay Television Permit

The Federal Communications Commission has granted a construction permit for Balaban & Katz's television relay station. The call letters are W9XBP. The relay station will be used to transmit remote pickups to the main station in the State Lake Building. Wiliam C. Eddy, Balaban & Katz chief television engineer, is supervising installation of equipment manufactured by the Allen B. DuMont Laboratories, Paramount television affiliate.

New York Stations Preparing

Will Baltin, program director of the DuMont television station in New York City reported "progress" this week but would not assign even a tentative date for the beginning of program operation of the station. Engineers are tearing out walls, installing wires preliminary to putting in electrical equipment, he explained.

The National Broadcasting Company's station in New York, W2XBS, has just about finished work on changing to the new number one television band assigned to it by the FCC. The test pattern will be transmitted Friday and Saturday evenings and on Sunday the first program since August 1st will be telecast. The program schedule will be irregular. The old standard of 441 lines will be used until the industry adopts a universal standard.

Columbia Broadcasting System is expected to begin television programs about the first of the year.

Second Stockholder Suit Filed Against Universal

A second directors' and stockholders' suit against Universal Pictures and a large number of defendants was filed Tuesday in the N. Y. supreme court by William Freiday. The suit follows one brought by Samuel Posen on similar charges.

The Universal board of directors on the same day issued the following statement:

"In reference to the complaint filed by Mr. Freiday against Universal Corp., its directors and others, it is a matter of record that Mr. Freiday, who has been a director of the corporation since its inception, has voted in favor of the principal acts voted by the board, about which he now complains.

"Universal and its directors are confident that they will thoroughly answer these charges in court when the case comes up for trial."

Mr. Freiday asks the right to intervene in the Posen suit. The complaint asks an accounting, injunction to restrain the payment of salaries and interest charges to a number of defendants and an order to set aside the sale of Universal Pictures, Ltd.

Southern Division Of Columbia Meets

Abe Montague, general sales manager and Rube Jackter, his assistant, presided at the two-day convention, last Saturday and Sunday, of Columbia's Southern Division, at the Hotel Ansley, Atlanta.

The Columbia executives and their sales' staff devoted the two-day session principally to an analysis of sales and exhibition plans for the company's forthcoming Wesley Ruggles' production, "Arizona."

In addition, arrangements for the release of "Angels Over Broadway," were discussed. The sales personnel was given a close-up of early releases including "This Thing Called Love," "Passage West," "Penny Serenade," and "Legacy."

'NORTH WEST' AND 'TUGBOAT' OPEN, 'FANTASIA' SET FOR NOVEMBER 13

More "Bagdad" Trade Showings Held; Campaign for "Reuter's"; "Aunt Maggie" Opens; "Zorro" in Cincinnati

Cecil B. De Mille's Paramount production of "North West Mounted Police" had its world premiere campaign opening in four theatres in Regina, Saskatchewan, 19th century headquarters of the mounted police, on Monday, and at the Chicago and State-Lake theatres in Chicago Thursday. Special celebrations, with personal appearances of Hollywood stars and distinguished guests, marked both the Canadian and United States premiere of the film.

Some 75,000 persons, a larger crowd than the record established at the visit of King George VI and Queen Elizabeth, gathered in Regina for the "North West Mounted Police premiere celebration, Paramount reported. The quadruple openings were held at the Metropolitan, Rex, Grand and Capitol theatres. Personal appearances were made at all four houses by the visiting Hollywood celebrities, Madeleine Carroll, Robert Preston, Preston Foster and Lynne Overman. (The picture is reviewed on page 34.)

Among the special guests at the premiere were A. P. McNab, lieutenant-governor; W. J. Patterson, premier of Saskatchewan; James Grassick, Mayor of Regina; Assistant Commissioners Lanauze and Irvine of the Mounted Police.

After the premiere Miss Carroll made an appeal for the Canadian Red Cross over a Dominion-wide radio network. Radio stations CKCK and CJRM gave full coverage to the three-day celebration. The concluding affair on the program was a gala province ball for the benefit of the Auxiliary War Service.

Second Premiere in Chicago

The premiere celebrations in Chicago began Wednesday evening at the annual banquet of the State Council, businessmen's association, at which Mr. DeMille was the chief speaker. The dinner was held in the Grand Ballroom of the Palmer House. Guests scheduled to be present included John Stelle, governor of Illinois; Edward J. Kelly, mayor of Chicago; Fiorello LaGuardia, mayor of New York; Bishop Bernard J. Sheil, auxiliary bishop of Chicago; and the stars of the film—Gary Cooper, Madeleine Carroll, Paulette Goddard, Preston Foster, Robert Preston and Lynne Overman. From 9:30 to 10 P. M. (CST) the Columbia Broadcasting System carried the program.

On Thursday the night of the opening activities were broadcast over a Mutual network including 131 stations.

Traffic was stopped on State Street at six o'clock in the evening by order of Mayor Kelly so that the 2,500 policemen assigned to the premiere could clear the street and prepare for the opening. A number of store windows had been barricaded as a protection against the crowds trying to get a glimpse at the producer and the Hollywood stars. Forty-five Red Cross first aid stations were set up to care for possible injuries.

State Street and the Loop area was decorated with banners welcoming Mr. DeMille and the stars. Every seat was sold out at the Chicago and State-Lake and it was reported that scalpers asked as much as $7.50 for a $1.65 ticket to the opening.

The home office delegation to the Chicago opening included the following: Barney Balaban, Paramount president; Adolph Zukor, chairman of the board; Stanton Griffis; Neil F. Agnew, vice-president in charge of sales; Charles M. Reagan, western division sales manager; Sam Dembow, Jr., Leonard Goldenson, Alec Moss, Robert M. Gillham, director of advertising and publicity.

Last week Mayor Kelly of Chicago wired Mr. DeMille suggesting that he transfer his production headquarters to that city. "Chicago was the home of the first big motion picture studio, the Essanay, away back in 1907. This city could again become the film capital of the world if Mr. DeMille would start the parade of the film-makers back to Chicago," Mayor Kelly said in his telegram. He pointed out that climate is not so important today because most films are made within sound stages which can serve just as well in Chicago as Hollywood. Mayor Kelly offered 21 acres of land to film producers who would move to Chicago. The land, known as Ilgair Park, is located at 6200 Touhy Avenue and was offered by Robert A. Ilg, Chicago industrialist.

The Strand theatre in Providence, R. I., was to open "North West" at advanced prices Friday. Edward L. Reed, manager, has set the same prices with a 65 cent top as were obtained by Loew's State on the "Boom Town" engagement earlier in the season.

Record Business for "Dictator" in New York

"The Great Dictator," Charlie Chaplin's first film in five years, was expected to set an all time high for its first week at both the Capitol and Astor theatres in New York, United Artists reported. The film was expected to gross nearly $100,000 at the Capitol and $21,000 at the Astor. Business at the Astor was over the seating capacity maximum gross for there were standees at every performance since the picture opened, it was said.

On Wednesday of last week, the first day of the picture's run, 20,818 persons saw the film at the Capitol and the gross was over $17,000. At the same theatre the gross was over $14,000 Friday, $21,000 Saturday and nearly $20,000 on Sunday.

"Gone With the Wind" grossed about $71,000 during its first week at the Capitol last December. The Selznick International film was shown three times daily and the shorter running time of the "Dictator" permits a seven-show schedule. Price scale at the theatre is the same as it was for the "Wind" engagement. The record gross for the Capitol theatre was set in March, 1930, when "Anna Christie" did a week's business of $109,000.

At the Capitol theatre the first morning show of "The Great Dictator" begins at 10 A. M. and the last ends at 2:30 A. M. The theatre reported that about 35,000 patrons see the Chaplin film there each day and 5,000 at the Astor.

The Loew circuit signed Monday with United Artists to play "The Great Dictator." Between October 31st and November 6th the film will open at 30 key cities of the Loew circuit. It will open at Loews State, New Orleans, on October 31st.

The Fox West Coast circuit will play the film in about 175 houses during November and December, with the West Coast opening at the Carthay Circle, Los Angeles, scheduled for November 14th.

The Canadian premiere will be held in Ottawa on November 4th it was reported.

Clayton Bond, film buyer for Warner Brothers Circuit, said Monday that contrary to reports no circuit deal had been made with United Artists for "The Great Dictator". He said that contracts were signed for only two theatres, the Aldine, Philadelphia and the Warner, Pittsburgh.

On Monday Charlie Chaplin was host to the film critics of Philadelphia at a luncheon at Dinty Moore's in New York after the critics had seen his picture. The film opened Wednesday at the Aldine in Philadelphia. In the party were Laura Lee, Mrs. Lynton Martin, Harry Murdock, Dorothy Guinan and Everett Callow, advertising and publicity director of Warner Theatres in the Philadelphia territory. Mr. Chaplin recalled at the luncheon that his first motion picture offer had been received while he was appearing at the old People's Theatre in Philadelphia in "A Night in a Music Hall". The offer from a New York agent was addressed to "Charles Chapliniere", he said.

For the run of "The Great Dictator" at the Roosevelt and Apollo theatres in Chicago, Balaban and Katz, have suspended the pass list. The Chaplin picture opens in Chicago on next Thursday.

"Tugboat Annie" Opens In Tacoma, Washington

The Warner Brothers film, "Tugboat Annie Sails Again" opened Friday in three theatres in Tacoma, Washington, the Music Box, Roxy and Blue Mouse. The town's population was doubled to over 200,000 for "Tugboat Annie Day", as proclaimed by Harry P. Cain, mayor. (The picture is reviewed on page 34.)

Hollywood stars including Majorie Rambeau and Alan Hale, of the picture's cast, and Donald Crisp and Ronald Reagan made personal appearances at the three Hamrick theatres.

Early in the afternoon the guests arrived in Steilacoom, Washington, ten miles from Tacoma and boarded the yacht, "Electra" and sailed to the Tacoma Yacht Club where the party participated in the regular Hedda Hopper national broadcast over 97 Columbia Broadcasting System stations.

Following the broadcast the stars went aboard the official tug, "Thea Foss" and went to the port of Tacoma, accompanied by yachts and fishing schooners and some 25 airplanes.

WANGER TO DELAY FOR "FANTASIA"

Walter Wanger announced Monday that he would hold up future production until the revolutionary sound treatment of Walt Disney's "Fantasia" was introduced.

"The entire industry has felt the disastrous effect of losses in the foreign market and needs a strong stimulant," Mr. Wanger said. "Disney engineers have worked more than two years perfecting the sound equipment for 'Fantasia' and advance reports on their success are that this film will present something utterly new and startling in technical advancement. The box-office bonanza created by the Vitaphone is history. This time I want to be ready to take advantage of these revitalizing technical accomplishments and become the first to employ them in 'living' picture production."

After a reception at the Tacoma dock the welcoming committee lead by Mayor Cain and the guests boarded the Coast Guard cutter "Atlanta" to watch a water carnival. At the center of the city a placque in honor of Tugboat Annie was dedicated.

At the premiere itself crowds were so dense that special police had to be called out to make paths so that the stars could get to the theatres, Warner Brothers reported. Some 50 tugboat skippers and crews were present at a special dinner where the feature was also shown. The opening celebration ended Saturday with a special showing at the Roxy theatre for 1,700 children at which the stars also made personal appearances.

The national release date of "Tugboat Annie Sails Again" is October 28th.

"Fantasia" Opening For British Relief

The world premiere of Walt Disney's "Fantasia", featuring special musical effects, at the Broadway theatre in New York on November 13th will be under the auspices of the British War Relief Society. The price range for opening night will be from $5.00 to $10.00 per ticket.

Samuel A. Salvage, president of the British relief organization, said, "We are very proud to be sponsoring an event of such major importance as the first showing anywhere in the world of Walt Disney's new and revolutionary production "Fantasia". Everyone is waiting eagerly to see "Fantasia" with its new techniques and wonderful sound improvements. We feel that this premiere will be one of the most important and spectacular of the year."

Roy Disney, vice-president and general manager of Walt Disney Productions, and William Gerity, studio technician were expected in New York this week from the Coast to complete arrangements for the opening November 13th.

More "Bagdad" Trade Showings

In addition to the special trade showings of "The Thief of Bagdad", Alexander Korda production, previously published showings for exhibitors were also held on October 17th in Indianapolis at the Cinema theatre; on October 18th in Detroit at the Fine Arts; and in other cities.

Emanuel Silverstone, New York sales representative for Mr. Korda, attended the Cleveland and Buffalo "Showmen's preview" of "The Thief of Bagdad".

Last Saturday a "Thief of Bagdad" ball was held at Manhattan Beach, New York. Prizes for the most unique costume were awarded by Lilian Bond of the film's cast. A trailer on the feature was shown to those who attended the ball.

Mr. Korda has announced that all of his pictures starring Sabu will be sent to the Warm Springs (Georgia) Foundation for free showings to the infantile paralysis patients. This action was taken after the successful premiere of the "Thief of Bagdad" on October 14th at the institution under the auspices of Franklin D. Roosevelt.

"World In Flames" Radio Broadcasts

Paramount Pictures has bought time on 267 radio stations of the Columbia Broadcasting and Mutual Broadcasting systems, for its "World in Flames." It is the first time so many stations have been utilized by a film company, to boost its product, it was reported.

On Saturday, October 26th, at 7:45 P. M., E.S.T., the entire CBS network will be used. Elmer Rice, Major George Fielding Eliot, and Ray Bloch's orchestra will be heard.

On Thursday, October 24th, the entire Mutual network will be used. The program goes on at 10:15 P. M., E.S.T., with Raymond Gram Swing, Wythe Williams, and the Bloch orchestra.

The Buchanan and Company advertising agency is handling the arrangements.

REFUGEE CHILDREN TO SEE "DICTATOR"

English and German refugee children, eight to 14 years old, will be guests of the National Board of Review next Tuesday, at a special showing of Charles Chaplin's "The Great Dictator," in the United Artists' home office projection room, New York City. The children will be asked their opinions of the film; and these will be sent by the Board to groups throughout the country, supplementing the sponsor the premiere of Walt Disney's

The British War Relief Society will spnosor the premiere of Walt Disney's "Fantasia," at the Broadway Theatre, New York, on the night of November 13th, to raise funds for the purchase of additional emergency rolling kitchens to feed the homeless, fire fighters and rescue crews in the bombed areas of Britain.

Says 35,000,000 Are Still To See "Wind"

Approximately 25,000,000 persons saw "Gone With the Wind" in its 4,500 "pre-release" engagements in the United States and Canada and approximately 32,000,000 to 35,000,000 persons still may want to see the picture, according to a survey conducted for MGM.

Up to now the box office gross has been estimated at from $25,000,0000 to $26,000,000 for the world, with the U. S. and Canada theatre gross at about $22,000,000. On the basis of a 70 percent share to the distributor MGM's world gross has been about $18,000,000 it was reported. The box office gross at the regular release next year is expected to be about six or seven million it was said.

"Arise My Love", grossing $36,000 over the three day weekend did the best opening weekend business at the New York Paramount theatre in the last three years, according to Robert M. Weitman, manager. The film grossed $10,000 Wednesday, $7,500 Thursday and $36,000 over the long weekend. Mr. Weitman estimated that the film would gross over $65,000 in its first week.

"Down Argentine Way" had the strongest opening of any Twentieth Century-Fox film to play the Roxy theatre in New York since "The Rains Came," the company reported.

The New York premiere of Warner Brothers' "Knute Rockne-All American" on Thursday of last week gave the Strand theatre its biggest day's business since the present stage and screen policy was adopted three years ago. Police reserves were called out to handle the crowds. The house played five shows Friday and Sunday and six on Saturday.

"They Knew What They Wanted" has been held over one hundred percent to date in all of its twenty-five pre-release engagements. The latest key city hold-overs for the Carole Lombard-Charles Laughton starrer are Providence, Washington, Rochester, Denver, Davenport, Detroit, Philadelphia, Trenton and the Hillstreet and Pantages, Los Angeles, RKO reported.

"Zorro" in Cincinnati On November 1st

Elaborate preparations are in progress in Cincinnati for the world premiere of the Twentieth Century-Fox "The Mark of Zorro," which will be held simultaneously at the RKO Albee and Shubert November 1, at which Tyrone Power and Annabella will make personal appearances at both houses. Part of the picture and premiere will be broadcast on the Kate Smith hour, which will be broadcast from Cincinnati on that night through the facilities of WCKY. Mr. Power, Annabella and Kate Smith also will personally attend a Hallowe'en Ball to be given October 31st in the Netherland Plaza Hall of Mirrors by the Cincinnati Chapter of Bundles for Britain as a means of raising funds for the organization. Mr. Powers, a native of Cincinnati, at one time was an usher at the suburban Orpheum theatre, before it passed into control of RKO. Scale for the premiere at both houses will be 50 and 65 cents, with no seats reserved.

Special Campaign Set By Warners on "Reuter's"

Warner Brothers have arranged a special advance campaign on "A Dispatch from Reuter's" starring Edward G. Robinson. Features included live pigeons sent to leading exhibitors and newspapermen with letters from Gradwell L. Sears, general sales manager, and Charles Einfeld, director of advertising and publicity, telegrams sent by Editor and Publisher magazine to newspaper editors recommending support to the film, a personal letter from the president of the Postal Telegraph Company to the organization's 17,000 employees and 2,000 jumbo telegrams in Postal windows, plus 100,000 miniature telegram blanks advertising "Reuter's."

"Who Killed Aunt Maggie" Opens in Atlanta

Herbert J. Yates and James R. Grainger, president of Republic, plan to attend the Atlanta premiere of the company's "Who Killed Aunt Maggie" on Thursday. Proceeds from the opening will go to charity. Republic franchise holders in territories East of the Mississippi were scheduled to be present as well as a group from Hollywood including John Hubbard, Walter Abel and Mona Barrie.

Stockholders to Elect 5 Warner Directors

At the annual meeting of Warner Bros. stockholders in Wilmington, on December 9th, five directors are to be chosen, it was learned, this week. Four of the five directors are up for re-election. Joseph H. Hazen replaces Sam E. Morris for the fifth place on the board. Terms of the directors run two years.

Incumbent directors on the ballot are: Samuel Carlisle, Stanleigh P. Friedman, Charles S. Guggenheimer and Morris Wolf. Other members of the 11-man directorate are: Harry M., Jack L. and Albert Warner, Joseph Bernhard, Waddill Catchings and R. W. Perkins, whose terms expire in 1941.

SMPE HEARS OF NEW SOUND, LENSES, 'MIKES', RECORDERS, METERS & METHODS

Huse, Griffin Named President, Vice-President at West Coast Session; Disney, McMath Win Progress and Journal Awards

The Society of Motion Picture Engineer this week appeared to have made an open bid for renewed Hollywood motion picture technical attention, by electing to its presidency Emery A. Huse, West Coast manager of the motion picture department of Eastman Kodak Company, the first Presidential candidate to acquire the office from the film producing capital where the Research Council of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences has, for years, held the dominant position in studio technical matters.

Announcement of Mr. Huse's election came at the opening of the 47th semi-annual five-day convention of the Society, Monday, at the Hollywood Roosevelt Hotel. It preceded announcement of the election of other officers, of the annual SMPE technical awards winners, of a week of reports and demonstrations of technical advances, of new studio microphones, new silent cameras, new sound units, new methods of protecting film against scratches, new sound units, new light meters, new methods for loudspeaker systems for better ratings for lenses, new light meters, new methods for loudspeaker testing, and almost every conceivable problem of the day in technical laboratories being developed for production, distribution and exhibition practice.

Mr. Huse succeeds E. A. Williford, of National Carbon Company, who continues on the board as past-president.

Herbert Griffin, vice-president of International Projector Company, was elected executive vice-president, succeeding N. Levinson. A. C. Downes, of National Carbon, was elected editorial vice-president, succeeding J. I. Crabtree, who held the office for a number of years. William C. Kunzman, convention vice-president, was returned for another term. The new secretary, following J. Frank, Jr., is P. J. Larson, New York consulting engineer and patent authority. George Friedl, Jr., of International Projector, is the new treasurer, taking over from R. O. Strock, who has been nominated chairman of the Atlantic Coast Section.

The new officers were introduced at the 47th semi-annual banquet and dance, Wednesday evening.

The five-day convention opened Monday with a welcome to the several hundred delegates by retiring President Williford. After routine business, the delegates adjourned for a luncheon addressed by Frank Capra.

Disney, McMath Honored

Walt Disney, whose first cartoons embellished a Red Cross ambulance in France in 1918, was awarded the Progress Medal of the SMPE for 1940 "for his achievement in developing the cartoon movie to its present status as a primary entertainment medium for the whole world."

At the same time, the Society honored Robert R. McMath, of the McMath-Hulbert Observatory of the University of Michigan, with its Journal Award for his preparation of the most outstanding paper published in the SMPE Journal last year. Entitled "The Surface of the Nearest Star," Mr. McMath's paper described his experiments in taking pictures of the surface of the sun.

The presentations were made at the banquet Wednesday night.

The Technical Sessions

Eleven technical sessions of the convention included the presentation and discussion of nearly 50 papers by leading persons from the industry's laboratories, studios and equipment manufacturing organizations. Two sessions were given over to sound, one to sound recording, one to disc recording, two to laboratory subjects, one to television, and four to general subjects.

Chairmen of some of the committees included: C. R. Sawyer, Pacific Coast Papers Committee; H. G. Tasker, reception and local arrangements; W. C. Kunzman, registration and information; N. Levinson, banquet; G. A. Chambers, hotel and transportation; H. Griffin, convention projection, and Julius Haber, publicity.

At the first technical session, the new "black light" developed for theatre illumination was discussed by H. J. Chanon and F. M. Falge, of General Electric. They pointed out that the demand for near-ultraviolet radiation (commonly called black light) in the production of fluorescent effects in theatres has shown the need for more technical data on the subject to insure most effective use of the new medium. In addition, standard filters designed to absorb what visible light is emitted by the "black light" sources were discussed.

Also heard Monday was J. W. McNair, of the American Standards Association, New York, who discussed the important place standards occupy in the motion picture industry.

Technical advances in film sound recording which insure more nearly perfect sound reproduction in the neighborhood theatre as well as in the most famous film "palace," were described by Dr. E. W. Kellogg, of RCA Research Laboratories.

The convention witnessed a display by Jack Dawn, of M-G-M Studios, of make-up technic, and another by I. J. Wilkinson and W. Hamilton, of RKO Studios, of editing a motion picture.

A report of the SMPE Standards Committee was brought in by D. B. Joy, the chairman. The committee declared that a decision had been reached to abolish the "SMPE Standards" as such, and call practices formerly covered under the title, "Recommended Practices."

Dr. Kellogg appeared on the program a second time to discuss a new method to utilize synchronous motors in recording and reproducing motion picture sound. He explained a new type of interlocking driving system which, he said, produces better sound reproduction with synchronous motors than is now possible with selsyn motors.

Other papers read and discussed Monday were "Operation of the Variable-Intensity Recording System," by C. W. Faulkner, of Twentieth Century-Fox and C. N. Batsel, of RCA Manufacturing; and, "A Monochromatic Variable-Density Recording System," by O. L. Dupy and J. K. Hilliard, of M-G-M Studios.

A new low-temperature sound-stage developed to provide sub-freezing temperatures and actual snow storms, for motion picture "shooting," and a new type of mobile camera platform, were among "the many contributions to greater realism in motion pictures" described Tuesday.

New Camera Dolly

A new camera boom and dolly which, though of intermediate size, is said to operate more efficiently than any unit of the largest size, was described by John Arnold, of M-G-M studios. The new unit employs the principle of the modern airplane fuselage, doing away with longitudinal girders in the 9-foot boom and substituting a box-girder.

Among the other matters discussed Tuesday were the following: "An Improved Playback Horn Equipment," by C. R. Daily, of Paramount Pictures; "A New Mirror Light-Modulator," by W. R. Goehner, Bell Telephone Laboratories; "A 200-mil Variable-Area Modulator," by R. W. Benfer and G. T. Lorance, Electrical Research Products; "Analysis of Sound Film Drives," by D. MacKenzie and W. J. Albersheim, Electrical Research Products; "An Investigation of Some Factors Influencing Volume Range in Photographic Sound Recording," by W. K. Grimwood and O. Sandvik, of Eastman Kodak; and "The Measurement of Photographic Printing Density," by J. G. Frayne, of the Electrical Research Products, Inc.

New "Mike"

"Realism to a degree never before achieved will soon be imparted to motion picture sound, radio broadcasts, and phonograph recordings by a new type of ultra-directional microphone," the Society learned from Dr. H. F. Olson, an authority on acoustical problems.

The new microphone, developed by Dr. Olson in the RCA Research Laboratories, was described as a "line microphone"—that is, it has a large number of small tubes with open ends as pickup points, equally spaced along a line. A "ribbon" element is used to transform acoustical vibrations into corresponding electrical vibrations to be magnified and then recorded or broadcast. Delay in the action of the sound waves is introduced in the pipes, making the microphone ultra-directive.

Other technical papers presented included one by A. L. Williams and H. G. Baerwald, of Brush Development Company, Cleveland, on low-noise microphones as affecting purity of sound reproduced—multiple piezoelectric microphones which lend themselves to the design of quiet sound units were treated. They also discussed a new uni-directional type microphone developed by the combination of different minimum-noise microphone types.

A paper prepared jointly by F. L. Hopper, of Electrical Research Products, and F. F. Romanow, of Bell Telephone, described a new means of calibrating microphones by acoustic measurements. The value of testing to determine the correlation between a microphone's performance as determined by acoustic measurements and by listening tests was brought out.

Another paper was delivered by S. J. Begun, of Brush Development, on "Stabilized Disc Record Cutters."

SMPE Told of New Silent Camera

Four other new developments in the industry, include a new type silent movie camera, a portable film sound recording unit weighing 50 pounds, a method of protecting motion picture film against scratches and surface damage, and a method of rating camera and projector lenses, were described to the Society.

This session was held in the new Walt Disney Studio Theatre. The session also included a description of the studio by W. E. Garity and J. L. Ledeen.

The new camera, said to fulfil the requirements for sound-stage work without the necessity for cumbersome anti-noise housing or "blimps," needed to silence standard movie cameras, was described by D. B. Clark, executive director of photography, and Grover Laube, of Twentieth Century-Fox, where it was developed and is in use.

A new 50-pound film recording unit, which can be carried from location to location in the baggage trunk of a car, and carried and operated at the scene by one man, was described by D. Y. Bradshaw, of "March of Time." It is for scenes shot in offices, coal mines, airplanes, battleships, political meetings and an ever lengthening list of other newsreel locations. The portable unit was developed by RCA, and can be set up and in operation in less than 10 minutes.

A special lacquer is the agent used in Eastman Kodak's new method of protecting motion picture film in use against surface damage, according to R. H. Talbot, who said. "The lacquer coating is simply and quickly applied to one or both sides of a 16 or 35-mm film," adding, "Slight scratches caused by constant usage are absorbed by the lacquer and never reach the film. When the damage to the lacquer surface requires, the lacquer is washed off and a new coating applied."

"A photographer's dream has been realized" by a new Twentieth Century-Fox photo-electric method of rating the light-speed of lenses, Mr. Clark told the convention. He said the new method was devised after cameramen noticed that when lenses were interchanged during a "shooting," as is often necessary, the quality of the picture was far from uniform even though all the lenses were set to the same f/ rating. He said some of these ratings are as much as 100 per cent in error when reduced to actual transmitting capacity of the lens.

A retired U. S. Army Captain was said to have solved one of the principal problems of photography by the development of a light meter which measures the direct light on the subject at the light source, instead of the reflected light from the subject, the Society was told. The paper, delivered by its author, Captain Don Norwood, was on Thursday's program.

Develops New Meter

Captain Norwood said his new meter is free from many influences which tend to cause undesirable variations and errors in negative exposure, and provides a means of putting negative exposure control on the basis of an exact science. The new meter is designed specifically to respond to three-dimensional characteristics of incident illumination, as compared with reflected light. The meter is pointed directly at the light source instead of at the subject, he said. Its calibrations show how to set the lens.

Once a loudspeaker system has been installed in a theatre, it is difficult to test its qualities, according to sound film opinion. That problem has been tackled by S. L. Reiches, of Cleveland, with the result that he has devised a measuring system which is said to close the only gap in the known methods of testing all the factors relating to motion picture sound reproducing equipment. He charges that all present methods of attempting to determine how much sound is actually coming out of a loudspeaker are unreliable.

Mr. Reiches' idea is to measure the sound which comes from the horns in the split-second interval before "standing waves" are created in the air by reflection from walls and ceiling. It is these "standing waves" which throw present calibrating calculations off, he said.

The SMPE convention on Friday night conducted a television session.

Other papers presented were the following: "Some Laboratory Problems in Processing 16-mm Black-and-White and Color Films," by W. H. Offenhauser, Jr., of Precision Laboratories, New York; "Reduction of Sprocket Hole Modulation in Film Processing," by M. Leshing, T. Ingman and K. Pier, of Twentieth Century-Fox; "Some Observations on Latent Image Stability of Motion Picture Film," by K. Famulener and E. Loessel, of Agfa Ansco Company; "Fixing Baths and Their Properties," by J. I. Crabtree, H. Parker and H. D. Russell, of Eastman Kodak; "The Effect of Developer Agitation on Density, Uniformity and Rate of Development," by C. E. Ives and C. W. Jensen, of Eastman Kodak.

Television

A new "Electron Microscope" which is said to "open whole new worlds to the biologist, the metalurgist, and a host of other researchers," was described to the Engineers Friday night.

The delegates also heard a report from their Television Committee, delivered by its Chairman, Dr. Peter C. Goldmark, Chief Television Engineer of the Columbia Broadcasting System, which reported continuing research into the problems of visual fatigue, flicker, and use of films in television.

Dr. Vladimer K. Zworykin, RCA Director of Electronic Research, took the convention through the "mysteries" of the "Electron Microscope" developed under his direction in RCA's Camden, N. J. laboratories. He explained that objects heretofore invisible because they were tinier than the wave-length of light, became easily visible when electrons were substituted for light and magnetic fields took the place of lenses.

Coverage of the Republican Convention at Philadelphia in the first television demonstration of its kind in the world was recounted by H. See, of the National Broadcasting Company. He pointed out that this represented the first time a news event of national importance transpiring over 25 miles from New York City had been televised. Program transmission was maintained continuously for the five-day convention to an audience estimated at 40,000, scattered in the east.

H. R. Lubcke, of the Don Lee Broadcasting System, presented a discussion of the similarity between the photographic aspects of television and motion pictures. C. F. Wolcott, of Gilfillan Brothers, Inc., discussed problems in television resolution and standards now before the National Television Systems Committee. The technical paper discussed flicker frequency vs. illumination, the effects of motion, and indicated the possibility of markedly improved definition with a given number of lines now that the major limitations of present scanning-spot shape and intensity distribution have been removed in the laboratory.

Academy Honors Officers

Members of the Research Council of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences were to have entertained the officers and Board of Governors of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers at an informal dinner on Tuesday, in the Vine Street Brown Derby, Hollywood.

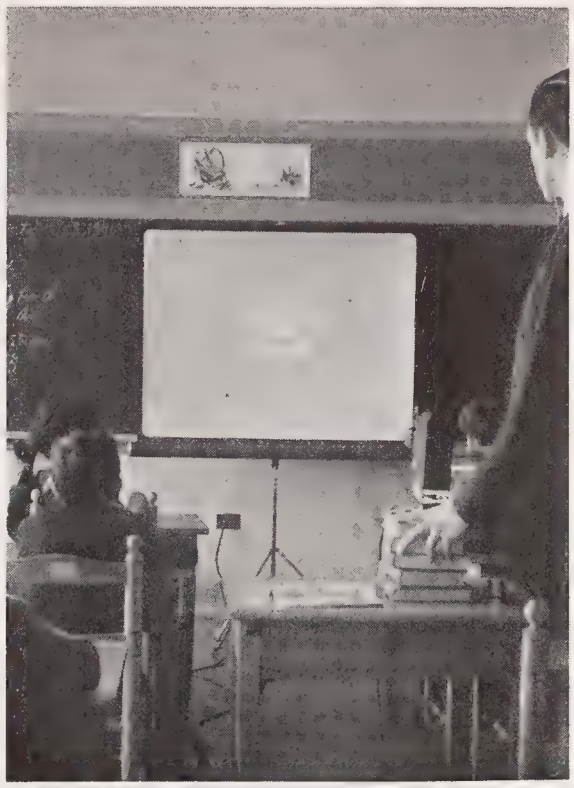
This informal get-together dinner of the heads of the two organizations during the society's West Coast convention continues a custom established during the first SMPE convention in Hollywood in 1935.

MPPDA LAUNCHES SPECIAL TRAILER FOR EXHIBITOR TIEUPS IN SCHOOLS

Slide Films To Be Issued on 20 Features a Year, Extending Study Guide Plan; Warners' "Dispatch from Reuter's" First

A new school-theatre tieup, making use of the classroom equivalent of the trailer in a theatre, has been developed by the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America and was to appear Thursday, for the first time, in 25 Dayton, Ohio, schools, in conjunction with the opening of Warner Brothers' "A Dispatch from Reuter's" in that city. An ultimate audience of the pupils of 18,000 schools throughout the country is seen by the MPPDA for the new method which uses a film slide projector and a prepared lecture read by the teacher.

Study Guide Extension



The exhibitor has in the new medium, called "Pictorial Events Films," a means of running right in the classroom of the local schools a show which has received approval of teaching authorities in a dozen tests and also advertises the feature picture. The plan will be used on about 20 selected films each year. It is an extension of the program of providing Study Guides on motion pictures in thousands of schools and Library Display charts in some 4,000 libraries and schools.

Study Guides which have been prepared on over 200 films in the past 10 years are used as text books in motion picture appreciation classes. From 20,000 to 50,000 copies of the Guides are regularly printed on selected pictures which lend themselves to school study. The all-time high for distribution of Study Guides was 500,000 on "Mid-summer Night's Dream." The Library Displays use photographs from the picture and information on historical background and research. The teacher's guide and prepared lecture to be used in connection with the "Classroom Reel" is printed on the back of the regular Library Display.

The "Classroom Reel" or special trailer contains 50 stills on regular 35mm film which are projected by slide film machines which are used by many schools and other organizations. It was estimated that there are 80,000 projectors in the country which can handle the "Classroom Reels" and a dozen companies manufacture the machine. In cases where the local school does not have a projector the exhibitor can buy one for local schools for about $15. The series of film stills are being sold to schools for $2.00 each but are offered to exhibitors for 50 cents each.

The classroom trailer on "A Dispatch from Reuter's" has 45 stills from the picture, plus four maps showing the development of communications and telegraph lines in the United States. Attention of school authorities to the new visual education aid will be attracted by articles in school journals. Four thousand of the first series will be distributed by the MPPDA to school principals. Warner Brothers has purchased 500 of the slide films and accompanying lectures to be used by its theatre circuit.

Warners, Tuesday, said Pictorial Events is giving the "Reuter's" feature a nationwide ballyhoo in conjunction with the classroom setup, adding that representatives in the 48 states are circularizing some 100,000 schools and other places, bringing "A Dispatch from Reuter's" to the attention of every fourth person in the United States.

First demonstration of the new slide film trailers for classroom use, in the Fieldston School, Riverdale, New York.

Pictorial Events Educational Counselors, who are to demonstrate visual education aids in the multiple courses of studies, such as social science, communication, history, etc., are cooperating with Warner representatives to provide projectors for demonstrations of the special classroom film before other large assemblies, such as fraternal orders, institutions, patriotic organizations, etc.

Pictorial Events, says Warners, has written to the chairman of programs of every large group in the country, such as Fraternal Congresses of the States, which embrace a membership of over 10,000,000 people, that "it is their duty to sponsor support of 'A Dispatch from Reuter's' because it is, in part, the story of fraternalism."

Newspaper Announcements

Stories for the beginning of the system are to be placed with every educational newspaper in the United States and Canada, telling them that the Pictorial Events film is available for all schools. Visual education counselors are following up these stories by contacting school officials.

The General Federation of Women's Clubs and the National Association of Business and Professional Women's Clubs of America are being urged to include in their National Program of Americanism full support.

Arthur de Bra, assistant secretary of the MPPDA, who developed the new school promotion, said that in the dozen classroom tests the "Classroom Reel" was enthusiastically received. "The children were crazy about it. It was a show. And the teachers liked the idea because it focused the attention of the pupils on one subject and work can be assigned on the matter seen on the screen and heard about in the lecture," he said. The show can be used from the sixth grade through high schools, he pointed out.

"It is up to the exhibitors," Mr. De Bra said, "to get the full benefit out of the 'Classroom Reel.' By stimulating a desire to see a certain motion picture the exhibitor may obtain patrons who rarely came to the theatre, for the children after seeing the special trailer in the school may go home, tell their parents about the film and then the whole family may go to the theatre, Mr. De Bra pointed out.

Lecture Follows Stills

The text for the "Classroom Reel" on "A Dispatch from Reuter's" was written by Marie Spottswood of the Ethical Culture School in Fieldston, New York City. A large numeral identifies each paragraph of the prepared lecture so that the teacher can easily give the description to accompany each slide film scene as it is projected on the screen. The lecture stresses educational aspects of the film and relates it to classroom activities. At the same time the picture receives exploitation because the illustrations are actual scenes from the film and in a general way the lecture gives a synopsis of the story.

After the prepared lecture in each teacher's guide there are suggestions for assignments in social studies, motion picture appreciation, English, and science, all related to the motion picture or topics treated in the film. The lectures for the Classroom Reels are published by Pictorial Events, 122 East 42nd Street under the general editorship of the following: M. R. Teshnor, production; Daniel C. Knowlton, curriculum relations and E. Teshnor, research—supervised by the MPPDA.

Test Proves Successful

Influence of the new classroom medium for exploiting motion picture was indicated by some of the comments written by the pupils following tests of the methods. Reactions of sixth graders included: "It is educational as well as fun to see. I think it is very good. It is better than the coming attractions in the movies. It also tells you more about the picture. It was very interesting and it was a good way to teach people."

Written comments from students in first year high school to a test of the Classroom Pictorial Events Films included: "I think the picture didn't tell too much so that I can enjoy the real picture too. This is a good way of advertising. They (the projected stills) made me want to go to the movie to see what happened at the end. After seeing the slides I am very anxious to see the completed movie."

The pupils also stressed the educational aspect of the film slides and made suggestions about what should be in the completed motion picture.

National Decency Legion Classifies Eight Films

Of eight pictures classified by the National Legion of Decency in its listing for the current week two were approved for general patronage, four were listed as unobjectionable for adults, one was cited as objectionable in part and one was condemned. The films and their classification follow.

Class A-1, Unobjectionable for General Patronage: "A Little Bit of Heaven," "The Thundering Frontier." Class A-2, Unobjectionable for Adults: "The Long Voyage Home," "They Knew What They Wanted," "Third Finger, Left Hand," "World in Flames." Class B, Objectionable in Part: "Arise My Love." Class C, Condemned: "Time in the Sun."

VARIETY CLUB AFFAIR SETS 12-YEAR RECORD

Personages of the Stage, Screen, Radio, Sports, and Politics Among Pittsburgh Speakers

by MORT FRANK in Pittsburgh

More than 1,000 attended the largest Variety Club banquet in history, last Sunday, in Pittsburgh, heard the most varied list of speakers from stage, screen and politics in the club's 12 years, saw one of the most elaborate bills of entertainment ever presented on an indoor stage in this sector, cheered the tent's adoption of its sixth orphan baby, and made a gift of $5,000 to Camp O'Connell for underprivileged boys.

Laughton, Roosevelt, Brown Speakers

Charles Laughton recited the "Gettysburg Address" and James Roosevelt spoke of everyone's individual responsibilities in America's fight to preserve the democratic way of life. Joe E. Brown expressed his desire to adopt the club's new boy, who had been christened Joseph Elmer Brown in tribute to the screen comedian's services to Variety clubs throughout the country.

John B. Kennedy predicted that the Rome-Berlin axis would soon reach its peak and then start to crumble, and radio's Dr. I. Q. gave away silver dollars to banqueters in a roving quiz patterned after his radio program, as well as to a bank account started for baby Joe Brown. Eddie Dowling paid tribute to the club's charities, coach Jimmy Crowley told football anecdotes, and former Attorney General William McCraw of Texas regaled with political and army yarns.

Senator James J. Davis eulogized Variety philanthropy, Walter O'Keefe quipped, and Pittsburgh's Mayor Cornelius D. Scully welcomed the guests. Howard Dietz, MGM, was toastmaster.

Other guests at the speakers' table, introduced by Mr. Dietz, were Cincinnati baseball manager William McKechnie, boxing champion Fritzie Zivic, and president Franklin Moore of the American Hotels Association.

Former Senator Frank J. Harris was honorary toastmaster.

Honoring retiring chief barker C. J. Latta and his crew, the banquet was climaxed with his presentation of the newly adopted baby to incoming chief barker C. C. Kellenberg. After unreeling a humorous film biography of Mr. Latta, Mr. Kellenberg presented the retiring chief and crew with gift charms. Mr. Kellenberg also gave national chief barker John H. Harris a testimonial globe-clock, as the club's token of esteem for his services during the past 12 years as banquet chairman.

Mr. Dietz presented Harris with a baby lion cub, in initiating him into Metro's Order of Leo.

The show included Jimmy Durante, Ozzie Nelson, Harriet Hilliard, the Radio Rogues, the Stanley Twins, the Del Rios, Jean Travis, Galli-Galli, the Six Whirlwinds, Rosanne Stevens, Bobby May, Bernie Armstrong, and the orchestras of Leighton Noble, Al Marsico, Ovando, George King, Teddy King, Frank Hernandez, Honey Boy, Jerry Mayhall and others.

Red Skelton was ring master for the entertainment following the speaking program. Brian McDonald was master of ceremonies for the orchestras' presentations.

Rev. James Garahan pronounced invocation.

Retiring crewmen were, besides Mr. Latta, Mr. Kellenberg, who was moved up to chief; Burtus Bishop, moving from second to first assistant chief; M. N. Shapiro, Al Weiblinger, I. Elmer Ecker, Morris A. Rosenberg, Michael Gallagher, Brian McDonald, George D. Tyson, and Arthur England.

The banquet committee included, in addition to Mr. Harris, assistant general chairmen Harry Kalmine and James G. Balmer, treasurer Dr. L. G. Beinhauer, and sub-committee chairman Burtus Bishop, Jr., Harry Feinstein, George Tyson, Harold Lund, Larry Katz, Ben Brown, Frank J. Harris, Herbert May, Art Levy, J. T. McGreevey, Joe Hiller, Ray Downey, Al Kerkhan, William Zeilor, William Gardner, and Brian McDonald.

Among those from out-of-town were:

Lou Astor, Harry Arthur, Jr., Frank Andrews, Allen Anthony, Howard Buzby, Jack Beresin, Charles Berns, Ben Vlotcky, Warren Conner, William Carlson, Ray Colvin, Max A. Cohen, Tom Connors, William Clark, James Clark, E. O. Cocke, Mike Cullen, George Dembow, Ned Depinet, Sam Dembow, Harvey Day, N. Dipson, Jay Emanuel, George Elmo, J. E. Fontaine, A. J. Fisher, Jr., Horace Falls, Irving Fried, L. C. Griffith, Lou Goldberg and Harry Goldstein.

Variety Honoring Walker; Jackson Heads Columbus

Frank C. Walker, the new postmaster general, will be guest of honor at the Philadelphia Variety Club's annual banquet to be held December 12th at the Bellevue-Stratford Hotel in that city. Nomination of officers for the new year will take place November 14th.

New officers of the Columbus, O., Variety Club organization include: Virgil A. Jackson, president; Harrold C. Eckert, first vice-president; Leo Yassenoff, second vice-president; J. F. Luft, treasurer, and P. J. Wood, secretary.

Mr. Jackson and C. Harry Schreiber were named delegates to the national convention; Thomas E. Jones and William S. Cunningham were elected alternates to the convention, and W. C. Pullin was elected national canvasman.

For the Washington, D. C., Variety Club's annual banquet, arrangements have been made to incorporate the Washington Redskin-Chicago Bear gridiron game. The banquet date was originally announced as Saturday, November 16th, at the Willard Hotel. The Redskin-Bear game is scheduled for Sunday, November 17th.

The Detroit Variety Club's second annual Tag Day to provide clothing, lunches and other necessities for needy children has reached its scheduled goal of $50,000.

The Renfro Valley Barn Dance ensemble, heard over radio station WLW, and Al Donahue's orchestra, will be among the features of the Columbus, Ohio, Variety Club Barn Dance and Frolic, to be held in the Columbus Auditorium, Friday, October 25, with which to raise funds to build a school for the children at Nightingale Cottage, a tubercular preventatorium in Columbus.

Ten No. 21, Atlanta Variety Club, is planning a motorcade to the Tech-Georgia football game in Athens on November 30th.

BOOK REVIEW

AMERICAN VAUDEVILLE, Its Life and Times. By Douglas Gilbert. Whittlesey House, New York. 394 pages. $3.50.

For one whose earlier years in New York were brightened by faithful attendance at the Alhambra and Colonial, later at Hammerstein's and the Palace, "American Vaudeville, Its Life and Times," is fond recollection of once-upon-a-time. It was a time when families reserved the same seats in the same theatre, week after week, year after year. It was a time when the headliner's latest quip was as much a part of the conversation as the "who's Yahoodi" of today's radio.

How vaudeville came to be, grew, flourished, then toppled, all in the short span of some 50 years, is told by the author, feature writer and former drama critic of the New York World-Telegram, who compresses this amazing chapter of American life into 394 pages.

The volume is divided into four main parts. The first, a setting of the stage, so to speak, describes how the term "vaudeville" came about, its development through the beerhall and gaslight days. The second part stresses the rise of Tony Pastor and his influence in cleansing the dirt of variety entertainment for family acceptance. Mr. Pastor is credited for the first touring variety show, the first check room service. He was never known to "close an act," which the author fittingly calls "an epitaph for any showman."

This period was further distinguished in 1893 by the addition of stars of the "legitimate" in sketch acts at Keith's Union Square, and brought about by J. Austin Fynes, a Boston newspaperman who came to New York as manager of the newly opened theatre. Mr. Fynes was among the managers to welcome the advent of the short-reel film as an audience "chaser," a novelty which proved to be the forerunner of "mechanised entertainment" the author blames for vaudeville's "murder."

The invasion of foreign artists who "played up, seldom down to their audiences" is here noted. These overseas stars appeared conspicuously at Koster & Bial's Music Hall, famed drop-in spot patterned after the leading English music halls of that era. The nineties also saw the first master of ceremonies, the robust James J. Morton.

For seekers behind-the-scenes, the last half of the book will be more interesting since it deals largely with the influence upon vaudeville of E. F. Albee and B. F. Keith, an influence the author claims was to contribute to its downfall, particularly in indicting Mr. Albee on many counts. "They made of entertainment a specialized regimented industry, "Mr. Gilbert writes.

Attentions here are also given to the beginnings of other vaudeville giants—the managers, bookers and agents who added much to the rapidly spreading panorama. Due obeisance is made to Hammerstein's Victoria theatre, which occupied the present site of the Rialto, on Broadway at 42nd Street.

The great comics of the 1900's are justly given their bow and this reviewer thanks the author for including the dialogues of Joe Cook's priceless "four Hawaiians" and "baseball yarn," the antics of the fabulous "Mr. Duffy & Mr. Sweeney," the meanderings of that delightful screwball, Bert Fitzgibbon.

Not the least part of the volume is devoted to the vaudeville trade press, most prominently to Variety and its founder, the late "Sime" Silverman, who clashed time and again with the Albee interests. Mentioned also is Billboard, especially having to do, as Variety, with the part taken by the vaudeville trade press in the White Rats and Equity wars.

In addition to author's acknowledgments, the book includes an appendix of the standard vaudeville acts between 1880 and 1930, and a helpful index.—A-Mike Vogel.

IN THE BRITISH STUDIOS

by AUBREY FLANAGAN
in London

Empire Building

New mathematical heights have been reached by Warner Bros. at their Teddington Studios with their production now on the floor, under the eye of Max Milder, on their most ambitious film to date, "An Empire Was Built."

As already recorded in MOTION PICTURE HERALD, this, in which John Gielgud plays the leading role as Disraeli, is being directed by Thorold Dickinson, who distinguished himself in his handling of "Gaslight."

Among the mathematical facts recorded by the studios' publicity department are that approximately 600 small part players and extras "will move through a dramatic panorama of history in the days of Disraeli when the British Empire established world domination," and that in one sequence alone, staged in the Houses of Parliament, 200 extras will play as Members of Parliament and the public in a set which occupies the entire floor space of the larger sound stage.

Another big scene, the crowd figures of which have not yet been calculated, will be staged in a Hyde Park set, with Will Fyffe as a Marble Arch orator.

Much discrimination is recorded on the part of Warner Brothers' casting director, who has to go through a range of personalia, including not only society belles and dukes but street beggars and down-and-outs.

The cast, apart from Gielgud, includes Diana Wynyard, as Disraeli's wife, Will Fyffe, Owen Nares, Fay Compton, Irene Brown, Nicholas Hannen, Stephen Murray, Frederick Leister, Kynaston Reeves, Leslie Perrins, Allan Jeayes, Percy Walsh, Anthony Ireland and Pamela Standish.

New Will Hay

After the short interval during which the machinery and personnel of the Ealing Studios were reorganized to cope with the blitzkrieg, the new Will Hay comedy, "Murder at St. Michael's," has gone to work there with Michael Balcon producing and Marcel Varnel as director.

Once again Will Hay sports his noted schoolmaster's cap and gown, and has new partners in comedy crime in Claude Hulbert and Charles Hawtrey.

Hulbert has already teamed with Hay on the B.B.C.'s National programme and they worked together on the stage.

Charles Hawtrey, who has become known to film goers as a bespectacled gaping schoolboy, gets his biggest film break to date.

"Murder at St. Michael's" casts Will Hay as a chemistry master who, evacuated to the Isle of Skye, gets involved in a double murder mystery.

FACILITATE ENGLISH NEWSREEL COVERAGE

As a result of long negotiations between Sir Gordon Craig, general manager of British Movietone News, and the British Government, a committee has been formed to facilitate newsreel operations in the British Isles.

The committee includes the head of the film division of the Ministry of Information, Sir Gordon as chairman of the new British Newsreel Association, and representatives of the Army, Navy and Air Force. Cameramen will be increased near the vital coastal towns of Britain.

The "Spotter" system, reducing air raid interference to a minimum, is in operation at the studios and production has gone smoothly since the inception of the film.

Cartoon Unit Set Up

A further bid for fame has been made by Ealing Studios with the establishment of a Film Cartoon Unit, who have gone to work on the new series under the supervision of British cartoonist St. John Cooper, noted contributor to London's "Daily Express."

"Kitten on the Keys" will be the first of Cooper's creations and is sponsored by the Ministry of Information, who have a more than merely friendly eye in much of the activities of Ealing Studios.

Thirty animators are at work and more cartoons will emerge from the newly formed department.

Formby Comedy Planned

On the completion of "Murder at St. Michael's" production in its major form will be directed at Ealing towards a new George Formby comedy, based upon the West End play "As You Are." Whilst most of the original domestic atmosphere of the play will be retained a concession to the Formby fans will be introduced in an infusion of a frankly slapstick atmosphere.

Reunion at Denham

J. Arthur Rank, Norman Walker and Jimmy Sloan respectively sponsor, director, and production manager, who helped create some years back British National's first film and a noteworthy contribution to British production "Turn of the Tide," have recently joined hands again in making a film at Denham, "Better Than Light."

Wilfrid Lawson, released from his work as Pilot Officer in the Royal Air Force is the featured player in the new picture.

The picture, with His Majesty's approval, includes a portion of the recording of King Georg'e Christmas Day broadcast.

The story, written by Manning Haynes, was scripted by Harold Simpson and Lydia Hayward.

Exteriors have been made, with the collaboration of the Naval authorities, at Land's End, and the Ministry of Information, who have no other interest in the film, arranged certain facilities for shooting.

The cast, apart from Lawson, includes William Freshman and Kathleen O'Regan.

Character Creation

Alternating his appearances between the air raid shelter at Shepherds Bush Studios and sets representing the Edwardian smart set atmosphere of Folkestone high society, ornamented in ferns, aspidistras and rococo decorations, Michael Redgrave has launched forth in "Kipps" into a new characterization. He has recreated for screen purposes the character of the nervous little Kentish shop assistant born of the mind of English novelist and seer H. G. Wells.

With Edwardian mustache, high collar and right fitting trousers, Redgrave is said to have explored new avenues of character comedy with not a little touch of pathos.

The entire floor of Number 4 Stage at Shepherds Bush has been occupied recently by a reproduction of the Folkestone Promenade ætat 1906, with its pier and band stand, furbelowed women and bowler hatted men, with one scene here a fashion parade of the clothes of the period. In this scene Redgrave wore tight white flannels, a sports "blazer" (coat) and straw "boater" (hat).

Diana Wynyard is in the lead opposite Redgrave. Carol Reed is directing the film, which is for release by 20th Century-Fox.

David Macdonald, director of "This England," has now reached the modern period in his epic panorama and his shooting sequences at the Rock Studios set in 1940.

Constance Cummings, hitherto appearing as an English girl, has once again, for the screen become an American.

Due probably to launch forth into activity in the immediate future, at Shepherds Bush Studios, are Gainsborough Pictures, who will set to work on the new Arthur Askey subject, "The Ghost Train," for release by General Film Distributors.

"Spring Meeting" is the next subject to take the floor at Welwyn, under the Associate British banner.

Without official pronunciamento comes news that Anglo-American probably will release the new Leslie Howard production. "Professor Pimpernel Smith," which is due to take the floor at Denham, D.V., shortly.

BRITISH INDUSTRY SEEKS HARMONY ON OPENING, CLOSING HOUR RULES

Varying Conditions and Powers of Licensing Boards Make Problem Difficult; London Theatres Allowed Unlimited Time

by AUBREY FLANAGAN
in London

The obliteration of those ancient tenets which made war a business of battle between armies has brought the British citizen to the front line, and the picture house no less than the suburban villa is now in direct and immediate contact with the enemy bomber. It is not surprising therefore that the whole habits of the filmgoing populace have changed, that entirely new standards have been set up in the past year, standards which are changing day by day as the wartime conditions change and intensify.

With this in view all efforts of the exhibitor groups in Britain both national and local are currently directed towards a readjustment of opening hours of cinemas. Approaches both to the Government body, the Ministry of Home Security, and to the various local authorities have been and are being made to secure a new framework of operating hours which will permit the exhibitor's economic survival and enable the filmgoing populace to obtain entertainment under conditions suited to the various and varying circumstances which obtain all over the country.

Opening, Closing Hours Disputed

Efforts are being made not only to secure earlier opening hours in various districts, but to secure and establish the principle of elasticity in regard to the time of closing. With these two factors is bound up the matter of Sunday opening which, though greatly eased since the War, remains still entangled with various threads of official legislation and which is still in essence a state of Sunday closing, with opening a possible if not easy alternative. A national effort is being launched to secure removal of these obstacles so that the opening of cinemas on Sunday is legally established with closing an optional alternative.

Nationally the CEA are pressing the Ministry of Home Security for a Governmental lead on the curfew or closing hour. It is already well known to readers of this page that conditions vary in wartime Britain and that whilst exhibitors, notably in London, are allowed a free hand in regard to closing hours, in other areas they are subject to the whims and whimsies of police, military, and municipal authorities. What the CEA asks is not the establishment of a national closing time—that would be impracticable and impolitic, but the concession of the principle of consultation with the exhibitor himself. It is the exhibitor, they claim, who knows best of all just what trade remains and at what hours, and if local authorities either left it to the local exhibitor groups to decide what time to close or at least consulted them and acted upon their advice justice would be done both to the trade and to the public.

It is no consolation to exhibitors in Bristol that whilst they are to be called upon to close at 9.30, local dance halls may stay open till 10.30, or to picturehouse operators in Southsea who are called upon to shut at 10 p. m., that the other entertainment centres in the town need not close down till an hour later. Nor do exhibitors all over Great Britain, who have curfews imposed upon them, look pleasantly upon the local saloons who have no curfew imposed and who are often taking the money which might just as well have gone through the cinema box office. London, they point out, has had no conditions thrust upon its shoulders but has decided its own closing hours—with the approval of the authorities—and is quite content.

One Show a Night

Thanks to the early closing insisted upon by some local bodies halls in many areas can only stage one show a night. As it is, with workers in factories and workshops coming home from the job at approximately 6.30 p. m., having an evening meal to use the vernacular—"getting poshed up"—those houses which can run two shows suffer because it is not practicable for the artisan or office worker to get to the cinema in time to see the programme through.

Some picture houses are finding local bodies placing on their licenses for the forthcoming years stipulations in regard to early closing, stipulations which take no regard of changing circumstances or elastic conditions. The fact is, of course, that one licensing area, say one which covers a large industrial area, may embrace two or three different conditions, industrial, suburban and outer residential, each demanding different trading codes. These in turn are wrapped up with vulnerability in regard to bombing, transport and social behavior.

In some areas there is of course little or no evening trade. These areas are still the exception rather than the national rule. Those which are fortunate to be able to boast of good trade resent being subject to conditions and opening hours based upon the experiences of the less happily placed London, South Wales, Northern and North Western centres.

Trade opinion thus inclines forcibly towards the belief that if the Home Security Ministry gave a lead to local licensing bodies, that they should exercise a democratic principle and take a lead from instead of giving it to the local exhibitors, a happy economic and ethical solution would be achieved.

With opening no less than closing hours, however, the new trade framework is wrapped up and efforts of the London exhibitor group to secure official approval of earlier opening hours are an essential part of the potential trade structure. Conscious that the changing habits of the filmgoing populace are as evident at one end of the day as the other, they are leading a movement towards extending the operating day at the initial end of the scale. Such a movement is bound to be followed by other groups who are just as convinced that there is money to be made—to some extent—in the daylight hours of opening and that they should have the opportunity of making it. Obviously in certain regions only the leisured classes have the chance of going to the picture house during the day. Even so there is probably justice in the plea, which is inspired by the conviction that the exhibitor has the right to as wide a field of profit, no matter how intense its sections.

CEA Leads Movement

The CEA too are leading a movement which has its end in the easing of the whole machinery of Sunday opening of cinemas with, logically, the further extension of that field of potential profit. As the law stands at present it is an improvement upon that which existed when the war started. The more cumbersome machinery of local meeting and local poll has been supplanted by a device which allows the exhibitor group on appeal from the local military to put into movement processes of appeal to the Government Department—the Home Office—which will facilitate Sunday permits. It is at best a negative process, tacitly suggesting that Sunday cinemas are unethical and illegal. The CEA will seek to invert the position, will ask the Home Office to permit Sunday cinemas, with the option on the exhibitor to remain closed if he wishes.

This would allow the local picture house to recoup some of the revenue lost during the week and would assist in maintaining public morale by helping the people to recreation which the nightly need for shelter from bombings denies them.

Opposition from religious bodies which have long considered Sunday their province rather than a day of public rest, is, of course, inevitable and the CEA do not expect the war conditions to have changed their attitude. An appeal, however, will be made to any public spirit they may have. The extension is only contemplated as a wartime emergency. It would, however, be a valuable precedent.

BRITISH INDUSTRY BLOCKS ARMY PLAN

The British Army Council plan to transfer the entire operation of film entertainment for troops to a military body instead of the present arrangement was blocked by the British film industry Tuesday at a meeting in London. The new plan, which aimed at establishing 150 mobile 16mm. units and 150 mobile 35mm. units for the fundamental purpose of technical training but also embracing entertainment films without admission charge, was presented by the Duke of Gloucester and Lord Croft.

Sam Smith, president of the Kinematograph Renters Society, and Harry Mears, president of the Cinematograph Exhibitors Association, said that the renters and exhibitors were absolutely satisfied with existing Navy, Army, Air Force Institute arrangements and that the new scheme would meet trade opposition.

Mr. Smith dubbed the whole plan superfluous and, supported by Mr. Mears, countered Lord Croft's request for a joint representative committee by declaring he could not commit members to any specific attitude.

Laughton Extends Tour

Charles Laughton, making personal appearances in connection with RKO's "They Knew What They Wanted," in which he stars, has extended his tour to include Seattle, Washington, and Portland, Oregon. He will appear in the first named on next Wednesday, and in the latter next Thursday.

PENNSYLVANIA BANS "WORLD IN FLAMES"

Censor Board of State Says Feature "Has Tendency to Corrupt and Debase Morals"

Unabashed by the storm they raised a few weeks ago by banning the March of Times' RKO release, "The Ramparts We Watch," Pennsylvania's censors have banned Paramount's compilation of newsreel shots, "The World in Flames," which also treats related subjects of war.

The Paramount picture was banned because it "has a tendency to corrupt and debase morals, and it is not proper," in the opinion of the censors.

Paramount To Appeal

Like RKO and the March of Time, who are carrying their appeals against the board decision to the highest courts of Pennsylvania, Paramount reacted. It asked the board to review the picture again. The owners of a picture have the right to demand this, under the state's censor board regulations. The board was expected to comply this week. Its reiteration of the ban then is expected to pave way for appeals to the courts.

The ban on the Paramount film is unique because it is a ban on news shots, which rarely, if ever, are censored. It is true that the March of Time's footage objected to by the board consisted of excerpts from the German official and factual coverage of the Polish campaign, entitled "Baptism of Fire"; however, it is pointed out, those reels were made by German government cameramen, edited by German government officials—and, in any event, the censors banned the picture in toto. The Paramount film consists of footage taken by its own newsreel company.

Neil Agnew, vice-president in charge of sales for Paramount, last week expressed "amazement" and "astonishment" at the board's action. He added:

"This picture had its world premiere in Washington, D. C., at the Columbia Theatre Thursday night, October 17th, before an audience comprised of high officials of the Federal Government, including some of the Justices of the United States Supreme Court, and it received the highest critical praise from the newspapers and leaders of defense.

"We will combat this ban by every legal means," he concluded, "and, if necessary, carry this case to the highest courts in the country."

According to the Paramount home office publicity department, in New York, the film received praise of national leaders, thus:

Henry L. Stimson, Secretary for War: "(the picture) records the development of conquest by force in the last decade, and clearly indicates the urgent necessity for the increase of our own protective forces."

Frank Knox, Secretary of the Navy: "The film is a very accurate portrayal of one of the most pregnant eras in modern history. I think its wide distribution cannot help but . . . lead the American people generally to adequate support of national defense."

Alben W. Barkley, majority leader of the United States Senate: "It is the most impressive depiction of the incredible changes that have taken place in the world during the past 10 years. Every American should make an effort to see this portrayal."

Others who praised the film, and were quoted by Paramount are Samuel Rayburn, Speaker of the House of Representatives, and Jesse Jones, Secretary of Commerce.

Paramount on Monday cancelled the program it was to sponsor Thursday night, featuring Raymond Gram Swing and Wythe Williams, over eight Pennsylvanida radio stations of the Mutual System.

Arthur Menken, newsreel cameraman, some of whose footage is in the picture, is making personal appearances in conjunction with its openings in key cities.

Allow "Merry Wives"

The New York State censor board on Monday lifted its ban on the Czechoslovakian film, "The Merry Wives." The ban was imposed in April because, the board said, the film was "immoral, indecent, and tend to corrupt morals."

Irwin Edmond, director of the board, said on Monday, "satisfactory revisions" had been made.

The film won first prize at the International Film Contest in Venice, in 1938.

It is expected to be shown in a New York theatre about November 15th.

Legion Condemns "Time"

"Time in the Sun" this week in its fourth week at the Fifth Avenue Playhouse, New York City, has been condemned by the National Legion of Decency.

"Dust to Dust" End

Edward Rovner, of Runnemede, New Jersey, has been permitted to keep his Runnemede Theatr open without paying a required $250 local license fee, after he agreed to end the engagement at the house of "Dust to Dust," heavily advertised as a sex picture. Protests of the townspeople against the film, which had played four weeks, caused the Borough Council to attempt to enforce the order requiring a license and levying a $100 fine for violation.

"Kampf" Kampf

The Chicago police censors last week banned Crystal Pictures' "After Mein Kampf" because it would arouse racial prejudice.

Kanin Advocates Institutional Ads

Advocating institutional advertising for the industry as a whole and honest exploitation of individual pictures, Garson Kanin, director, told members of the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers at a luncheon at the Hotel Edison, New York, Thursday, October 17th, that it was the job of advertising and publicity departments to make "Hollywood a respected center of a respected industry, rather than a carnival."

Criticizes Exploitation

Mr. Kanin said there were not enough brains and good stories in the world to make 500 pictures in a year and urged that exploitation should be more honest and imaginative. He said the hard work involved in making pictures should be accentuated rather than the Hollywood "idiocies" and swimming pools. His recent trip through the country convinced him, he said, that the frequent flaunting of Hollywood wealth has created a situation in which the industry is held in bad repute.

Harry Brandt, the principal speaker at the luncheon, urged publicity and exploitation men to become more acquainted with industry problems and to make such problems part of their jobs.

Walker, O'Leary, of Comerford, Honored

Frank Comerford Walker, formerly active head of the Comerford circuit and now the new Postmaster General of the United States, will be tendered a testimonial dinner next Monday, in Scranton, Pennsylvania, home office of the circuit, by the Lackawanna County Democratic Committee. He is also scheduled as a guest of honor at the Philadelphia Variety Club annual banquet on December 13th.

John J. O'Leary, formerly Mr. Walker's assistant and now the active head of the Comerford chain, was honored last week at the second annual banquet of the Scranton division of the circuit's Softball League. He received gifts, and also presented individual and team championship awards.

Among speakers at this affair were John Nolan, film booker, and Byron Lynn, district manager. Joseph A. Phillips was chairman and toastmaster.

ASIDES and INTERLUDES

By JAMES P. CUNNINGHAM

Some mighty strange items creep into a motion picture newsreel cameraman's expense account, as any newsreel editor will attest. Take the experience of Lewis (Ned) Buddy, Paramount Newsreel's chief of operations in Europe, now in New York, who, scanning the expense itemization of one of his photographers who had been assigned to cover British naval maneuvers at Portsmouth, noticed this choice item: "Fifteen shillings—tip to the Admiral for moving fleet in closer to the camera."

The same cameraman later covered the Dublin horse show. Then he disappeared for three weeks. Finally Mr. Buddy received a cable from a little town in Ireland. It read:

"I'm still with you — am I?"

Working with Paramount's exploiteers on the arrival in Chicago of Madeleine Carroll and Paulette Goddard, Thursday, for the big ballyhoo opening of "North West Mounted Police," Dave Mayer, president of the State Street Businessmen's Council, sent out a call for Boy Scouts to act as honorary escorts. Gallantly responding, in a rush, were scores of baldheaded, bewhiskered gents who were Boy Scouts long before the Civil War, or thereabouts. But still Boy Scouts at heart.

The list appeared as a picture-article by Barrymore in Look magazine. Barrymore's list included his four wives. He admitted that he is still awed by his sister Ethel. Garbo, Carole Lombard, Katherine Hepburn and Paulette Goddard also made the list.

Speaking of his first two wives, Barrymore revealed a Ripleyism of his own. Said he: "My first and second wives were born the same day in Newport, and brought into the world by the same doctor, who rushed from one house to the other."

Of his fourth wife, Barrymore said: "Elaine Barrie used to annoy me by correcting me on Shakespeare. I met her when she came to interview me for her Hunter College paper. We never did finish that interview, though subsequently we covered lots of territory."

A returning Rockefeller Center vacationer has this to report on the American scene: Her California-bound trans-continental train came to a brief halt in a desert town so small she didn't even notice the name. She did notice a restaurant alongside the tracks, though. And what a restaurant! The kind even dogs give a wide berth to. What caught her eye was the sign hanging over the door: Small, neat gold lettering on a black background, very much like a physician's sign, which read: "What Food These Morsels Be!"

BRANDT "DISSECTS" AN EXHIBITOR

"An exhibitor," according to New York exhibitor Harry Brandt, "is a fellow who buys something he doesn't want, from somebody who hasn't got what he is trying to sell, at prices the exhibitor cannot afford to pay, which sends the exhibitor's ledger deep into the red, practically forcing him to go to Florida for a long winter vacation."

If by some remote chance there breathes a man with cause so dead that he hasn't a button, Willkie, Roosevelt, or otherwise, one might turn to a new organization, a typical Hollywood press agent's dream, called the Carry the Torch Clubs of America, whose national headquarters are in the Sharon Hotel, Manhattan. All one need to join is "a feeling of affection for a member of the opposite sex." The lapel button is a flaming torch mounted on a heart.

The press agent behind these pretty sentiments is Noel Meadow. He has had some comparable ideas before, but this time he's going to make it pay cash. He is already collecting royalties on the official insignia from a pin manufacturer, a fabric company, a perfumer, and a doll maker.

President of the Carry The Torch Clubs is June Bentley, who, having sung "in every night club on 52nd Street," is well known to New York motion picture stay-up-lates.

Then there's Merle (Rockefeller Center) Crowell's story of the boy whose father was most eager to have him pass the entrance examinations to Dartmouth. Unfortunately, or otherwise, the father wasn't able to be at home to hear the results of his son's exams because he had to take a business trip to the Argentine. But he instructed the boy to cable him as soon as he knew how he had made out. He had been gone several weeks before he got the cable in Buenos Aires and opened it to read the single word, "Yes," and his son's signature. The instructions about the entrance exams had slipped his mind and, completely mystified, he cabled back, "Yes, what?" The answer was prompt and right to the point: "Yes, sir."

Groucho Marx, in Liberty Magazine, lays claim to be the new Ward McAlister of Hollywood, the male Emily Post, a self-made victor over the social game, champion over a new evolution of etiquette . . . Groucho, the California authority on what kind of wine to serve with weinies.

Groucho comes by his authority from attending exactly 336 Hollywood parties last year . . . he was actually invited to more than 12 of them.

His rule No. 1 in society is not to make an immediate dash to the party bar. This because party liquor is pretty crude, of an inferior grade. Groucho has found that by slipping the butler a one-spot, or even a dollar and a quarter, he will get him the good stuff, the stuff that the butler and his master drink.

Since clothes make the man, Groucho warns that women should give a lot of thought to their dress. Too, a host should be pretty specific about dress, advising on his invitations whether dress should be formal or informal, and not simply say, "We're Not Dressing," as one Hollywood host did recently, with dire consequences when some of his literal-minded guests arrived.

Tails, says Groucho, look good only on dogs. And even they sometimes have their's cut. A black tie is always appropriate, provided, of course, the gentleman is wearing a collar.

In dining out and finding the food unsatisfactory, a gentleman does not grumble and say that he could have had a better meal at home without having to wait until eight forty-five for it. And he certainly will not make threatening remarks such as, "Madame, if this schnitzel gives me ptomaine, you'll hear from my lawyers tomorrow." (If he does get ptomaine, he strives to make a friendly cash settlement.)

But all of that can be avoided by smiling at the hostess and saying, "Ella darling, I managed the soup and the salad, but this swill has me licked. How about rustling me up a couple of eggs?"

Following the trend, Groucho indulges in a quiz to determine just how little the average Hollywoodite knows about social behavior, asking for answers to the following questions:

1. If, while carving a turkey, you drop it into the lap of the dowager at your right, do you (a) apologize profusely; (b) break into tears; or (c) say, "Madame, I have not given you the bird; I'll thank you to fork it over immediately"?

2. Should chives or parsley be served with a steak on a black eye?

3. If you ask a young woman for a dance and she tells you her feet hurt—and then, thirty seconds later, you see her waltzing away with a young man who has more vaseline on his hair (also more hair), do you ask her for an introduction to the chiropodist, or do you pretend you're dead?

4. When the lady grabs the check in a restaurant, should she slip the dough under the table to the gentleman or openly hand it to the waiter?

5. On leaving a night club that's been raided, who enters the wagon first—the lady or the gentleman?

6. Describe the design and colors of three of Lucius Beebe's vests—we dare you.

7. How can you get a song writer away from the piano at a party without blasting?

If one can answer seven of these questions, and have eaten the tops of four cereal boxes, they should write to Groucho for a Society Man Button.

North West Mounted Police

(Paramount)

Historical Melodrama

This is Cecil B. DeMille's 64th production and his first entirely in Technicolor, a medium he has declared he will employ henceforth without exception. He has stocked it with players whose names are of marquee significance and filmed it in terms of action, with the red coats of the mounties running like a colour theme through sequences thronged with police, Indians and half-breeds, photographed against backgrounds as brilliant as their costuming, to achieve something in the nature of a symphony of pigmentation which is not less a DeMille melodrama but more so, for this circumstance.

The picture is a dramatization of the Riel Rebellion of 1885 which threatened to destroy Canada and was put down by fifty North West Mounted Police in a manner celebrated by Canadians in song and story.

Deeds of heroism depicted are from the record and their enactment gives substance to the concepts of the North West Mounted Police prevalent in this country. There is, however, no stressing of historical accuracy for its own sake, and no thumping of the hands-across-the-border implicit in the story, the narrative being handled, instead, as a tale of adventure arising out of events and situations affecting the lives of the characters represented.

Although Gary Cooper is given first billing and plays a Texas ranger, the only American in the story, script and direction are such as to distribute emphasis evenly among the principals. Preston Foster and Robert Preston have the two principal police roles, Akim Tamiroff and Lynne Overman as half-breeds and scout supply both humour and pathos, George Bancroft the major villainy. Madeleine Carroll is pleasant to the eye as the good girl beloved by two heroes, a competition terminating contrary to expectation, and Paulette Goddard's portrayal of the half-breed whose passion destroys its object, eclipses her previous endeavours.

The production combines the opulence of the early DeMille spectacles with the action toward which he has tended in recent years although exteriors predominate, he has kept them peopled with crowds engaged in tense activities. These include a battle in ambush with guns blazing and blood flowing copiously, a burning of a fort to cover escape of survivors and, as the climax of the story, an advance of seven mounties upon a tribe of Indians preparing to wipe out the white men of the province and restore the half-breeds to government.

Hullabaloo

Comedy Plus Music

Dipping into his long experience as practicing exhibitor and radio executive for ways and means of entertainment learned the hard way, Louis K. Sidney has made of this, his first motion picture production, a film to make the rafters ring and the customers happy beyond any expectation based on perusal of title or billing. It is, on the basis of preview before an unprepared audience, what the trade knows as "a sleeper," and of the sort that grows as it goes, thriving on customer-to-customer comment.

Brought forth without fanfare and unsaddled with promises, the picture is a comedy dealing with affairs of that backstage of radio in which the producer has been occupied of recent years and knows as few come to. Logic and plausibility are not in it, but humor and song, performance, novelty and talent cram its footage to capacity. A small crowd which saw it in a large theatre in a small town not recently utilized for preview purposes guffawed and chortled again and again and applauded both during and after. A beaming Louis B. Mayer tarried in the foyer as the audience filed out and heard what the merry villagers were saying.

Central figure of the story, based on an idea credited to Bradford Ropes and Val Burton, is an improvident actor played by Frank Morgan with a proficiency he's never surpassed. But it is the voice of Clark Gable, of Spencer Tracy, Mickey Rooney, Hedy Lemarr, Claudette Colbert and many another that comes from the Morgan throat (by skillful use of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer sound tracks from such films as "Boom Town," as well as specially recorded wordage for the picture) in the course of the actor's mad experiences in trying, successfully at last, to achieve a radio career in the interests of three ex-wives, his children, creditors, associates and friends. It's a production device out of common and uncommonly productive of amusement.

Virginia Grey and Dan Dailey, Jr., carry the romantic responsibilities, all hands sharing the comedy assignment. Set into the proceedings to perform two numbers each, the four of them stopping the show, as many times, are Virginia O'Brien, dead-pan swinger of ballads whose like has not been seen in any film, and Charles Holland, a negro with a voice like Martinelli's and complete mastery of same. These are specialties to shout about in a picture that is itself a specialty among attractions.

Direction by Edwin L. Marin and the screenplay by Nat Perrin enriched the rating of both men.

The story, derived from characters created by Norman Reilly Raines in a Saturday Evening Post series of stories remembered by many, is about a woman seasoned by sea and strife who, as senior captain of a tugboat company, bests her male competitors at the helm and in business transactions, spreading humor and consternation the while. Alan Hale is the rival captain, Jane Wyman and Ronald Reagan the young people whose romance is a factor in the story.

Sailors Three

(Ealing Studios—A.B.F.D.)

Nautical Extravaganza

Tommy ("You Lucky People") Trinder is one of the more recent and more popular radio comedians, a lean and lively Cockney lad with an essentially native style. This is not his first film, but it is probably his most ambitious one. That being so, it is a matter for criticism that he has been given such sterling comedy support, for at least one of the "Three," Claude Hulbert, very nearly steals the picture, certainly makes mountains of comedy out of a molehill of material. The comedian's name will, of course, pull them in on this side of the Atlantic, where its deliberate Cockney refusal to treat Hitler and his'n with respect strikes the appropriate wartime note. There would not appear to be any particular appeal outside Great Britain.

The "Sailors Three" are a happy-go-lucky trio who get stewed on shore leave, and mistakenly board a German pocket battleship. Aboard this the fun revolves, with the ultimate capture of the ship and its transference to Portsmouth Dockyard the piece de comedy resistance. Best of the sequences are Claude Hulbert's crescendo of alcoholic tragedy at a bar to which he had gone in search of a glass of milk, the endeavors of the trio to convince the German Commander that they are friendly neutrals, and the collapse of the plot with the revelations of the Union Jack tattoed on Claude's back. The final moments—the free fight and capture—are more generous than witty, but all in all the picture will please the popular audiences here.

A very sparse audience saw the trade screening in London, and while displaying uneasiness at the overlong passages did not disdain to laugh when the occasion called for it. —Aubrey Flanagan.

Human Interest

Jackie Moran and Marcia Mae Jones are the principals in this Scott Dunlap production. An original story by Gerald Breitigam, with screen play by Dorothy Reid, it concerns the struggles and adventures of two children and their parents, the boy's mother being depicted by Leatrice Joy and the girl's father by Charles Brown.

Returning to the small town in which her father lives, after having lived in California with her divorced mother, young Miss Jones finds her doctor father no nearer financial security than he had ever been, and discovers that he loves the widow portrayed by Miss Joy. She is instrumental in bringing the two together. Meanwhile, Jackie Moran, as "Chris," has had to leave school in order to help his mother financially, but has not lost his desire to be a doctor. The boy's grandfather attempts to bring him away from his mother, by offering him the money for a medical education, but the effort fails.

March of Time, No. 3, Vol. 7

(RKO Radio)

Mexico-Good Neighbor's Dilemma

For its most recent screen study of the world as it is today, the ever alert and active camera analysis for the March of Time forces has been shifted in its focus from the European scene to a range closer home. The district under sharp scrutiny is the picturesque and exciting land south of the United States border and the immediate problem under consideration and as indicated in the issue's subtitle is the accommodation of Mexico to the plans of western hemisphere defense. For some time and especially under the Cardenas regime, the Mexican governmental policy had been antagonistic to United States business enterprise in that country. Foreign industries and holdings were either appropriated or taxed heavily. Mexico's harboring of the co-founder of the Russian revolution, Leon Trotsky, its economic and political flirtations with Communist and Fascist forces and its own radical espousal of Leftist practices had given American conservative, capitalistic and democratic circles anxious moments. Now, belatedly, Mexico is softening her revolutionary programs and cooperating with her American neighbor across the border in solidifying western hemisphere friendships and interdependence. To illustrate the Mexican status, before and after the shifting of allegiances, the March of Time screen reporters have assembled some excellent and informative sequences depicting the governmental and economic aspects of that land. Scenes of the recent presidential election are vividly reproduced and sharply indicate the mercurial nature of the dilemma-problem. In addition to shots of government and labor union activity, there is supplied a splendid array of pictorially powerful shots of Mexican people and countryside.—Running time, 19 minutes.

Sailors Without Uniforms

(British Council)

All four of these shorts are sponsored by the British Council in pursuance of its work of Cultural propaganda overseas. Considered neither as propaganda nor as normal entertainment can they be hailed as a success. The newsreel shown, made up of selections from the four British issues is peculiarly uninteresting, repetitive—it has four sequences showing the King visiting the air raid damage—and hardly as inspiring or expository of the British case and war effort as any single one of the commercial newsreels. The second, for all its arty camera-work and trick editing, would seem principally to suggest that Britain's answer to Hitler consists in British folk songs sung by war workers. The third diagrammatically traces the acquisition and growth of the British Empire without reference to the methods or ethics of the process. The last is just a plain record of the wartime work of British fishermen. An English critic finds the four films singularly uninspiring and unpersuasive. American audiences will probably find them less so than many of their own newspapers.—A. F.

White Battle Front
Welfare of the Workers
Village School

(Ministry of Information)

These three documentary instructionals were offered by the British Ministry of Information as specimens of the films to be circulated on their non-theatrical scheme. The first, a Basil Wright production for the Army Medical Service, considers the medical work done for the modern soldier, illustrates the service contributed by the Army surgeon, and the anti-typhus squad. The second, produced by Jack Holmes of the GPO Unit, with Ministry of Labour collaboration, and directed by Humphrey Jennings, is not ineffective in showing how the Ministry paternally cares for transferred war workers, billets them, cures their colds, and gives them star concerts during work hours, but it is of necessity a sectional study. Best of all is the third, which with Alexander Shaw and J. Eldridge collaborating in production and direction, becomes a gracious and sympathetic lyric in praise of the village teacher, who to-day guards the minds as well as the bodies of the British child, facing the future. It is a human little film which has the breath of life in it, with a camera and a sound track which not only recaptured the sweet inconsequentiality of youth, but also the unselfish labour of those who mould it into citizenship. All the films are of high technical quality but "Village School" stands out.—A. F.

"LONDON CAN TAKE IT"

Warner Brothers, in New York, on Monday, received via Clipper from London, copies of a British Ministry of War Information nine-minute film entitled "London Can Take It," picturing the British Capital under a Nazi night air raid. Warners will distribute it in the U. S. as a special, and will turn over profits to British war aid.

The camera clock span follows the people of the city on the banks of the Thames from early evening hours through the long stretches of the night to the beginning of a new day.

The arrival of the bombing "Jerries" of the enemy invader is heralded and the ordeal that has been in practice for over five weeks adds another night to the calendar of martial London night life. Another sequence reports on the defense tactics, the wailing warning of siren alarms, the stabbing, pointing fingers of the searchlights, and the din of falling bombs.

The sound track for this section is eloquent in its depiction of the business being portrayed and is recording of actuality, not synthetic studio dubbing. Comes the morning and London crawls out of ruins of the wreckage and from the close but safe underground quarters to inspect and clear up the devastation.

Closeups show London citizens treking into shelters, asleep in cramped and uncomfortable quarters, and calmly and even jokingly adjusting themselves to the new regime. Contrasting with the sound and fury scenes are the sights of the silent, deserted streets of the city awaiting the air terror visitation. Quentin Reynolds, war correspondent for Collier's, speaks the commentary on the proceedings. American audiences, who have been reading daily newspaper accounts of the material screened, will find the stories of heroic London documented.

King for a Day
(Paramount)
"Gabby" Colored Cartoon Debut

"Gabby," that loquacious lilliputian who made such a big impression in the feature length "Gulliver's Travels," has now been granted by his parent-producer, Max Fleischer, individual recognition as a pen point personality picturesque enough for starring in a special short subject series. For his opening act, "Gabby" is portrayed as a talkative town postman who changes places with a local potentate who has advance information of a planned assassination. The stand-in king soon learns of the motive behind his majesty's democratic gesture and there ensues some anxious passing of the crown from ruler to subject and vice versa. A happy and hilarious surprise ending identifies the threat as a candid camera fiend intent on "shooting" the kingly features. "Gabby" is still the vociferous personality with apealing and amusing ways and chatter.—Running time, seven minutes.

My Pop, My Pop
(Paramount)
Popeye and His Pappy

A lesson in family diplomacy is detailed in this latest Popeye release. As illustrated, Popeye is busy building a bark and is joined by his nonagenarian sire who, claiming to be as sprightly as his son, insists on lending a hand in the boats' construction. The project is divided and Popeye handles his side of the bargain expertly and speedily. But Pappy's section is a sloppy, crazy quilt concoction. When the old man dozes off, his offspring rectifies the mess and, after calling daddy from his slumbers, Popeye pretends to be asleep. Pappy believes he has done his own end of the work perfectly and thus an old man's pride is saved and a devoted and generous offspring has done right by his pop. The father-son relation is amusingly, if not riotously, entertaining at times.—Running time, 10 minutes.

U.S. MOVES IN ON THREE FILM LABOR SITUATIONS

Office Employees at Republic, Universal and Loew's To Vote on Bargaining Proposal

Having been named by the National Labor Relations Board as bargaining agent for studio scenic artists, the Moving Picture Painters Local 644, in Hollywood, this week, presented to producers demands for a closed shop agreement, minimum wage scales and other conditions.

The proposed agreement seeks a retroactive 15 per cent wage increase from July, 1937, to August, 1939, with an added 15 per cent increase from August, 1939 to the present.

Three Elections Set

Walter Spreckels, regional director of the NLRB, has set November 23rd as the date for the balloting of office workers at Republic and Universal in connection with the collective bargaining proposal. On November 25th Loew's employees will vote. The vote was requested by the Screen Office Employes Guild which claims a majority of the office workers of all studios.

Charles Kramer, examiner for the NLRB, at New York, conducted a hearing, on Monday, upon the petition of the Screen Publicists Guild, requesting certificates as collective bargaining agent for the publicity and advertising department employees in the home office of all major companies. Discussions between a guild committee and majors' representatives were to begin Thursday, and extend through next Tuesday. The Guild claims 90 per cent membership of all publicity and advertising employees.

J. T. Cosman, president of Producers Laboratories, Inc., New York, announced, this week, that the recent strike of Laboratory Technicians Union, Local 702 resulted from a dispute over when vacations were to be taken and did not concern the question of whether vacations were to be provided by employers. Mr. Cosman said: "The union did not force us to give a week's vacation with pay, because we always agreed to the same, and we did give a week's vacation, namely, the week they were on strike."

Back Pay Provided

A recent contract negotiated between the St. Louis Amusement Company and the Motion Picture Operators' Union, Local 143, provides back pay of about $15,000 for 50 operators. The company operates a chain of neighborhood theatres.

Business Agent Robert Tomsen of the union declared that the back pay would take the place of a proposed wage increase on a graduated scale for the next three years. The old contract expired September 1st. The same wage scale will prevail.

Charles McConnell, for many years connected with Warners Earle, Philadelphia, has been nominated for president on the opposition ticket in the local musicians' union election, in December. The incumbent administration, headed by Frank P. Liuzzi, president, and A. Rex Riccardi, secretary, which waged an 11-month strike against the Warner Theatres in Philadelphia, is seeking re-election.

The Entertainment Managers Association of Philadelphia, at its annual election meeting, this week, voted to stand aloof from the AGVA, in the throes of reorganization, also the United Entertainers Association, independent actors' union, now being reorganized by Tom Kelly, ousted AGVA secretary.

Incumbent officers were re-elected as follows: Jack Maser, president; Roy Cross, vice president; James Smith, treasurer and Madeline Wood, secretary.

Jack Miller has been assigned to Philadelphia by the national board of the National Guild of Variety Artists, to assist Lee Travers, who succeeded Mr. Kelly as local secretary of the union, to heal the breach resulting from the recent strife.

New contracts with circuits and independents in the New Haven district, were discussed by members of Local 273, Operators Union, at Trades Council Hall, New Haven, with Nelson Frazier, presiding, last weekend.

The George Namm Circuit has signed a contract for seven theatres in and near Eureka, California, with IATSE. The circuit is also expected to sign up for the balance of the chain, covering some 36 houses in all.

Film companies are expected to be notified next week by the Screen Readers Guild, composed of inside and outside readers, that they want to open negotiations for a contract. The Guild was to have held a meeting last Friday, September 18th, to set minimum wage standards. The guild claims that 42 out of 55 readers in New York are members.

Thomas Murtha, executive secretary of Local 4, Brooklyn stagehands' union, was re-elected last week to serve another year as president of the Central Trades and Labor Council of Greater New York. He was unopposed.

Eliminate Triples Rodgers Demands

Triple feature programs were condemned by William F. Rodgers, general sales manager of MGM, at a luncheon Thursday, October 17th, in the Blackstone Hotel, Chicago, home of the triple feature problem. Approximately 200 exhibitors and exchange men heard Mr. Rodgers ask that leaders of the film industry eliminate the practice. Mr. Rodgers also warned that rentals might increase because of lost foreign markets, unless showmen bring more money in per picture.

Among those present were J. E. Flynn, MGM district manager; Walter E. Banford, the company's branch manager; Eddie Rubin, Minneapolis; Nate Platt, Morris Leonard, Joseph Kaufman, Abe Platt, David Balaban, and William Hollander, of Balaban and Katz circuit; and Jack Kirsch, president of the Illinois Allied.

New F. & M. Policy

The Fanchon & Marco circuit, of St. Louis, has changed the policy at its Fox and Ambassador threatres. The latter is changing from single to double features, after having been used experimentally, on a reserved seat basis. The former is also switching to double features.

The RKO New York circuit's policy of showing the main feature on a double bill program at 9:30 P.M. has been extended to the Columbia, Strand, Park, and Marble Hill theatres, after having been tried at the Proctor's 86th Street.

Screen Indecency Showing Increase, Legion Head Says

by S. B. TUCKER
in Richmond

The number of objectionable motion pictures is on the increase and there is a tendency towards indecencies in the treatment of films, the Rev. John J. McClafferty, executive secretary of the Legion of Decency, said last Sunday, in voicing the findings of a round table on motion pictures which featured the afternoon session of the International Federation of Catholic Alumnae in convention at the Hotel John Marshall, Richmond, Va.

Speakers at the round table included Mrs. James Looram of Long Island, chairman of motion pictures, I.F.C.A.; Father McClafferty, Mrs. George R. Bradford, president of the Federation, and a reviewer for the committee, and Mrs. Marie Dalton, who also reviews for the Legion of Decency lists.

"Cause for Concern"

"Certain indications and inclinations have become apparent in the cinema which provide cause for concern and apprehension among those desirous of maintaining high standards of decency and morality in films," Father McClafferty said.

Other findings of the round table were: "There is a retrogession toward accepting immoral situations as permissible. The old practice of neglecting to portray evil as evil would seem to be clamoring for a return engagement.

"The number of pictures deemed suitable for general audience patronage has decreased.

"There is a tendency toward indecencies in the treatment of films."

The type of some of the literary material being adapted to or contemplated for motion picture production also aroused the apprehension of the department.

"Vigilance should be the order of the day, so that the motion picture industry's policy of self regulation may, by all high-minded citizens, be sustained in the proper discharge of a momentous responsibility so important for the moral well being and best interests, of souls, the family, youth and our beloved country," delegates were warned.

From Will Hays came a congratulatory telegram which praised the "devoted service of the motion picture department in improving the quality of audience demand for motion picture entertainment."

The motion picture committee's report showed that during the biennial, October 38 to 40, 1,068 feature pictures were reviewed. Of these 95 were foreign pictures—the board includes reviewers who speak nine languages—and 1,546 shorts subjects and newsreels. Only 17 were included in Class C, which means totally condemned.

The more than 4,000,000 men of the 16,000,000 draft registrants who will be called from their work to serve one year in the United States Army, will see many films, before their service ends. Films will be shown nightly, at every army post. Films, in fact, will be the chief entertainment, for the conscripts.

A spokesman for the U. S. Army's morale division has declared that army operators of film services at the army posts will observe clearance arrangements in favor of exhibitors in adjacent towns. Col. H. H. Pfiel is in charge of the division.

Industry Workers Register

Draft Registration Day, a week ago last Wednesday, brought an estimated 4,000 registrants from the industry in New York; in Hollywood studios, about 2,300. Milton Loysen, director of the division, added that soldiers not able to regain their positions after the end of service, may apply for unemployment compensation.

47 Ask FCC For FM Permits

A total of 47 applications have been filed with the Federal Communications Commission for FM (frequency modulation) broadcast stations according to the young industry's trade organization, FM Broadcasters, Inc. It was reported by Dick Dorrance, director, of FM Broadcasters, that the FCC would probably issue the first regular FM licenses this week. Commercial FM operations begin on January 1st.

Sales Drive Expected

Approximately 15 manufacturers have developed FM receivers and a sales drive is expected shortly. Meanwhile research continues on the FM network proposed by John Shepherd III, president of the Yankee Network. However, it was said that operation of such a network could not begin before late next summer at the earliest. WHN, Loew's, Inc., radio station in New York is interested in FM and would probably be a key station in the FM network.

Advertising agencies and national advertisers are reported to be interested in FM radio, believing that, with more radio stations, eventually the cost will be reduced and greater coverage can be obtained in any given area. It is also felt by some that FM radio's superior quality will attract more listeners.

If the FCC grants all 47 applications about $2,500,000 would be spent during the next year in constructing the stations alone. The 47 applicants would serve some 20 states and have a potential audience of 75,000,000, it was said.

On Monday and Tuesday the National Independent Broadcasters meet at the Waldorf-Astoria in New York City. James L. Fly, chairman of the FCC, told the delegates that foreign language stations have nothing to fear if their programs are designed to serve the public interest and said the Government planned no campaign to eliminate such stations. He also denied that the Government wished to take over radio as a defense measure, pointing out that the Government in these times wanted a large radio audience but if the industry was taken over there would be an excellent chance of losing the audience.

There was also discussion of the ASCAP-BMI fight, policies of advertising agencies, and program rates. In the evening those attending the convention were guests of BMI.

The independent broadcasters voted Tuesday a complete endorsement of the work of BMI and called on ASCAP to submit a contract which would ask payment on a performance basis only. The hope was expressed that motion picture companies would persuade ASCAP to accept a peace with radio music interests so that film music would not be banned after Jan. 1st.

Dramatists' Pact For Film Backing In Final Form

Sidney R. Fleischer, Dramatists' Guild film negotiator, this week, was preparing a final draft of the amendments offered by conferees to the proposed agreement of the Dramatists Guild, League of New York Theatres and film companies, by which the latter would return to the financing of Broadway plays. The Dramatists' Guild membership is expected to vote upon the amendments at its meeting November 12th.

Committees representing the three contracting parties were scheduled to hold a joint meeting, on Friday, this week, to ratify the changes that were incorporated in the final draft. If this committee approves the changes, the Dramatists Guild Council is expected to consider the amended pact at a special meeting next week.

If the Council also approves, the matter will be presented to the Guild membership for its vote, at the meeting next month.
of profits.

Arbitration Suggested

Conferees of the three groups believe they have worked out a satisfactory formula for meeting objections of the film companies in the event the latter did not obtain a producer satisfactory to them and wanted an employee to stage a film-backed play.

The matter of creating an Arbitration Committee, in which each of the three groups would be represented has been suggested. The proposed committee would be empowered to determine when the film companies had exhausted all possibility of obtaining an independent producer.

Other points now being ironed out are: (1) an arrangement whereby the producing sponsorship will be satisfactory to the author, backer and the League; (2) a closing formula for shows in New York and on the road; (3) procedure for transferring the star from Broadway to Hollywood.

Conferees representing the three groups were orginally hopeful of amicably settling all the disputed points by November 1st. Meanwhile, several objections to the proposed amendments have been raised, which would delay completion of the negotiations. Notwithstanding, those in close touch with the negotiations anticipate that all disputed points will be settled shortly and that the pact will become effective some time next month.

Financing Not Necessary

It was pointed out this week that film company financing would hardly stimulate production of musical comedies or dramas, in view of the fact that ample funds exist for this type of production. Film company backing, however, can be expected to stimulate production of extravaganzas, whose staging requires a large outlay of money.

In other circles, it was felt that the proposed film financing would not vitally affect the number of productions on Broadway because a dearth of suitable scripts, rather than shortage of money has curtailed the number of productions, heretofore.

Meanwhile, Paramount, Warners and RKO have joined MGM in beginning consideration of play material suitable for backing, when the pact becomes effective.

The proposed amendment would place a limit of $200,000 upon the amount to be paid to the author and producer out of the gross of a film-backed play. Any further payment would be out of profits.

Air Interest

With the nation's eyes focused upward on planes these days, Hollywood is finding it natural to step up its own production of pictures dealing with planes and pilots.

Just returned from location at San Antonio is Paramount's "I Wanted Wings" company, directed by Mitchell Leisen, whose latest is "Arise, My Love," based on the Army Air Corps training program at Randolph, Kelly, Brooks and other fields, the picture carries principals Ray Milland, William Holden and Wayne Morris through training period into a depiction of actual Air Corps duty.

Finished this week was MGM's "Flight Command," based on the Navy Training program. Starring Robert Taylor, the picture was shot at San Diego and Pensacola as well as at the studio.

Universal recently completed its "Give Us Wings," based on crop dusting by aviation methods. Featuring both the Dead End Kids and the Little Tough Guys, it is intended to show the interest of American youth in flying.

"Men Against the Sky," released by RKO last month, deals also with the subject of aviation, while Walter Wanger's "Foreign Correspondent," has evoked much audience comment on its "flying boat" scene.

Additionally, stories dealing with the Civil Aeronautics Authority civilian air training program, with air line operation and the like are currently being considered for filming in the near future.

Completing Shorts Program

With the filming of two more subjects, set for next month, Warners short subject program for 1940-41 will be completed. The schedule consists of 45 subjects made under the production supervision of Gordon Hollingshead, exclusive of the cartoons made for Warners by Leon Schlesinger.

With many of the short subjects production staff having been transferred to work on features, Norman Moray, short subjects sales manager, will come out to the studio next month to prepare preliminary plans for next season's product.

POLITICS AND PICTURES

Hollywood, this week, came closer than ever to the forthcoming election's sound and fury.

First came a demand on the part of the "We, the People" committee, headed by Robert Montgomery and representing Willkie sentiment in the area, for the release of the second Willkie "Information, Please" short. There was no response forthcoming from RKO's president, George Schaefer, who had already made his position clear in New York when faced with similar queries and questionings.

Then the "Hollywood for Roosevelt" committee, representing many a top name among production personnel, was vehement in its indignation. For the committee had been denied use of certain billboards in the area for its advertising message, the firm in question presumably not being wholeheartedly Rooseveltian in sentiment.

At week's end the score was still one to one.

Paramount Plans

With four films currently before the cameras, Paramount this week announced continuing activity on its autumn production calendar.

Now shooting are "I Wanted Wings," starring Ray Milland and directed by Mitchell Leisen; "Shepherd of the Hills," directed by Henry Hathaway, and filmed in Technicolor; "Reaching for the Sun," with Joel McCrea and Ellen Drew, directed by William Wellman, and "You're the One," with Bonnie Baker and Orrin Tucker and his band, directed by Ralph Murphy.

Set to start next week are "Lady Eve," latest Preston Sturges picture, with Barbara Stanwyck and Henry Fonda, and Harry Sherman's "Bullets and Bandits," starring William Boyd. Messrs. Sherman and Boyd signed a contract this week in which the latter agreed to star in the title role of the "Hopalong Cassidy" films as long as the series lives at the box office. Finished this week was "Doomed Caravan," 32nd picture in the group.

Set to start November 4th are "New York Town," with Mary Martin and Fred MacMurray, and "Road to Zanzibar," latest in the Bing Crosby-Dorothy Lamour-Bob Hope group.

"Skylark" will go before cameras on November 18th, starring Claudette Colbert and Ray Milland, and directed by Mark Sandrich. Also on the stages then will be "Las Vagas Nights," with Allan Jones, Bert Wheeler and Tommy Dorsey and his orchestra. The following week "There's Always Juliet" will start, the film version of the stage play starring Madeleine Carroll.

With December will come Gregory Ratoff's "Ballerina," with Loretta Young in the starring role, and "Henry and Dizzy," latest in the "Henry Aldrich" comedies starring Jackie Cooper. Ted Reed directs.

His first picture to be released through United Artists, Mr. Lubitsch has set November 4th as the starting date.

CHARLES BOYER and MARGARET SULLAVAN will be co-starred in Universal's "Back Street."

MARTHA O'DRISCOLL has been signed to a Paramount contract.

KURT BERNHARDT is to direct "Adopted Daughter" at Warners.

RICHARD HALLIDAY, released by Paramount as story editor, has joined the Frank Vincent Agency.

ALLEN RIVKIN is writing the screen play of "Bad Men of Missouri" for Warners.

WILLIS GOLDBECK is writing the latest "Dr. Kildare" story for MGM.

DISTRIBUTORS PLAN WIDE USE OF RECORDINGS FOR FREE RADIO PLUGS

NAB Protests MGM Plan to Send Free Records to Stations; Universal and UA Also Using Discs

Three Motion Picture companies this week completed arrangements for the use of records for radio exploitation of new films. Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer signed a contract with the Columbia Recording Corporation, affiliate of the Columbia Broadcasting System, for 515 records to be made every two weeks in the corporation's West Coast plant. The MGM records will be sent to broadcast stations throughout the country gratis. The National Association of Broadcasters has already protested and told its members not to use the film records unless payment is received for the radio time used.

Universal has ordered 200 10-inch double promotion records to be used exploiting "A Little Bit of Heaven," released October 11th. United Artists also has started to use records for radio advertising. In this case the film company will sponsor the programs over 85 broadcasting stations. The first in the series was "Lowell Thomas Discusses 'The Thief of Bagdad'" and another has been made on "The Westerner."

The distributors will attempt to interest local exhibitor customers in making direct tieups with the music aircasts for their local exhibitions of the pictures involved.

Motion pictures to date have received free radio 'plugs' for new films on radio time of unestimated value, through tie-ins with commercial programs, through the appearances of their stars as "guests" on national air shows, and otherwise. The industry has spent comparatively little in actual cash for radio time, feeling that it paid for its air time through the talent and entertainment it contributes.

Broadcasters Attacked For Air Music "Boycott"

A protest against the proposed boycotting by radio broadcasters of all music controlled by ASCAP, which is scheduled to go into effect on January 1st, was unanimously voted this week at the annual regional meeting of the Louisiana Federation of Music Clubs held in New Orleans. This action was taken after Mrs. Grace W. Towne, chairman of the artists' presentation service of the national federation, spoke against the proposed boycott, asking her audience, "Since when has America reached the place where creative genius can be boycotted?" She termed the action "an enforcement of dictatorship methods by radio broadcasting companies."

"The life of music hangs in the balance if this boycott is allowed to go into effect," the resolution said. "It will mean that 300,000 copyrighted compositions will not be allowed to go on the air. It will prevent us from hearing the music of such men as Deems Taylor, Ethelbert Nevin and others who have helped to make American music."

On Thursday ASCAP sponsored a "Cavalcade of American Music" at the New York World's Fair, as part of the organization's twenty-fifth anniversary celebration. Gene Buck, ASCAP president, arranged with Harvey D. Gibson, head of the Fair, for two free concerts, one in the afternoon, and one in the evening, at which composers and authors sang songs famous during the past quarter of a century.

Symphonic works by members of the Society were played during the afternoon concert by the Rochester Philharmonic Symphony Orchestra. In the evening leading writers sang and played their own compositions accompanied by Johnny Green's orchestra.

Orchestras Seek to End ASCAP-BMI Air Deadlock

In an effort to break the deadlock between the broadcasting industry and the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers, a committee of orchestra leaders, met on Wednesday of last week in the office of Fred Waring, band leader, in New York, with a committee representing the National Association of Broadcasters.

Conferees at the round table discussion, besides Mr. Waring included: Meyer Davis, Ben Cutler, Johnny Green, Nat Shilkret and Eddy Duchin, representing the band leaders. Neville Miller, president; John Elmer, director, and Sidney Kaye, copyright counsel, represented the broadcasters.

The band leader's committee, appointed three weeks ago, pointed out to the broadcasters' group that they would be economically injured by the break between the two factions when their present agreement expires on January 1st, 1941. The broadcasters then presented their side of the controversy. From Mr. Waring's office came a published statement telling of the meeting, but a representative of the band leader declined to give details of what transpired or amplify the statement.

Gene Buck, president of ASCAP, recently placed himself on record with the band leaders' committee as agreeing to meet with the NAB to discuss a possible solution.

Wednesday's conference follows a request for the meeting, which the band leaders sent to Niles Trammell, NBC president; Edward Klauber, CBS executive vice president; A. J. McClosker, chairman of the Mutual Networks board, as well as Mr. Miller. The network executives, however, elected to have Mr. Miller and his committee represent them.

In accepting the invitation to the meeting, Mr. Miller said, "ASCAP has indicated, thus far, no willingness to negotiate on any basis that gives hope of a settlement," and that "ASCAP in the position it has taken toward the broadcasters, has acted as an aggressor against broadcasters and orchestra leaders alike." Mr. Miller added that until ASCAP is willing to negotiate, very little could be accomplished by conferences.

ASCAP's position, however, has been that the proposal it made to broadcasters last March was merely offered as a formula for a solution and was not its final offer.

A representative of Mr. Waring, has announced that further meetings between the band leaders and the broadcasters would be held shortly.

Broadcast Music, Inc. released last week a catalogue of songs which will be available after January 1st, if the radio networks ban ASCAP music after that date. The first listing includes records of M. H. Cole, principally Western ballads and other American music. The list of numbers is available after January 1st to BMI licensed stations.

PARKING SIGNS TO BE SOLD BY CITY

Philadelphia exhibitors, long complaining about automobiles parked in front of their houses in spite of a no-parking ordinance, will now be given the opportunity to purchase "No Parking–Theatre Zone" signs, city authorities have indicated. With the use of the new signs—the cost is not determined as yet—there will be no annual fee. The cost for theatres using the old "No Loading Zone" signs is $10.

Earlier in the year city officials advised theatre owners that no money had been appropriated for signs to curb parking in theatre zones and that the theatres would have to assume the cost in order to enforce the rule.

Music Council Formed To Promote "Ethics"

The National Music Council has been formed and incorporated under the laws of New York State to be a clearing house for all groups interested in music on a national scale.

Purposes of the Council, according to the by-laws adopted this week, include: "to speak with one voice for music whenever an authoritative expression of opinion is desirable, to provide the member organizations with a forum for the discussion of problems affecting the national music life, to provide for the interchange of information between the various member organizations, to encourage the coordination of efforts of member organizations, to organize exploratory surveys or fact-finding commissions, when deemed necessary and to encourage the development of the art and foster the highest ethical standards in the musical professions and industries."

Although members of the Council include most of the principals in the broadcasters fight with the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers, the council has not yet touched that subject because it has not been proposed, according to Edwin Hughes, president. Members include ASCAP, Columbia Broadcasting System, Music Publishers Protective Association, National Association of Broadcasters, National Broadcasting Company, Song Writers Protective Association.

Mr. Hughes said that the subject of the Broadcast Music-ASCAP dispute must be proposed by one of the members for discussion by the Council before any action is taken.

Vyvyan Donner On Tour

Vyvyan Donner, fashion editor for the Twentieth Century-Fox Movietone News, last week concluded the first phase of a personal appearance tour that took her to Duluth and St. Paul, Minn., and Louisville, Ky., on the subject, "Dramatizing Fashions in the Newsreel for 40,000,000 people." She plans to continue the tour later with Detroit as the first stop.

BLAZING SIX SHOOTERS: Charles Starrett, Iris Meredith, Sons of the Pioneers—O. K. for this town. Running time, 61 minutes. Played September 27-28.—Ray Peacock, Onalaska Theatre, Onalaska, Wash. Loggers and mill workers patronage.

BLONDIE HAS SERVANT TROUBLE: Penny Singleton, Arthur Lake, Larry Simms—The poorest of the Blondie series. Quite a few kicks. Running time, 70 minutes. Played September 29-30.—Joe Schindele, Avalon Theatre, Granite Falls, Minn. Small town patronage.

FIVE LITTLE PEPPERS AT HOME: Edith Fellows, Dorothy Peterson—Very good little picture. Running time, 65 minutes. Palyed September 27-28.—Ray Peacock, Onalaska Theatre, Onalaska, Wash. Loggers and mill workers patronage.

GIRLS OF THE ROAD: Ann Dvorak, Helen Mack, Lola Lane—A good show, somewhat far-fetched. Extra business on Bank Night. Running time, 60 minutes. Played October 1-3.—Joe Schindele, Avalon Theatre, Granite Falls, Minn. Small town patronage.

LADY AND THE MOB, THE: Fay Bainter, Ida Lupino, Lee Bowman—One of those gangster and racketeer pictures which we could not show here.—Ernest Henley, Prison Theatre, Florida State Prison, Raiford, Fla. Prison patronage.

LADY IN QUESTION, THE: Brian Aherne, Rita Hayworth—Definitely not for small towns. Poor Sunday and Monday business. Running time, 81 minutes. Played September 22-23.—Joe Schindele, Avalon Theatre, Granite Falls, Minn. Small town patronage.

MUSIC IN MY HEART: Tony Martin, Rita Hayworth, Edith Fellows, Alan Mowbray—Doubled with "Women in War" and held up its end nicely. Played October 14-15.—C. E. Fismer, Jr., Lyric Theatre, Hamilton, Ohio. Family patronage.

First National

ALL THIS AND HEAVEN, TOO: Bette Davis, Charles Boyer, Jeffrey Lynn, Virginia Weidler, Barbara O'Neil—Some patrons seemed to like it but it's not just the type for this location. What they want here is something to make them laugh, especially now during this war scare. Running time, 143 minutes. Played September 29-30.—E. I. Hawkins, Hawkins Theatre, Newellton, La. Small town and rural patronage.

THREE CHEERS FOR THE IRISH: Thomas Mitchell, Priscilla Lane, Dennis Morgan, Alan Hale—I found this thoroughly enjoyable. It reminds one of the "Cohens and the Kellys" at their best. Only this was the feud carried on between the Scots and the Irish. Our patrons enjoyed this immensely and business on this was also better than average.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

TORRID ZONE: James Cagney, Ann Sheridan, Pat O'Brien, Andy Devine, Helen Vinson—Any picture with these stars will click for me. This is a natural. When the women get together, there's a dig in every line. Several good laughs were lost in the picture be. cause they didn't hear the joke, still laughing over the last one. The wise cracks come thick and fast. The customers like to be entertained more than educated. Running time, 87 minutes. Played October 6-7.—Felix H. Tisdale, Ga-Ana Theatre, Georgiana, Ga. Small town patronage.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer

BOOM TOWN: Clark Gabel, Spencer Tracy, Claudette Colbert, Hedy Lamarr, Frank Morgan—It is just a glorified saga of the oil fields with Metro two top stars in it. The national ballyhoo will put the picture over and it is okay where we had it on the week-end. Outside of the cast, we have had just as good at flat prices. This is not detracting from the picture in any way. It is good. So was business. But is still no better than some that we have run that cost less.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

BOOM TOWN: Clark Gable, Spencer Tracy, Claudette Colbert, Hedy Lamarr, Frank Morgan—We played this picture on the pre-release, advance price arrangement to a satisfactory business. Could we have played it at our regular admission, we could have packed the house for a week. "Boom Town" is everything the producers say it is, and ideal entertainment for any town, large or small. Everyone was so pleased with the picture they forgot about the 50c admission, and it was certainly a pleasure to hear so much favorable comment. It has plenty of star power, and plenty of action and business should "boom" in any town where it is played. Running time, 120 minutes. Played September 29-30.—Mrs. W. A. Wight, Rex Theatre, Konawa, Okla. Small town and rural patronage.

DR. KILDARE'S STRANGE CASE: Lew Ayres, Lionel Barrymore, Laraine Day—The poorest business of any of the series. Prior to this we had believed these pictures were popular with our people but they stayed at home this time. Running time, 77 minutes. Palyed September 15-16.—A. C. Edwards, Winema Theatre, Scotia, Calif. Small mill town patronage.

EDISON, THE MAN: Spencer Tracy, Rita Johnson, Gene Lockhart, Charles Coburn—A box office disappointment. Biographies no good here. The business we did get due more to star's personality than any thing else about the picture. Running time, 107 minutes. Played September 1-2.—A. C. Edwards, Winema Theatre, Scotia, Calif. Small mill town patronage.

EDISON, THE MAN: Spencer Tracy, Rita Johnson, Gene Lockhart, Charles Coburn—If I were asked to name some of the greatest pictures I have ever seen during the nearly 30 years as an exhibitor I would name this one but then the life and accomplishments of Edison were so thrilling and dramatic that the production could hardly help but make an interesting picture of it. It was not the smash hit at the box office that it should have been but a that it drew a little above average.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

FLORIAN: Robert Young, Helen Gilbert—Played on Bank Night to good business. The horse was really wonderful. The acting good and the customers were proud to see a picture of this class on Bank Night. Played September 3.—Felix H. Tisdale, Ga-Ana Theatre, Georgiana, Aal. Small town patronage.

FLORIAN: Robert Young, Helen Gilbert—Now, here is a picture. The performing horses are simply a delight to see and alone are worth the admission price. On top of that the picture spells high quality every inch of the way but business on this was just a fair average.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

FORTY LITTLE MOTHERS: Eddie Cantor, Rita Johnson, Bonita Granville, Judith Anderson—Unfortunately for us, Eddie's name contains no more box office potency. The picture was only fair and likewise the attendance. Running time, 90 minutes. Played September 29-30.—A. C. Edwards, Winema Theatre, Scotia, Calif. Small mill town patronage.

GOLDEN FLEECING: Lew Ayres, Rita Johnson, Lloyd Nolan—A good gangster picture without the usual killings. Good for Bank Night. Running time, 68 minutes. Played September 24-26.—Joe Schindele, Granite Falls, Granite Falls, Minn. Small town patronage.

HAUNTED HONEYMOON: Robert Montgomery, Constance Cummings—This picture was made in England and Robert Montgomery is the only known actor in the cast. I got by with it on Family Night. Running time, 82 minutes. Played October 8.—E. M. Freiburger, Paramount Theatre, Dewey, Okla. Small town patronage.

JUDGE HARDY AND SON: Mickey Rooney, Lewis Stone, Cecilia Parker, Fay Holden—Played this feature late but my patrons really enjoyed it. The first of the series that I have played. Can recommend this as first class entertainment. Running time, 90 minutes. Played October 10.—A. L. Dove, Bengough Theatre, Bengough, Saskatchewan, Canada. Rural and small town patronage.

MORTAL STORM, THE: James Stewart, Margaret Sullavan, Robert Young, Frank Morgan, Irene Rich, Bonita Granville—If you can get them in to see this one, they will like it. I didn't have many that had not read the book. Another war picture that did not show any mercy for Naziism. Every American should see this picture. Running time, 99 minutes. Played September 11-12.—Felix H. Tisdale, Ga-Ana Theatre, Georgiana, Ala. Small town patronage.

NEW MOON: Jeanette MacDonald, Nelson Eddy, Mary Boland—The poorest Sunday-Monday business of 1940. The kids look at the costumes on our paper, go home and tell their parents just another "old fashioned show" and we have a house full of empty seats. Running time, 104 minutes. Played October 6-7.—A. C. Edwards, Winema Theatre, Scotia, Calif. Small mill town patronage.

NEW MOON: Jeanette MacDonald, Nelson Eddy, Bary Boland—If your town is not as big as the picture you had better leave it alone. My customers don't go for operettas. Someway they could tell this without seeing the picture. The first day business was awful and the second day the force and a walk-in or two saw it. It died. Played September 25-26.—Felix H. Tisdale. Ga-Ana Theatre, Georgiana, Ala. Small town patronage.

NORTHWEST PASSAGE: Spencer Tracy, Robert Young, Walter Brennan—A very good picture, portrayed with good historical background. Commendable for any audience, regardless of sex or kind of patronage. Running time, 126 minutes. Played August 24-25.—Ernest Henley, Prison Theatre, Florida State Prison, Raiford, Fla. Prison patronage.

PRIDE AND PREJUDICE: Greer Garson, Laurence Olivier, Mary Boland, Maureen O'Sullivan, Edna May Oliver—This picture has a charm all its own with a noteworthy cast, a good story and a few amusing situtions, but it is definitely not a small town picture. The picture is much too long, due to the fact there is nothing but dialogue to hold it up. The part played by Mary Boland is too over-done and monotonous. Only the more highbrow patrons will enjoy this. The majority of small town patrons will think it a waste of time. Running time, 118 minutes. Played September 22-24.—Mrs. W. A. Wight, Rex Theatre, Konawa, Kkla. Small town and rural patronage.

SPORTING BLOOD: Robert Young, Maureen O'Sullivan, Lewis Stone, William Gargan—Excellent entertainment, but for some reason no pull at the box office, probably too close date after "Maryland." Not a big picture, but it held attention throughout and patrons thought enough of it to stop and tell us they enjoyed it. Running time, 80 minutes. Played September 18-19.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

SUSAN AND GOD: Joan Crawford, Fredric March, Rita Quigely, Rita Hayworth, Ruth Hussey, Bruce Cabot, John Carroll, Rose Hobart—Another box office flop. Both stars washed up. Theme of no entertainment value to our people as they were not interested in the type of picture or the players. Running time, 117 minutes. Played September 8-9.—A. C. Edwards, Winema Theatre, Scotia, Calif. Small mill town patronage.

SUSAN AND GOD: Joan Crawford, Fredric March, Rita Quigley, Ruth Husey, Rita Hayworth, Bruce Cabot, John Carroll, Rose Hobart—I still don't quite understand this one and the customers either. They didn't know whether they liked it or not. Some comedy because it was so silly at times. The name is quite confusing to most people. Running time, 115 minutes. Played September 15-16.—Felix H. Tisdale, Ga-Ana Theatre, Georgiana, Ala. Small town patronage.

WATERLOO BRIDGE: Robert Taylor, Vivien Leigh—A war picture and a very good one at that. Leigh still has strength left after "GWTW." Good business and deserves the best play dates. This couple will stand another good story. Let us have it. Running time, 103 minutes. Played September 4-5. —Felix H. Tisdale, Ga-Ana Theatre, Georgiana, Ala. Small town patronage.

Monogram

ON THE SPOT: Frankie Darro, Mary Kornman—Good. Fits in nicely on a double bill that needs comedy. Frankie getting popular with the kids. Running time, 61 minutes. Played October 9-10.—R. Navari, Liberty Theatre, Verona, Pa. Neighborhood patronage.

Paramount

BUCK BENNY RIDES AGAIN: Jack Benny, Ellen Drew, Eddie "Rochester" Anderson, Andy Devine—Right down our alley. This is the type that we can use and apparently the type that the rank and file of the people can find reilef from the seamier side of life. Running time, 81 minutes. Played September 22-23.—A. C. Edwards, Winema Theatre, Scotia, Calif. Small mill town patronage.

BUCK BENNY RIDES AGAIN: Jack Benny, Ellen Drew, Eddie "Rochester" Anderson, Andy Devine—"Buck Benny" drew a fair crowd but most customers were disappointed as to the acting of Jack Benny. I think the title was the drawing card. My belief is that Benny should stay on radio. Running time, 85 minutes. Played September 22-23.—Harry Shaw, Dillard Theatre, Wardell, Mo. Rural patronage.

BUCK BENNY RIDES AGAIN: Jack Benny, Ellen Drew, Eddie "Rochester" Anderson, Andy Devine—Did not gross quite as much as "Road to Singapore" but business about 20 per cent above average and it was well liked. Played September 22-24.—E. K. Menagh, Star Theatre, Fort Lupton, Colo. Factory and mining patronage.

GHOST BREAKERS, THE: Bob Hope, Paulette Goddard—Fine drawing power when doubled with "Turnabout." Although the story is nothing much, Bob Hope's gags get plenty of laughs all the way through the film. Those who had seen it certainly recommended it to their friends. A very good crowd on a bad night. I advertised an all-laugh program and plan to do the same as often as possible. Plenty of compliments on the whole show. Running time, 85 minutes. Played October 11.—W. Varick Nevins, IIII, Alfred Co-Op Theatre, Alfred, N. Y. Small college town and rural patronage.

GHOST BREAKERS, THE: Bob Hope, Paulette Goddard—Good business and a good time was had by all. Not a super colossal production, but it's swell entertainment all the way, just what patrons are seeking these troubled days. Running time, 82 minutes. Played September 22-24.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

I WANT A DIVORCE: Dick Powell, Joan Blondell—Good picture but no good at box office in small town. Played October 13-15.—N. E. Frank, Wayland Theatre, Wayland, Mich. Small town patronage.

$1,000 A TOUCHDOWN: Joe E. Brown, Martha Raye—A very good program. I played this on a Pal Night and could not seat the people that wanted to see this. Running time, 73 minutes. Played September 20.—Harry Shaw, Dillard Theatre, Wardell, Mo. Rural patronage.

RANGERS OF FORTUNE: Fred MacMurray, Patricia Morison, Albert Dekker, Betty Brewer—This baby isn't an "A" picture, Paarmount, that's what they allocated it to me as. This one missed the boat somewhere along the line and just simply failed to come in. Some simple comedy gave it is only merit. Business poor after a fair start on week-end. Don't waste a good date on it. Running time, 80 minutes.—A. E. Eliasen, Rialto Theatre, Paynesville, Minn. Rural and small town patronage.

RHYTHM ON THE RIVER: Bing Crosby, Mary Martin, Basil Rathbone, Oscar Levant—This is a very good show and business was on a par. Running time, 95 minutes. Played October 9-10.—E. M. Freiburger, Paramount Thetaer, Dewey, Okla. Small town patronage.

ROAD TO SINGAPORE: Bing Crosby, Dorothy Lamour, Bob Hope—Indeed, one of the best variety shows we have had the joy of showing here. The music, songs and the acting was very good and enjoyed by all. Running time, 85 minutes. Played October 5-6.—Ernest Henley, Prison Theatre, Florida State Prison, Raiford, Fla. Prison patronage.

ROAD TO SINGAPORE: Bing Crosby, Dorothy Lamour, Bob Hope—Very well liked and business good. That's all any exhibitor can ask of a picture. Played September 8-10.—E. K. Menagh, Star Theatre, Fort Lupton, Colo. Factory and mining patronage.

SAFARI: Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., Madeleine Carroll, Lynne Overman—"Safari's" we're concerned—and our patrons, too—this could have remained in the exchange and never have been missed. The best thing in the whole picture was an excellent characterization by Lynne Overman. He was great in a part that could be labeled entertainment in an otherwise exceedingly dull picture. Business so-so; patron reaction same. Running time, 83 minutes. Played September 18-19.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

SAFARI: Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., Madeleine Carroll, Lynne Overman—For a title such as this, they expect quite a few jungle thrills but this turned out to be quite a mushy affair with Jr. and Madeleine posing all the way through. Why waste stars like Madeleine and the rest of the cast in such a picture is beyond me, especially when it means nothing at the box office, because we cannot fool them anymore with fancy titles and well established names. Running time, 83 minutes. Played October 6-8.—R. Navari, Liberty Theatre, Verona, Pa. Neighborhood patronage.

..TYPHOON: Dorothy Lamour, Robert Preston, Lynne Overman—A swell picture and a lovely gal made for us box office music—the right kind. We do not know or care what constitutes a good picture. They are god to us when our people come out and pay to see them as they did on this one. Running time, 71 minutes. Played October 2-3.—A. C. Edwards, Winema Theatre, Scotia, Calif. Small mill town patronage.

Republic

CAROLINA MOON: Gene Autry, Smiley Burnette, June Storey—Still head man at our box office. Nuf sed!—C. E. Fismer, Jr., Lyric Theatre, Hamilton, Ohio. Family patronage.

CARSON CITY KID: Roy Rogers, George "Gabby" Hayes, Bob Steele, Pauline Moore—Fair entertainment of the typical Rogers type. But this will be remembered for one of the biggest boners pulled in a long time. How it ever slipped by is a mystery, but dozens of our patrons caught it and spoke about it. Look for the tree sequence, where the cowboy ropes the Sheriff. Then tell us, where he got the rope. Must have had it cached there all the time. Running time, 58 minutes. Played October 4-5.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

COLORADO: Roy Rogers, George "Gabby" Hayes, Pauline Moore—Good enough western which pleased average business on Friday-Saturday. Running time, 57 minutes. Played October 11-12.—E. M. Freiburger, Paramount Theatre, Dewey, Okla. Small town patronage.

DARK COMMOND: John Wayne, Claire Trevor, Walter Pidgeon—A double feature in itself for us. Attracted the regular western trade plus those who pick their spots. Extra good business for Monday-Tuesday. Played October 7-8.—C. E. Fismer, Jr., Lyric Theatre, Hamilton, Ohio. Family patronage.

GIRL FROM GOD'S COUNTRY: Jane Wyatt, Chester Morris, Charles Bickford—Booking difficulties forced us to play this on our best run, and while this type of picture is not too popular with our general patronage, especially on a Sunday showing, this held up very well and pleased moderately. Not a big production, and with care in direction, could have been far better entertainment. Running time, 75 minutes. Played October 6-8.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

GRAND OLE OPRY: Weaver Brothers and Elviry, Roy Acuff—Very good Weaver Bros. picture. Give us Roy Acuff in another one, Republic.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. General patronage.

GRAND OLE OPRY: Weaver Brothers and Elviry—A little slower moving than first two Weaver pictures but still full of socko hillbilly fun and music. Sunday business very good. Played October 13.—C. E. Fismer, Jr., Lyric Theatre, Hamilton, Ohio. Family patronage.

MELODY AND MOONLIGHT: Johnny Downs, Vera Vague, Mary Lee, Jerry Colonna, Jane Frazee—This is a very good song and dance show which will please any day in the week. It did not draw big because of lack of star power but those who came were more than pleased. This picture is as good as many we get from the majors. Running time, 71 minutes. Played October 13-14.—E. M. Freiburger, Paramount Theatre, Dewey, Okla. Small town patronage.

PIONEERS OF THE WEST: Three Mesquiteers (Robert Livingston, Raymond Hatton, Duncan Renaldo), Noah Beery, Beatrice Roberts—Average western that did just a shade above average business. Played October 11-12.—C. E. Fismer, Jr., Lyric Theatre, Hamilton, Ohio. Family patronage.

RIDE, TENDERFOOT, RIDE: Gene Autry, Smiley Burnette, June Story, Mary Lee, Joe Frisco—The first of the new releases and it is apparent that the budget on this series has been upped with gratifying results. This pulled to exceptional business and pleased mightily. Mary Lee is liked here and a bit with Joe Frisco selling Burnette many clothes got plenty of laughs. Altogether, the best liked of the Autry pictures we have presented. Running time, 65 minutes. Played September 27-28.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

SCATTERBRAIN: Judy Canova, Alan Mowbray, Ruth Donnelly—Extra good business on this one. Our folk like hillbilly pictures and this is a dandy. Played October 4-5.—Ray Peacock, Onalaska Theatre, Onalaska, Wash. Loggers and mill workers patronage.

SCATTERBRAIN: Judy Canova, Alan Mowbray, Ruth Donnelly—It packed 'em in. It made 'em howl and sent them out asking the day of Judy's next picture. Played October 9-10.—C. E. Fismer, Jr., Lyric Theatre, Hamilton, Ohio. Family patronage.

WOMEN IN WAR: Elsie Janis, Wendy Barrie, Patric Knowles—This report written after first day, which was above average for Monday. Good enough to get a little word of mouth advertising for tomorrow. Played October 14-15.—C. E. Fismer, Jr., Lyric Theatre, Hamilton, Ohio. Family patronage.

ABE LINCOLN IN ILLINOIS: Raymond Massey, Mary Howard, Ruth Gordon, Gene Lockhart—This

"SOUNDS LIKE SENSE, DOESN'T IT?"

There are two ways of using machinery. One is: hope to high heaven nothing goes wrong—and when it does—run a high blood pressure getting it fixed. The other way: let experts keep it in top-hole condition all of the time. That's what smart showmen do about projection room equipment. They protect themselves, all of the time, with an Altec sound service agreement and an Altec booth parts agreement. Sounds like sense, doesn't it? Change to Altec today!

deserves all the praise that has been showered upon it but the theatregoers seem to take the attitude: "Oh, we know all about Lincoln," and they stayed away. So business on this was below average.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

ABE LINCOLN IN ILLINOIS: Raymond Massey, Ruth Gordon, Mary Howard, Gene Lockhart—We were very fortunate in getting this picture as a follow-up to the preceding one and it was a masterpiece. We had "Captain Fury" with Brian Aherne, Vic McLaglen and other, but at the preview we knew that it was not fit for presenting to the inmates, so we ran the "Abe Lincoln" picture and everyone was well pleased and thoroughly satisfied. Running time, 110 minutes. Played September 28-29.—Ernest Henley, Prison Theatre, Florida State Prison, Raiford, Fla. Prison patronage.

DAY THE BOOKIES WEPT, THE: Joe Penner, Betty Grable—This was doubled with "Swiss Family Robinson." (See report.) "The Day the Bookies Wept" is a good farce comedy. Played October 6-7. —J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

DREAMING OUT LOUD: Lum and Abner, Frances Langford, Frank Craven, Bobs Watson—Played to best business of 1940 and second to "Jesse James" only for record. Only mistake was that I didn't book for extra days. Played September 29-30.—Bonita Theatre, Marion, Ala. Rural patronage.

FIFTH AVENUE GIRL: Ginger Rogers, Walter Connolly, James Ellison, Tim Holt—Excellent picture. One of Ginger's first real acting parts and she was at her best. Our crowd went for the entire picture in a big way. Running time, 83 minutes. Played August 31-September 1.—Ernest Henley, Prison Theatre, Florida State Prison, Raiford, Fla. Prison patronage.

FLYING DEUCES, THE: Laurel and Hardy, Jean Parker—Will please Laurel and Hardy fans but don't believe it's up to average for these comedians.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. General patronage.

IRENE: Anna Neagle, Ray Milland, Roland Young, May Robson, Billie Burke—The women seemed to comment very favorably but business slightly below average or Sunday showing. Played October 6-8.—E. K. Menagh, Star Theatre, Fort Lupton, Colo. Factory and mining patronage.

MARINES FLY HIGH: Richard Dix, Chester Morris, Lucille Ball—Just about the most absurd and impossible feats ever shown in a picture. An insult to average public intelligence. However, plenty of action. Played October 6-8.—E. K. Menagh, Star Theatre, Fort Lupton, Colo. Factory and mining patronage.

MILLIONAIRES IN PRISON: Lee Tracy, Linda Hayes—Another prison picture. O. K. for Bank Night. Lee Tracy good as usual. Running time, 64 minutes. Played September 17-19.—Joe Schindele, Avalon Theatre, Granite Falls, Minn. Small town patronage.

MY FAVORITE WIFE: Irene Dunne, Cary Grant, Randolph Scott, Gail Patrick—Just what the small and large town exhibitor ordered. Everyone satisfied, even myself. Running time, 88 minutes. Played October 6-7.—E. I. Hawkins, Hawkins Theatre, Newellton, La. Small town and rural patronage.

PINOCCHIO: Disney Feature Cartoon—While this does not compare with "Snow White," it drew a fair business for midweek and would suggest running it if you have not already done so, that is, if you can buy it right.—E. K. Menagh, Star Theatre, Fort Lupton, Colo. Factory and mining patronage.

SWISS FAMILY ROBINSON: Thomas Mitchell, Edna Best, Freddie Bartholomew, Terry Kilburn, Tim Holt—Played this October 6 and 7. The Sunday was unusually warm and sunny. On top of that there was the exciting World Series played in town. So, we were all prepared for a quiet Sunday but the kids came to the rescue. An unusually large amount of children came to see this. The adult trade was not up to par for reasons stated and to top it off it started to rain about 7 P. M. but, as a whole, the Sunday business was a fair average. This was doubled with "The Day the Bookies Wept," with Joe Penner. "Swiss Family Robinson" is a swell adventure drama. —J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

Twentieth Century-Fox

GIRL FROM AVENUE A: Jane Withers, Kent Taylor—Dated as Grandmother's bustle. Surely a swell little trouper like Jane deserves better vehicles than this one. Got by with the kids but, on the whole, the adult patrons were bored. The lower half of a double bill at best. Running time, 70 minutes. Played September 20-21.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

I WAS AN ADVENTURESS: Zorina, Richard Greene, Erich Von Stroheim, Peter Lorre—The second asinine attempt by two different companies to make something out of nothing. Running time, 81 minutes. Played September 18-19.—A. C. Edwards, Winema Theatre, Scotia, Calif. Small mill town patronage.

LILLIAN RUSSELL: Alice Faye, Henry Fonda, Don Ameche, Edward Arnold, Warren William, Leo Carrillo, Weber and Fields—Personally I think this is an interesting and well done picture, although too long in spots. The drawing power was not so good but those that came seemed to like it. I would say the acting is extra good and the settings are excellent. 'Nuf said. Running time, 127 minutes. Played October 10.—W. Varick Nevins, III, Alfred Co-Op Theatre, Alfred, N. Y. Small college town and rural patronage.

MAN I MARRIED, THE: Joan Bennett, Francis Lederer, Lloyd Nolan, Anna Sten—Personally, I thought this about the best of the recent crop of anti-Nazi pictures but believe the majority of my patrons thought different. Business poor, but it's been that way on all pictures of this type except on "Ramparts We Watch." Joan Bennett's performance very good; would say the best thing she has done for some time. Running time, 77 minute.—A. E. Eliasen, Rialto Theatre, Paynesville, Minn. Rural and small town patronage.

MAN I MARRIED, THE: Joan Bennett, Francis Lederer, Lloyd Nolan, Anna Sten—This carries a theme similar to "The Mortal Storm." It is well acted and produced but not worth the high allocation that was put in. Business poor. Running time, 77 minutes. Played October 11-12.—R. Navari, Liberty Theatre, Verona, Pa. Neighborhood patronage.

MAN I MARRIED: Joan Bennett, Francis Lederer, Lloyd Nolan, Anna Sten—Fairly good picture but no drawing power. Poor business. Played October 8-9. —N. E. Frank, Wayland Theatre, Wayland, Mich. Small town patronage.

MAN I MARRIED, THE: Francis Lederer, Joan Bennett, Lloyd Nolan, Anna Sten—Pulled and pleased and, from patron comments, this propaganda story hit home very effectively. Even so, it is time now to forget pictures that seek to spread propaganda, no matter how subtly presented. People come to theatres to be entertained, not educated. This is not a denial of the need for propaganda, but let it be confined to the air lanes, newspapers and periodicals and keep the screens the source of entertainment. Running time, 77 minutes. Played September 20-21.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

RETURN OF FRANK JAMES: Henry Fonda, Jackie Cooper, Gene Tierney—Splendid in every way. Good business. Played September 29-30.—N. E. Frank, Wayland Theatre, Wayland, Mich. Small town patronage.

RETURN OF FRANK JAMES: Henry Fonda, Gene Tierney, Jackie Cooper—Fine picture. Beautiful color. Some mighty fine acting in this.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. General patronage.

RETURN OF FRANK JAMES: Henry Fonda, Gene Tierney, Jackie Cooper—Business good; feature enjoyed. Not up to "Jesse James" in interest or in box office, but it will entertain and hold interest. Running time, 92 minutes.—A. E. Eliasen, Rialto Theatre, Paynesville, Minn. Rural and small town patronage.

RETURN OF FRANK JAMES: Henry Fonda, Gene Tierney, Jackie Cooper—To me and the action crowd, I don't think it up to "Jesse James," but will draw above average. Running time, 92 minutes. Played October 2-3.—R. A. Poage, Lyric Theatre, Brooksville, Ky. General patronage.

SAILOR'S LADY: Nancy Kelly, Jon Hall—Not bad but did no business here. Played September 29-30.—Ray Peacock, Onalaska Theatre, Onalaska, Wash. Loggers and mill workers patronage.

SWANEE RIVER: Don Ameche, Andrea Leeds, Al Jolson—Beautiful colored picture which was enjoyed by everyone and did record business. It was with the greatest pleasure on our sixth anniversary to receive so many fine compliments.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

YOUNG MR. LINCOLN: Henry Fonda, Alice Brady, Marjorie Weaver, Arleen Whelan—A great picture of a great man. This picture evoked a speech from the Superintendent. It was thoroughly enjoyed by everyone. Running time, 101 minutes. Played September 21-22.—Ernest Henley, Prison Theatre, Florida State Prison, Raiford, Fla. Prison patronage.

Read the reports from these and other exhibitors in the adjoining columns of the department.

United Artists

HURRICANE: (reissue) Jon Hall, Dorothy Lamour, Mary Astor, Raymond Massey—This is a play back that we set in place of one of the clucks we could not get rid of any other way, except to pick up a better picture to fill the date. And the reaction that we received in business justified our judgment. It may not be good policy to do this often. I have found that a few of the pictures that are outstanding two or three years ago will be accepted and satisfy better than a weak picture.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

ONE MILLION B. C.: Victor Mature, Carole Landis, Lon Chaney, Jr., John Hubbard—The acting had to be good because there was no dialogue. At least it was different. I was a little afraid to give it much advertising because I don't like to sell a flop. But I did give it my best. Enjoyed good business and they were satisfied. The photography was something to brag about. One like this all along won't hurt. Running time, 78 minutes. Played September 1-2.—Felix H. Tisdale, Ga-Ana Theatre, Georgiana, Ala. Small town patronage.

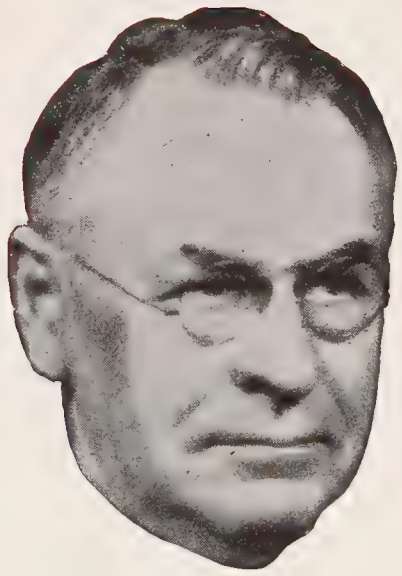
OUR TOWN: Frank Craven, Martha Scott, William Holden, Fay Bainter, Thomas Mitchell, Beulah Bondi, Guy Kibbee, Stuart Erwin—Up to now I've had a little confidence in Beverly Hill of "Liberty" magazine and who ever awards the Pulitzer Prize but from now on when they say anything is good, quote me disagreeing. Don't believe you could get advertising cost back even if you run it on a $500.00 "Bank Night." Running time, 90 minutes. Played October 13-14.—E. I. Hawkins, Hawkins Theatre, Newellton, La. Small town and rural patronage.

OUR TOWN: William Holden, Martha Scott, Frank Craven, Thomas Mitchell, Fay Bainter, Beulah Bondi, Guy Kibbee, Stuart Erwin—Unusual to say the least and how it will be received will depend on the type of patronage your situation caters to. Here, it was a dud from every angle. No business and patron reaction was decidedly on the negative side. Might have gotten by up to the point where the story attempted to detour in the realm of the hereafter. That proved too much for our payees and they walked out into the more bracing night air of man's sordid domain. Running time, 90 minutes. Played September 25-26.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

SOUTH OF PAGO PAGO: Jon Hall, Victor McLaglen, Frances Farmer, Olympe Bradna—Pulled far above average the first day, but slacked off for balance of run. Patrons' comments were varied, but, on the whole, picture was quite well liked. Frances Farmer terribly mis-cast, and the scenes of bloodshed among the natives seemed to be the points which proved the most unattractive to our patrons. Running time, 99 minutes. Played September 29-October 1.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

TURNABOUT: John Hubbard, Adolphe Menjou, Carole Landis, Mary Astor, William Gargan—Doubled this with "The Ghost Breakers" to a fine crowd on a bad night. The trailer on this is dandy and certainly creates plenty of interest. The audience here just ate up the whole thing with gales of laughter. They would have rolled in the aisles except for the fact that they were afraid they would miss something if they did. The two leads did an excellent job of imitating each other and the voices dubbed in perfectly. I recommend it if your audience has any sort of a sense of humor. It is certainly different and extremely clever. I can use more like this one. I would say that the old saying "turnabout is fair play" is an understatement. It should be " 'Turnabout' is a swell play." Running time, 85 minutes. Played October 11.—W. Varick Nevins, III, Alfred Co-Op Theatre, Alfred, N. Y. Small college town and rural patronage.

Universal



ALIAS THE DEACON: Bob Burns, Dennis O'Keefe, Mischa Auer—A very good comedy with Bob Burns at his best. Running time, 72 minutes. Played September 20-21.—Joe Schindele, Avalon Theatre, Granite Falls, Minn. Small town patronage.

ARGENTINE NIGHTS: Ritz Brothers, Andrew Sisters, Constance Moore, George Reeves—Played to capacity house and I sure will say hats off to Andrew Sisters. Played October 2-3.—Harry Shaw, Dillard Theatre, Wardell, Mo. Rural patronage.

BOYS FROM SYRACUSE: Joe Penner, Martha Raye, Allan Jones, Rosemary Lane, Irene Hervey, Charles Butterworth—Good business on this goofy comedy that had our audiences in stitches most of the time. The lines and situations command plenty of hearty laughter. The music, while not outstanding, was more than adequate and furnished pleasing interludes between the laughs. Running time, 73 minutes. Played October 4-5.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

CALL A MESSENGER: Billy Halop, Huntz Hall, Mary Carlisle, Larry Crabbe—Don't make the mistake I did by putting this as a second on a double bill. It is a very good picture and was well liked by everyone including myself. Played September 22-24.—E. K. Menagh, Star Theatre, Fort Lupton, Colo. Factory and mining patronage.

PRIVATE AFFAIRS: Nancy Kelly, Hugh Herbert, Roland Young, Robert Cummings—For some reason this just missed being a really splendid comedy. As it stands, it is better than passable fare, but means nothing much at the box office, nor will it set your patrons talking. Running time, 74 minutes. Played September 27-28.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

SECRETS OF A NURSE: Edmund Lowe, Helen Mack—This is strictly a racketeer, gangster and prison picture and was unfit for presentation here. The actors and action were exceptionally good and the story was well portrayed. Running time, 72 minutes.—Ernest Henley, Prison Theatre, Florida State Prison, Raiford, Fla. Prison patronage.

WHEN THE DALTONS RODE: Kay Francis, Randolph Scott, Brian Donlevy, Andy Devine, Broderick Crawford—A good picture to fairly good Sunday business. Running time, 80 minutes. Played September 22-23.—Joe Schindele, Avalon Theatre, Granite Falls, Minn. Small town patronage.

Warner Brothers

CITY FOR CONQUEST: James Cagney, Ann Sheridan, Frank Craven, Donald Crisp, Frank McHugh, Arthur Kennedy—Both Cagney and Sheridan were excellent and very clever in their respective parts and the supporting cast, consisting of Frank Craven, Donald Crisp, Frank McHugh, Arthur Kennedy and Director Anatole Litvak were all that could be asked for. The picture should please all classes and in both cities and towns. The picture should have shown Cagney's eyes restored and proper punishment meted out to Cagney's fistic opponent and his manager doctoring the gloves that Cagney wore in his last ring bout. Running time, 105 minutes. Played October 12-18.—William Noble, Criterion Theatre, Oklahoma City, Okla. General patronage.

DODGE CITY: Errol Flynn, Olivia de Havilland, Ann Sheridan, Bruce Cabot, Alan Hale, Frank McHugh, Victor Jory, Guinn "Big Boy" Williams, Bobs Watson—Despite the fact that we played this one a little late, I doubt if we could have selected a better picture and Warners a better print with which to open our 1940-41 season. A double thanks to you, Warners. The fact that it is packed with action gives it added appeal to the men and since all of our patrons are males it pleased 100 per cent. The displays of daring and of courage, the barroom brawls of yesterday, the comedy contributed by Frank McHugh and Guinn "Big Boy" Williams, the pitiful death of Bobs Watson, the beauty of Olivia de Havilland, beautiful color and scenery, especially the sunrise scene with the Conestoga wagon (covered wagon) silhouetted against the sky, all contributed to make the picture entertainment plus. To all theatre owners who have as yet not played this one we say, if your patrons like to see something different book "Dodge City" immediately. Running time, 105 minutes. Played October 12.—J. A. Reynolds, Director of Education and Recreation, Prison Theatre, New Jersey State Prison, Trenton, N. J. Prison patronage.

GAMBLING ON THE HIGH SEAS: Wayne Morris, Jane Wyman, John Litel—Just another picture of gambling beyond the three mile limit. Running time, 57 minutes. Played September 24-26.—Joe Schindele, Avalon Theatre, Granite Falls, Minn. Small town patronage.

MONEY AND THE WOMAN: Brenda Marshall, Jeffrey Lynn—This is a first class lemon. Reverting back to the days when they had no stars that they figured could carry in insipid story, all in dialogue. I live in constant surprise at the ability of the public to spot a turkey. They sure had this one pegged. Deservedly so. The public refuses to be gulled any more and there is nothing you can do about it when dates have to be filled.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

NO TIME FOR COMEDY: James Stewart, Rosalind Russell, Charles Ruggles, Genevieve Tobin, Louise Beavers—Opinions were divided about fifty per cent on this picture. The dialogue is smart and witty with several amusing situations and a few good laughs. The picture starts out at a rapid pace, slows down considerably through the middle, but ends with a choice. You can cry, or laugh, or both. James Stewart is excellent, playing a natural part to perfection. Rosalind Russell is good; Charlie Ruggles is his usual amusing self, but honors go to Louise Beavers, the negro maid, who furnishes most of the laughs, and comes close to stealing the picture. Due to the fact that people in small towns do not have the opportunity to see good stage plays, such as this, makes it difficult for them to enjoy it. Hence, "No Time for Comedy" will not break any records in small towns in spite of the fact that the picture has merit. Running time, 93 minutes. Played October 6-8.—Mrs. W. A. Wight, Rex Theatre, Konawa, Okla. Small town and rural patronage.

ROARING TWENTIES, THE: James Cagney, Priscilla Lane, Humphrey Bogart, Jeffrey Lynn, Gladys George—Played this mid-week on our sixth anniversary to above average business. Grossed about one third that we did with "G-Men." Cagney played his part extremely well.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

SEA HAWK, THE: Errol Flynn, Brenda Marshall, Alan Hale, Claude Rains, Flora Robson, Una O'Connor—This picutre of the days of derring do did not fare so well at the box office but I still say that it is a creditable production of the old perennial. Action, good acting, good direction. But it may be that the curse of historical pictures still pursues it. It is rough and brutal in many scenes but that was true of the galley slave days under the Spanish regime so history tells us.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

SEA HAWK, THE: Errol Flynn, Brenda Marshall, Flora Robson, Claude Rains, Alan Hale, Una O'Connor—If your patrons like action, thrills and excitement, this is the proper dish to serve them. The story is unimportant. Its merit is solely on the spectacular scenes and loud, boisterous action. It moves along rapidly, holds interest and leaves patrons entirely satisfied. We did above average mid-week business on this, and it should click in any small town. Running time, 122 minutes. Played September 25-26.—Mrs. W. A. Wight, Rex Theatre, Konawa, Okla. Small town and rural patronage.

SUBMARINE D-1: George Brent, Pat O'Brien, Wayne Morris, Frank McHugh, Doris Watson—A real man's action picture with a slight love story running through the picture. Everyone enjoyed this one. Played September 7-8.—Ernest Henley, Prison Theatre, Florida State Prison, Raiford, Fla. Prison patronage.

VIRGINIA CITY: Errol Flynn, Miriam Hopkins, Randolph Scott, Alan Hale, Humphrey Bogart—A super Civil War picture. If Randolph Scott had not been a Southerner, it would have been his picture all the way. Naturally, he had to lose the war. Good business and a good picture as most of Warners go. Running time, 120 minutes. Played September 8-9.—Felix H. Tisdale, Ga-Ana Theatre, Georgiana, Ala. Small town patronage.

VIRGINIA CITY: Errol Flynn, Miriam Hopkins, Randolph Scott, Humphrey Bogart, Alan Hale—A very fine picture that closed our sixth anniversary. Miss Rita Rirord, our town outstanding juvenile critic, gave this picture three stars in her school paper. We mailed many of our souvenir programs to you and hope that we hear from you. Congratulations to Quigley Publishing Company on their 25th anniversary.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

Miscellaneous

SKY DEVILS (reissue): Spencer Tracy, William Boyd—The office handling this tried to induce me to play this for some time. Finally I dated it and it gave a good Sunday and Monday business, about the best in quite a while, and what's equally important it more than pleased. The picture is mostly on the laugh side. The thrills also have a fun angle so don't hesitate to book and advertise it.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

TUMBLEWEEDS: Astor, (reissue): William S. Hart—If you haven't played this reissue and have a spot on Bargain Night or double feature program where you can use it, you can play it to good advantage. If you do use it, go to extremes in explaining just exactly what it is and the people will appreciate "Tumbleweeds." Mr. Hart's talk at first of the picture is really good. I received fine print.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. General patronage.

WILD INNOCENCE: Wendy Munro, Brian Abbott—The hero in this is a boxing kangaroo and if you get the chance, book it especially if you double bill. The picture has a circus background and there is considerable action in it. It is worth booking from the novelty angle. This was doubled with "Three Cheers for the Irish" and I credit this with part of the better than average draw that this program gave.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

SCREEN SNAPSHOTS, NO. 9: Ken Murray—It seems as if Columbia is running out of material for their Snapshots. Maybe that's why they are using old time scenes with the resultant poor photography. Running time, 11 minutes.—Joe Schindele, Avalon Theatre, Granite Falls, Minn. Small town patronage.

Twentieth Century-Fox

ACQUITTED BY THE SEA: Believe It Or Not—Ripley—This is a very good one reeler in which Robert Ripley appears and tells of a strange case of an innocent man sent to jail for another man's crime. Ripley is seen in the opening and later is heard during the action of the plot. Running time, 20 minutes.—E. M. Freiburger, Paramount Theatre, Dewey, Okla. Small town patronage.

ISLES OF THE EAST: Magic Carpet Series—A yellow-tinted scenic of Bali that makes use of many of the same old stock shots or at least they look it. It is O. K. as a filler. Running time, 10 minutes—W. Varick Nevins, III, Alfred Co-Op Theatre, Alfred, N. Y. Small college town and rural patronage.

LABOR SAVERS: Lew Lehr Dribble Puss Parade—Very good. Running time, nine minutes.—Ray Peacock, Onalaska Theatre, Onalaska, Wash. Loggers and mill workers patronage.

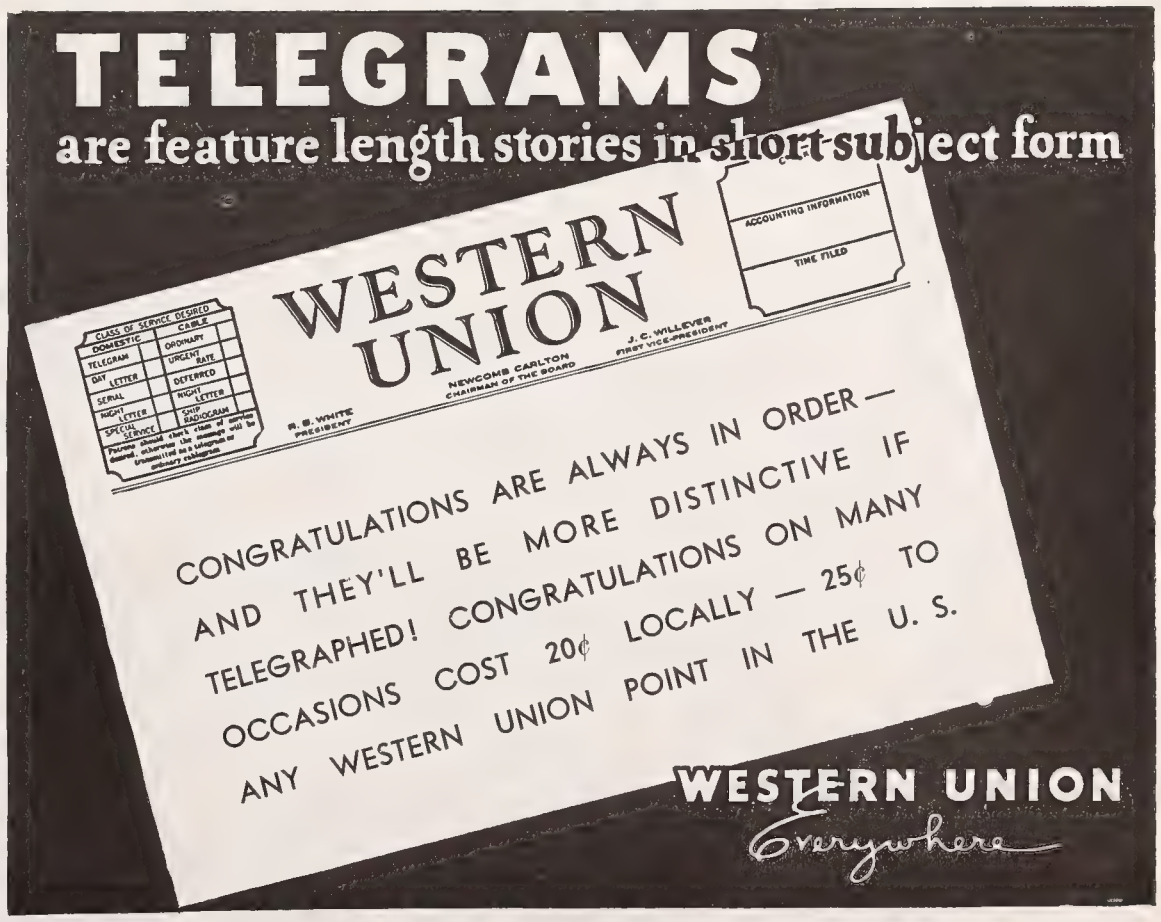
Ticket Brokers Agree To 75 Cent Maximum

James F. Reilly, executive secretary of the League of New York Theatres, producers' organization, said Monday that all the city's 43 accredited ticket brokers had signed an agreement limiting their commissions to a maximum of 75 cents on each theatre ticket they sell.



The state law fixes the maximum surcharge on theatre and other amusement tickets at 75 cents, but William A. Hyman, attorney for the brokers, said the agreement was signed under protest because the League is imposing a three-cent tax on the brokers for each ticket sold. This tax is to finance the expense of the Theatre Ticket Code Authority Board, comprising members of the League and Actors Equity Association. Mr. Hyman said that there need be no enforcement board other than a city agency to see that the provisions of the ticket code are carried out. He said the brokers did not object to the 75-cent maximum.

IN COURTS

The stockholder's suit brought by Arnold Herrman against Loew's, Inc., scheduled for hearing in Wilmington, Del., last week in New Castle County chancery court has been continued, with a date for hearing to be set later.

Mr. Herrman filed suit on February 28, 1939, charging the directors and executives of Loew's with conspiracy and fraud in the formation of Twentieth Century Pictures, Inc., now Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation, at expense of Loew's stockholders. The plaintiff asked preliminary injunction restraining defendants from disposing of stock of Twentieth Century until further notice of the Chancellor, and that a writ of sequestration be issued for the sequestering and seizing all stock of Loew's, Inc., until further determination of the suit.

In the bill of complaint, filed by Richardson Dilworth, representing the Towers Theatre Company of Camden, it is claimed that Mr. Ellis bought the Towers in June, 1939, at a sheriff sale for $64,000 and spent $124,000 to remodel the house solely on the verbal promise of Edgar Moss, Twentieth Century-Fox district manager in Philadelphia, that he would be able to buy all of the company's pictures rejected by Joseph Varbalow of the Savar in Camden. MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE

An international association of showmen meeting weekly in MOTION PICTURE HERALD for mutual aid and progress

A-MIKE VOGEL, Chairman and Editor GERTRUDE MERRIAM, Associate Editor

AGAIN, THE "STARS"

Well, in the manner of the late Will Rogers, "all we know is what we read in the papers" and the papers say that, with the sanction of all concerned, the "stars" are coming back to Broadway. Four years back, the major company ad heads, disturbed by the growing influence of critic "star" ratings, agreed to discontinue advertising mention of such ratings on pictures playing affiliated theatres. It seems now that someone busted right out of the corral. At this writing, the rest of the companies threaten to follow.

Let cool heads prevail. The industry has enough headaches without encouraging this additional menace to the grosses. Breakdown of the "gentlemen's agreement" implies nothing less than a willingness to empower individual reviewers with an unwarranted authority in determining a picture's fate at the boxoffice.

IN A POSITION TO DO SO

Speaking before a recent meeting of the A.M.P.A., Harry Brandt called for more exploitation attention to subsequent-run engagements. The exhibitor-head urged that exploiteers familiar with the problems of the smaller theatre be assigned to keep campaigns alive when pictures reach the lesser situations.

Since this corner has long advocated the boxoffice benefits to be had in subsequent-run promotion, Mr. Brandt's valued endorsement is appreciated. He should not let the matter rest.

In line with his obvious interest in the industry's welfare, the circuit-head might emphasize the undoubted soundness of his claims by organizing comprehensive campaigns among the "subsequents" of the Brandt theatres.

TOWARD COMMUNITY PROGRESS

Importance of the weekly theatre newspaper is notably enhanced through the "Theatrical and Shopping Guide" sponsored by Alvin Sloan and Clifton E. Smith, heads of the St. Cloud Amusement Company, whose activities are discussed by George Schutz in the October Better Theatres.

Circulated in three editions in the circuit's nine communities, the Guide is welcomed by local merchants who find it an invaluable advertising medium. The reason: a total distribution of over 35,000 copies, delivered house-to-house in the towns and mailed throughout the trading areas. Printing and mailing costs are more than covered by advertising revenues, with each theatre charged for space at regular rates.

Here is another instance of theatremen's initiative in filling a want made by inadequate newspaper facilities. Introduction of the shopping news service gives the publication further value in stimulating a community commerce that can mean no little to the circuit's grosses.

CHUCK SHANNON STEPS UP

The selection by Harry Kalmine of Chuck Shannon to manage Warners' New Whitehall theatre, Pittsburgh, marks another milestone in the steady progress of this up-and-coming young theatreman. Starting from scratch with the Kalmine organization, and not so many years ago, Shannon has been doing a commendable job to bring him into the brighter spotlight.

In forwarding the glad tidings, Chuck is kind enough to give some of the credit to his participation in Round Table activities and his success in the Quigley Awards.

Congratulations are distinctly in order. It couldn't happen to a nicer guy.

TO THE CARTOONISTS

With the staff giggling appreciatively over the latest batch of comicalities contributed by our Round Table cartoonists, this would be as good a time as any to bow to Glenn Franke and Milt Rosenfeld for their efforts in depicting the lighter moments of the daily grind. It is something less than a cinch to dig up material that clicks consistently, and members will agree with us that the boys have done more than an adequate job.

Since our "Lobby Laff" department is open to all, contributions are invited from others who feel the urge. Lack of drawing abiilty is of lesser importance than the idea itself. The artists declare themselves as willing to follow through.

FOOTBALL MOVES IN ON "ROCKNE" TIEINS

Managers Hook Dates to Schools and Leading Games; College Alumni Cooperates

In the wake of the excellent national promotion by Warner Brothers at South Bend as to be expected, a raft of good exploitations from various sectors has been received, wherein the Round Tablers have moved in on all sides to promote their dates on "Knute Rockne." In Madison, Wisconsin, for instance, Ed Benjii at the Capitol, started with a special advance showing a week ahead with the guests of honor, Governor Heil, Mayor Law of Madison, Harry Stuldreyher, one of the Notre Dame famed "Four Horsemen" and coach of University of Wisconsin team. With him was the college football squad, plus the 100-piece University band. Novelty score cards for the date were used to cover a college game on the afternoon of the preview.

The exploitation featured blowups of O'Brien and "Rockne" placed on colored showcards and planted around the best spots in town. Two days ahead, 11 men in football togs back-bannered with theatre signs made the downtown area. Benjii also promoted a number of new model cars properly bannered and led by loudspeaker truck. Civic cooperation was obtained with a proclamation from the Mayor for a "Knute Rockne" week which was blown up and planted in the lobby. Widely distributed was a 26-page book in magazine form published by the Round Tabler, containing the story of the picture, with cost of printing underwritten by outside advertising.

Unterfort Hooks Up Broadcast

In Syracuse, Harry Unterfort struck on a unique idea for a street ballyhoo for the date at Keith's, by promoting bannered milk wagon and having it pulled about town by boys in football uniforms. Another promotion was a sound truck playing records of Notre Dame songs and a locker room talk by the late Knute Rockne. The truck was put to further use in front of the theatre on the Saturday of the Syracuse-N. Y. U. game, a radio connection broadcasting a play-by-play account.

Radio tieins were numerous including program by the local Holy Name Society which put on a tribute to the late coach. Another broadcast featured the former cheer leader of Notre Dame recounting Rockne incidents during his time at the school.

MacEachron Arranges Tribute

Football stuff was prominent in J. R. MacEachron's campaign at the Paramount, in Jackson, Tenn., the Malcoman promoting announcements at the local stadium in advance, first time he reports that a commercial had been allowed at the football field.

Mac had the cheer leader at the local high school games announcing the picture during one of the pep meetings and planted theatre banners in the school parade that followed. At a recent game, he also arranged to have a tribute paid to the late coach while all stood at attention while the band played the Notre Dame victory march. Newspaper shots of the proceedings were planted prominently and radio cooperation featured with praise of the picture on a leading sports review program.

Notaro Awards Trophy

Pat Notaro got a lot of attention for his date at the Columbia, in Sharon, Pa., by awarding a trophy to the winner of a leading high school game. The award was announced on the radio at Chamber of Commerce meetings and over the inter-class p. a. system at both high schools. Between halves of the game, the gathering paid tribute to Rockne with the high school bands playing appropriate college songs. Presentation of the trophy by Pat in person was featured in the school press.

In Philadelphia, a Knute Rockne dinner was promoted by the Warner men timed to coincide with the opening in South Bend. One of the papers was tied in to get out a special edition which included photo of the guests at the dinner, papers being distributed at all the downtown theatres. Here also the Knute Rockne week was proclaimed.

Highlight of Marty Goldenberg's campaign at the Warner State, in Philadelphia, was a memorial game between two leading Catholic high schools. As a follow-up, Goldenberg announced midget "Rock" cups for football pumping and passing contests.

"LET'S HEAR FROM YOU"

PROMOTE STATEWIDE "ROCKNE" TIE UP

For distribution to Warner Ohio theatres on "Knute Rockne," Ray Brown, district manager, and Glenn Nelson, of the Harris, in Findlay, Ohio, promoted local oil company for thousands of imprinted megaphones. Managers used the megaphones to cover main local games previous to their openings of the picture.

To carry the promotion further, filling stations were contacted to use theatre posters and other display material, all carrying theatre names and date.

Local Girl Featured By Rosy on "Caution"

To attract his kid patronage to "Captain Caution," Morris Rosenthal at the Majestic, in Bridgeport, Conn., distributed lucky numbered cards which entitled holders to a free admission if their corresponding number was listed on lobby easel.

Since Louise Platt, appearing in the picture, had been feted by the Bridgeport Press last year, Rosenthal capitalized on this by working it up into a feature story.

Army Equipment Colors Premiere

To familiarize Washingtonians with the equipment used in the United States Army today, the opening of the Vitaphone short "Service with the Colors" at the Earle, was distinguished by a display in front of the theatre arranged by Frank La Falce, Warner zone ad chief, with the aid of Bill Ewing and Rick La Falce.

Brought on from the nearby Arlington Cantonment, the exhibit included machine guns, infantry mortar, anti-tank guns, walkie-talkie radio sets, field switchboard and telephones, telegraph sets, field wire on reel cart, linesmen's equipment, soldier's pack, recruiting truck, etc. Soldiers were posted at each piece to answer all questions.

Prominent officials and officers of the Department of War on hand to attend the showing also witnessed the campaign proceedings which were further featured by a parade of National Guardsmen and a band concert out front by the 260th Artillery Band. For added attentions, La Falce wangled two giant army searchlights to operate during the evening.

Barcroft Stresses Teasers On "Hired Wife" Campaign

Teaser stunt proved effective for Johnny Barcroft for date on "Hired Wife" at the RKO Palace in Columbus, when his staff planted stickers around town reading: "Have you heard about The Hired Wife?" Taxi fleet was supplied with bumper strips with same copy and commentators on WCOL, WBNS and WHKC were furnished with feature material for their Hollywood programs. Telephone gag consisted of a PBX board which was placed in a five and ten window, telephone operator faked calls to local folks and one-way conversation was carried to sidewalks by speaker. World Series guessing contest was held with leading men's furnishing store for guest tickets and a special screening for women only created much comment.

Classified ad was run in all papers on "Brigham Young" with the following copy "Persons married the most times wanted to see," etc., etc. Local high school libraries were supplied with still setpieces and newspapers used feature stories in advance and during run.

Shaffer Gets Editorial On "Ramparts We Watch"

On opening day of "Ramparts We Watch" at the Dixie Theatre, in Staunton, Va., Frank Shaffer noticed that the AP used a story in the Washington and Richmond papers to the effect that the Pennsylvania censors had refused to allow the showing. Immediately contacting the owner and editor of the Staunton daily, the theatreman offered to screen for him and some friends the Nazi portion of the film. Also present was the editor and commanding officer of the Staunton Military Academy. Result was an editorial in the daily newspaper highly recommending the picture and the entire cadet body of the Academy attended opening day.

Parades, Contests Lead 'Band' Ideas

An opening night parade headed by the local Sea Scout Band and followed by ushers carrying theatre banners topped Charlie Taylor's campaign for "Strike Up the Band" at Shea's Buffalo. Stopping at the theatre, the band gave a half hour concert of hits from the picture. For further attention from high school youngsters in that sector, all schools in western New York were covered with heralds, special posters used for bulletin boards at the school's publicity and advertising planted in their publications. On a radio program sponsored by local furniture store, Taylor planted contest offering cash and tickets for the best list of words made up of the title.

Reported as the first time the stunt was used in Sheboygan, Wis., put over for the date at the Sheboygan, was the jumbo greetings postcard made up by Marlowe Conner and forwarded to Mickey Rooney and Judy Garland two weeks ahead. Paper ran three column photo of theatre cashier and postmaster putting the card in the mail. Studio forwarded a photo showing the stars acknowledging the card which was used to advertise the subsequent run at the Warner Rex in the same situation.

Dancing Teachers Cooperate

In Houston, Texas, for the date at Loew's, Francis Deering worked with Homer McCallum to use the La Conga sequence in the picture for a dance school and night club tieup, spotlighted prominently by newspapers. The city's best known dancing teacher with her staff of instructors was tied in to give lessons in the dance at the night club, with guest tickets to patrons putting on the best exhibition. Judged by audience applause, the most skilled team also received silver loving cup.

A series of three-column co-ops hooked to a coloring contest was promoted for the date at Warners' Columbia, Portsmouth, Ohio, by Manager George Frazer. Leading department store ran outlined drawings of the stars in dance positions with merchandise and tickets to the best entries.

Contests Highlight Lamm's "Partners"

Scattered throughout the classified ad page of local paper were names of male leads who played opposite Ginger Rogers in various pictures and to those submitting correct list of names and titles, Louie Lamm at the Warner Palace, in Lorain, Ohio, offered guest tickets to see "Lucky Partners." In addition, local ballroom offered prizes in connection with a "Lucky Partners" waltz contest which was plugged throughout hall and in their newspaper ads. Guessing contest in five and ten consisted of pennies in jar with tickets to those guessing correct number.

For his street bally, Lamm used a stilt walker, who distributed envelopes containing promoted confections with copy: "You're lucky to get this delicious candy," etc. Jeweler, hairdresser and other merchants came through with appropriately tied in ads.

Brampton Fall Fair Featured By Campbell Theatre Display

Crowds from five to ten thousand are not to be had frequently in Brampton, Ontario, and with that many on hand to visit the city's recent Fall Fair, Manager Jack Campbell was all set with a booth at the show to advertise his Capitol Theatre and the coming attractions. Measuring nine feet long, by nine high and four wide, the booth was set right inside the doors of the main building, and decorated in keeping.

The background of decoration was in dark blue with theatre and other lettering in silver flitter to stand out against the bright lighting. Star and scene stills were included in the display and bordered by flittered stars for added effect. Prominently displayed was a large poster inviting visitors to register for the theatre's mailing list.

In attendance all day with members of his staff, Campbell supervised a number of activities to keep the folks coming. For the coming "Andy Hardy Meets Debutante," star photos of Mickey and Judy, stamped with theatre credits, were offered free, as were theatre calendars and pieces of old sound film. The latter brought a lot of questioning about film projection from interested visitors.

An added attractor proved to be a guessing contest wherein about 200 feet of old film was stuffed into a huge glass druggist's jar, and the folks invited to guess the approximate length of the film. As prizes Jack offered a few guests tickets to the Hardy picture. Extra color was furnished with music via a promoted radio.

Shannon Reports Recent Doings

Taking advantage of the natural tieup with makers of "Turnabout" hosiery, Chuck Shannon, for that picture's opening at the Boulevard, in Pittsburgh, planted a limerick jingle contest in which promoted pairs of hosiery were offered as prizes. Local dealers supplied the theatreman with posters, display racks, and stockings for lobby setup. Runnersup received guest tickets.

Building a circus wagon as advance for "Untamed," Shannon planted a small kitten in the center of the truck on beds of straw. On top of the wagon were signs: "Beware, Untamed Animal," "Do not feed the animals," etc., on the sides were sniped picture credits and playdates. Truck itself was brilliantly painted to attract.

Harris, founder of that circuit, Earle Bailey, manager of the Harris-Warren, in Warren, Pa., solicited congratulatory wires from the stars in Hollywood which were used to good advantage in newspapers and otherwise. Lobby easel was erected for the occasion which featured star wires and those of localites, including the Mayor and head of Chamber of Commerce.

Since Bailey was playing "Lillian Russell" during the anniversary week, special float was built appropriately bannered with copy plugging both events. Birthday cake which was promoted for opening night was cut by the Mayor and distributed to patrons. Front of theatre was dressed in gala attire with colored pennants and lights, flag and light poles around town were placarded and special bike parade was held with prizes awarded for the best decorated.

In addition another contest angle was brought in through the distribution of "Buck Benny" fake dollar bills, each of which bore a number. Prizes were on display in theatre foyer ahead and plugged over the air.

(Right) Scrambled title letters carried by boys was street stunt used by M. E. Ferrera for "Maryland" run at the Dixie, in Abbeyville, La. When crowds gathered, boys rearranged themselves to spell out the title correctly.

Four-City Drive Aids "Ramparts"

Featured with a smart co-op page in each of the situations was the four-city "Ramparts" campaign put on by the RKO theatre managers in Westchester County, New York, working with Bucky Harris, division publicity head. Taking part were Managers John Hearns, Baker Shelton, Joe Di Lorenzo and Charles Oelrich, representing, respectively, Yonkers, Mt. Vernon, New Rochelle and White Plains.

The co-op pages were headed with banners with title and theatre, centered, and bordered with appropriate copy, one side tieing in the date with the conscription registering. The other copy hooked the merchants' ads to the picture by noting that the stores represented saluted the local young men who registered "to take their place at the ramparts to safeguard the freedom of our institutions."

In Yonkers, in addition, a private showing to school and civic heads brought a letter to superintendents in secondary schools praising the picture and stressing its effectiveness in connection with school work. This was tied in with an afternoon show for the schools put on after the pupils were dismissed.

Photos of leading citizens and their opinions of the picture helped to build the White Plains campaign and in other situations, the inquiring reporter slant was worked by querying patrons in the theatre lobbies on their opinions of the picture.

"LET'S HEAR FROM YOU"

Anti-Aircraft Unit Aids Osterstock on "Wyoming"

Marking the first time in years that the paper had used theatre copy, Fred Osterstock, State, Easton, Pa., planted art and stories in the local Morning Free Press as one of the highlights of his "Wyoming" campaign. Osterstock also arranged for a National Guard anti-aircraft unit to march to the theatre opening night escorted by a 40-piece American Legion band. Impressive ceremonies were staged both inside and outside the theatre, building up a great deal of interest in the engagement.

"LET'S HEAR FROM YOU"

Trophy Displays Aid "Pushers"

To gain attention for "Leather Pushers" at Warners' Leader, Philadelphia, Marty Annisman sent personal letters to all Athletic Associations calling attention to the opening. Boxing Association loaned their trophies for display and Gimbel's department store cooperated with a showcase in which trophies were placed for public approval. Local dailies were contacted and pledged their support and a unique 40 by 60 was used for lobby.

"LET'S HEAR FROM YOU"

Excuse It, Please

Inadvertently, in the issue of October 12, Ralph Pollock was listed as manager of the Million Dollar Theatre, in Chicago. The designation of the house should have been Los Angeles, of course.

Kiddet Klub Gets Buildup by May

To start his Kiddet Klub at Schine's Paris, in Paris, Ky., off with a bang, Round Tabler Ed May arranged for a parade on Saturday morning which included Guard of Honor and Color from local military academy, Boy Scouts and members of other juvenile organizations. Brief patriotic program was held at the theatre with the Scout Troops presenting colors on stage in a unit. Highlight was the 10-minute presentation executed by cadets in uniform and dramatized by the evolution of our flag from its inception to the present day. Numerous games were played, with promoted prizes for all.

Cooperation was secured by May from city and county school officials to excuse students earlier for a special showing of "Tom Brown's School Days." Photos of the children attending en masse were planted in papers. Display cards with action shots were planted on bulletin boards in all schools and picture plugged by teachers.

Racing Atmosphere Used By Cohn for "Maryland"

Obtaining a goodly supply of betting tickets, Ben Cohn, for date on "Maryland" at the Frolic, in Chicago, placed them in envelopes with "Today's best bet" stamped on them; also attached to each ticket was a small novelty aluminum horse. Patrons upon entering theatre were given the envelopes by an attendant seated behind a table constructed as a betting window. Wall sheets with the names of horses and jockeys, numbers and weight were mounted and strung along wire above table. One sheet on "Maryland" was placed in center and a compo board banner with copy "Maryland Racing Results" was planted above all.

Attendant at table called off phony races as to position of horses at start, quarter, half, stretch and finish, giving repeated plugs for the picture. Public address speakers were placed at both ends of theatre canopy and these descriptions of horses running attracted considerable attention.

EXPLOITATION BRIEFS FROM A-FIELD

ROLL DICE, CUT CARDS ON "LUCKY PARTNERS"

Set out a week ahead at the Chief, Pueblo, Colo., on "Lucky Partners" by Pat Patchen, was a table, upon which was set a pair of dice and a deck of cards. Poster copy set behind invited couples only to try and cut the same card, or throw the same number on the dice for guest tickets, one card or dice to each entrant. Pretty girl in costume was in charge.

Another "lucky" distributed around town was an oblong card, each carrying drawing of a pair of dice, with different combinations turned up. Girls and boys were supposed to match combinations for admissions, the lucky numbers being shorted to keep the percentage within control.

"Don't Mind the Noise—This is Boom Town!" was bannered on a large truck that traversed the streets of Greencastle, Ind., and environs as part of Andy Browning's campaign for the multi-star film's showing at the Voncastle. The "noise" referred to was supplied by three young men enthusiastically pounding on bass drums inside the truck.

Eight lads each wearing back banners with one letter of "Boom Town" title, toured downtown streets of Waterbury, Conn., as part of Ed Fitzpatrick's campaign for that picture. Jumbling the letters, boys would wait until a crowd gathered and then reassemble themselves until title was spelled out correctly.

Tying up with Refiners Filling stations in Rochester, Les Pollock of "Boom Town" at Loew's Theatre, secured their cooperation to the extent of distribution of fan photos to those making purchases of fifty cents or over. In addition all trucks were appropriately bannered, and A-boards were planted in front of all filling stations.

FREE FIREWOOD OFFER ADVERTISES NEW SEATS

To call attention to the installation of new seats at Warners' Prince, Ambridge, Pa., Lige Brien offered the crates in which the seats were delivered, as firewood, without charge. The offer, which hit page one in the local daily brought plenty of customers, and also served to publicize what Brien was after—the theatre's new equipment. In addition, the story acted as a "sales ad" for Lige, since it mentioned that the old seats were for sale.

Tieup with local furniture store for "Dance, Girl, Dance" as arranged by Bill Morton for that date at the RKO Albee, in Providence brought guest tickets to those whose names appeared in the marriage license lists for that day, if they applied for the ducats at the cooperating store. Fur shop featured an ad showing Lucille Ball wearing a jacket similar to one available at that store; chain drug store imprinted their menus and extra plugs were gotten over radio since Phillip Morris' Johnny was in town and making a personal in the lobby.

Realistic is the word for the "Boom Town" stunt put over by Manager Roberts, Cover, Ft. Morgan, Col. A miniature oil derrick that actually pumped oil was placed in front of the house and attracted widespread attention.

A newspaper contest, asking readers to give their opinion on how to make Wellsboro a "Boom Town," was one of the features of the campaign for the multi-star film put over by Larry Woodin, Arcadia, in the Pennsylvania situation.

Street bally for "Last Alarm" as arranged by Ed Kidwell at Schine's Kent, in Kent, Ohio, consisted of town's fire truck being driven around town during busy Saturday afternoon with three-sheet on side plugging the attraction.

In connection with "Rhythm on the River" at the Paris, Paris, Ky., Round Tabler Ed May ran a contest in his local paper whereby guest tickets were awarded in an "Oscar Levant Song Title Contest" to those submitting largest list of songs containing the word river. Contest blank required that entries be mailed to Oscar Levant care of the paper.

Breaking opening day was the double truck of co-op ads promoted by Fred C. Doughty for "Boom Town" at the Lyric Theatre, in Winchester, Ind., carrying advertisements for Boom Town Bargain Days, in addition cooperating stores distributed tinted fan photos with each purchase. Newspapers came through with readers and art work ahead and during run, and electrical supply store wrapped purchases in imprinted bags reading: "When your light bulbs go Boom," etc., etc.

Folks in Aberdeen, S. D., were treated to the sight of a ghost walking about town carrying sandwich sign plugging picture as part of Byron McElligott's campaign on "The Ghost Walkers." While for "Boys from Syracuse," Byron offered guest tickets to those who were born in Syracuse.

For his stage attraction, "The Gay Nineties," ad man Frank Miller at the Morgan Theatre, in Morgantown, West. Va., dressed the doorman as a ringmaster and stationed him out front as a barker. Tieup with local riding academy brought use of an old sulky in which one of the girls from the show was ridden about town. In addition, free drinks were dispensed as were promoted cigarettes.

PATRONS DRAW CARDS FOR "YUKON" TICKETS

Patrons who felt themselves lucky had a chance to see "Queen of the Yukon" for free at Schine's Temple, Cortland, N. Y., on a lobby idea contrived by Manager Gary Jaffa. On a large easel Jaffa arranged 50 playing cards, face down, and invited the folks to try and draw a queen.

The stunt proved a puller with the number of wins held down by a control of the cards containing the prize queens.

Six weeks ahead of opening of "Sea Hawk" at Warner's Hippodrome, in Cleveland, Eddie Miller created a lobby setpiece which featured an action background of cutout of Errol Flynn. Scene stills were planted in discs placed in center of compo ship wheels, nautical effect being stressed in all.

For the Eastern Shore premiere of "Boom Town" at the Schine Arcade, in Salisbury, Maryland, Bob Daly dressed his front for the occasion with giant cutout letters of the title spelled out across marquee. Entire boxoffice was covered with compo on which were cutouts of Colbert and Gable.

Street bally used by Bob Fulton at the Paramount, in Waterloo, Iowa, in advance and during run of "Comin' Round the Mountain," consisted of staff ushers dressed in hill billy outfits with fake beards and shot guns, who paraded streets carrying back banners with picture copy and playdates. Wherever crowds gathered, boys engaged in an animated discussion on the opening.

Also engaging in a street bally was J. R. MacEachron at the Paramount, in Jackson, Tenn., who, for "Return of Frank James" dressed three of his ushers for the occasion, one as the bandit and the others as sheriffs, who walked behind James carrying guns. All three wore back copy which called attention to the date's opening, cast, etc.

TAYLOR FEATURES "McGINTY" PARADE

Put on the night before with the addition of red highway flares and repeated on opening day after school, a political parade helped to line the streets of Dubois, Pa., for Bob Taylor's date on "Great McGinty" at the Harris-Dubois.

With the Mayor's permission that allowed Taylor to tie up a bit of traffic, the parade, led by a car with p. a. system, made the town. Boys carried theatre banners and regulation political displays.

THE CHART

Productions are listed under distributors. Features in work or completed for release later than the date of this issue are listed as "Coming Attractions." Asterisk (*) after title denotes first appearance.

NOTE: The totals for running time are the official figures.

When a production is reviewed the running time is as given by the studio and this is denoted by an asterisk (*) preceding the number. State or city censorship deletions or repairs to the film may cause variations.
